THE MAIL ROBBERS.—On Thursday last Dr. John F. Bradee, charged with robbing the United States Mail, was discharged from Jail by the Hon. Judge Irwin, on bail. Dr. B. becoming bound in $60,000, and twenty-two of his neighbors from Uniontown in the same amount for his appearance to stand his trial.

DR. ELDRIDGE.—The jury to try this individual for the third time was not empanelled on Monday, as was anticipated. The trial was yesterday laid over until next Monday week.

TON MOB.—We alluded, in our last, to a that a mob in Dayton had attacked a occupied by some blacks, and that in the one white man was killed and three more ed, one mortally. The mob commenced sion on Saturday evening the 24th ultimo, view of preventing Ex-Senator Morris elivering a lecture on slavery, which they plished, and for two or three days kept the in an uproar, assailing houses, individuals, On Sabbath evening, the mob was preven- om doing any damage to the Abolitionists eld a concert of prayer, at Dr. Jewett's, by resence of the Mayor and civil officers. gain, the next day:

The truth in regard to the stabbing of the e man is simply this: A woman of ill fame, st white, came a short time ago to Dayton, was living in a colored family in the S. E. of the town. The mob burned the house of the colored man which the fracus took place.

Price, who killed McClary, with two or three ers, have been arrested and committed to . Strange that we hear nothing of any of mob being arrested, the very beginners and igators of all this difficulty.

We refer the reader's attention to the long article on our last page, from the London Globe. In the first place, it affords the best account of the British Chartists,—who they are and what they want,—that we have seen in the papers for more than one year, tho' allusions are perpetually making to them. They are the bone and sinew of the nation, calling for a modification of that system of policy which makes the poor man work hard and starve himself, to support an old rotten aristocracy.

In the second place, it is an inimitable bore on the inconsistencies of some Abolitionists.—The British nation deserve credit for their efforts to suppress that most abominable of all traffics, the slave trade. But at the same time, how inconsistent and discreditable to them, that they have a system of oppression, at home, which takes from the great mass of the people, almost every thing but personal liberty, and greatly abridges that.

There are some of our Episcopal Methodist brethren, so rampant upon the subject of Abolition, that you could scarcely steady one of them in a ten acre field; yet, they go the "whole hog" in sustaining a spiritual despotism, the tendency of which, is to reduce every thing, under its influence, to a perfect state of vassalage. Zion's Watchman is their organ,—a paper, which we consider, a burlesque on consistency.

And some Abolition editors have vilified and abused their brethren of the press, because they would not publish every thing, on their theme, which they dictated should be published, when they have been called, in turn, to open their columns to essays against spiritual despotism, were perfectly mum.

But we are not the apologist for slavery of any species. We go against oppression, either domestic, political or ecclesiastical, and in favor of universal emancipation, or rational and well defined liberty in Church and State. But these ridiculous inconsistencies ought to be burlesqued, and the article, under notice, certainly does it, so far as the British nation is concerned, in a forcible style.

FIRE.—A destructive fire recently occurred in Philadelphia, originating in the umbrella manufactures of Wright and Brothers, 125 Market street, above third, in which was destroyed, in goods alone, near 100,000 dollars. Two firemen, Rink and Douglass, lost their lives by a falling wall, and others were badly injured; one of whom, it is thought, will not recover. The Philadelphia Courier, of the 30th ultimo, says, in relation to the deceased:

"Mr Douglass was universally esteemed in his business and social relations. His employers contemplated taking him into partnership, and consider his loss irreparable. One of them purchased a lot at Laurel Hill, for his burial place: whereon the late Pennsylvania Engine Company, to which he belonged, propose to erect an appropriate monument. He was also a member of the Washington Greys, who paraded at his funeral and awarded the honors of war to his remains.

"Although of quite a lively disposition, Mr. D. had long entertained a strange presentiment that he would die an unnatural death, and his effects were found directed expressly with a view to disposition, in case of accidental death. He was ever known as one of the most daring and effective firemen, though of slight and delicate frame.

"His dearest surviving friend, with whom all must sympathise, was an affianced bride, of high respectability, from whom he had separated but a short hour previous to his lamented death, full of hope and pleasure, alas! how cruel to be thus baffled and destroyed.

"The funeral of Mr. Rink, was attended by one of the most numerous retinues of his friends, firemen and fellow-citizens, that ever gathered on a similar occasion in this city. He too, was much respected, and a "widow's son." His bereaved parent and other kindred, have the consolation of the entire public for their unexpected bereavement. The firemen have determined to erect a monument over his remains, which now repose in the Monument Cemetery on Broad street."

We received a communication some weeks since from a friend in Highland county, Ohio, which breathes a good spirit, contains some fine sentiment, and is respectfully submitted to our discretion. We have heretofore intended its publication so soon as we could find time to prepare it for the press, but up to this period we have not found leisure for that purpose: And the intense application that we have given to our editorial duties for the past seven or eight weeks has so affected our health, that we are afraid we shall not be able to attend to it at all. Our friend did not take pains enough with his communication. He states that it was written in about three hours, and it would make between three and four columns of our paper. If he will write again, be brief, and prepare his MSS. with the ability that we are satisfied, from what he has written, he possesses, we shall be glad to number him with our correspondents.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

A bill was introduced into the House on the 30th ult., to incorporate the first Methodist Protestant Church of Steubenville, and read the first time.

On a resolution, in the House, 1st inst., to reduce the wages of members from three to two dollars per day, it was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 36 to 29,—Mr. Watkins of our county, voting in the affirmative and Mr. Pollock in the negative.

The House is laboring with assiduity and it is said with considerable proficiency, on the Bank bill.

The correspondent of the McConnelsville Standard, says, the camp-meeting bill is laid on the Senate's table, there to remain until awakened, next fall, by the Whig thunders.

It is reported and believed that Dr. Flowers, formerly of Brownsville, late of Rehobeth, Perry county, Ohio, has joined the M. E. Church.—Some of the brethren of that church used to consider him as discreditable to our cause when among us; it is to be hoped that they will now entertain a better opinion of the Dr., as circumstances alter cases.

We have received the fifth number of the Christian World. It states the "Emancipator" does not "even breathe an apology" for its ungentlemanly conduct. Strange, that so soon as a man turns to be a Philanthropist, there is no living in peace with him, nor getting justice out of him.

In relation to the leading article on the first page on "Theological Colleges," we believe the arguments there used are correct and forcible.—But still we favor an institution of this kind, not for the purpose of manufacturing preachers, but in order to give those who have been made such by the endowments of nature and of the Holy Spirit, an opportunity to prepare for greater usefulness. And, thus far, if we understand our intelligent correspondent, he would agree with us. We would, however, apprise our friend of the fact, that, although his arguments lie with resistless force against such systems as Episcopal Methodism, where the clergy bear rule, and where a dandy sycophant can shield himself behind the episcopacy, from public opinion, and can be imposed upon the people at will; yet, in a system like ours, where the laity have so important a part, in controling the affairs of the church, they are not so applicable.

We consider our Pittsburgh Conference as fairly organized under the principles of our polity,—and these principles as producing their legitimate results. Their tendency, as found in the practicable operations of our system, is to drive from the itinerancy, all dandies, drones and loafers, and to encourage spiritual and useful men. If our correspondent could attend some two or three of our Annual Conferences, where the rights and claims of the laity are attended to, did he witness the solicitations of the delegates, from the circuits, for useful ministers, and could he see how those who were not useful were passed without invitation, we are of opinion that a new train of reflections would open to his mind, when he would see the tendency of lay-delegation to purify the church.

The following is the copy of a letter sent us:

"Mr. Editor: Please to stop the Western Recorder from coming to Canaan, Jefferson county, Indiana." J. SALYERS, O."

We have sent a paper to the above office, to Jeremiah Salyers, from the commencement, for which, as yet, we have received nothing. With the above note was sent two sheets of paper, containing nothing but the above, for which we were charged 37½ cents postage; the act was evidently designed to impose on us. Now, if Mr. Salyers is the author of this letter to us, which bears his name, or, if he had any participation in it, we have little doubt but there is better men than him in the State prison. We shall not stop his paper until he pays arrears, as per terms, and this 37½ cents postage, unless we should learn he is not worth this small bill. We are determined to collect it off of him if he be responsible. Will some of our friends in Indiana, give us information as to this fact? If he will now forward us FIVE DOLLARS we will discontinue.

YOUTH'S MAGAZINE AND JUVENILE HARP.—This is the title of a very neat, attractive little monthly of 24 pages each, published by Benj. F. Smith, at Pittsburgh, Pa., and dedicated to the interest of the youth. From the specimen before us, we should say the work is calculated to promote the object it proposes. The following is the plan on which it is proposed to conduct this work:

"Our plan contemplates a series of sketches under the following heads: Bible stories; short and interesting Sermons, and Addresses for the young; Religious and Missionary intelligence; pleasing dialogues of a moral and religious character; the Sabbath School; Parent's department; Teacher's Department; Natural History; Natural Science; Instructive Anecdotes; Poetry; &c. We shall also, furnish two pieces of music in each number, chiefly from the Juvenile works of Mason, Hastings, Ives, Webb, Day and others, composers of distinguished merit. Our means are ample—we have already secured the services of a choice circle of correspondents, from whom we expect much assistance. Arrangements are also being made to receive from Europe a number of their best periodicals and publications, from which the choicest extracts will be made.

TERMS.—One number of 24 pages, enclosed in a cover, will be published every month at 62½ cts; without a cover, 50 cts. per year, always in advance.

Subscriptions received at the Sabbath School Depository, Wood street, at the Book Store of A. Ingram, Jr., Market street, at the Methodist Book Store, Liberty street, and at the printing office, corner of Wood and Fourth streets.

T. L. Johnson, Agent for Pittsburgh and vicinity.

S. Brainard, publishing Agent, Cleveland.

B. F. SMITH, Publisher."

WESTERN FARMER.—We have received the January number of this agricultural paper. It is greatly improved under the management of the present proprietors, and should be in the hands of every farmer in the West. The Western Farmer is edited by E. J. Hopper and T. Affiec, and published at Cincinnati, Ohio, once a month, at one dollar per annum.

The article in this number "On a Plurality of Christian Sects," contains some forcible remarks. The author has promised us several more on the same subject.

Br. C. C. Chapman, of Adrian Mission, Michigan, reports sixty members as having attached themselves to the church in his field of labor.

The Board of the Baptist Convention will hold a meetiag, on the 17th instant, at Granville College, commencing at 6 o'clock.

CONGRESS.—This body is doing but little of importance to the nation, or of interest to the reader.

LOUISIANA.—Alexander Barrow, Esq., Whig, has been elected a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of Louisiana.

Several of the French papers declare "war is inevitable in the spring." Mercantile contracts are not made for a longer period.

There are two reason why we don't trust a man—one, because we don't know him; and the other, because we do.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: You made some remarks, not long since, about the remissness of our Annual Conference in letting off those, without censure, who had betrayed the confidence reposed in them, in not filling their engagements to those circuits to which they had been appointed. I have no doubt but circuits will continue to suffer every year so long as brethern will let their childish sympathies govern them in these matters. I have been a member of the Annual Conference, and from what I have noticed, some of the preachers make common cause with these delinquents, and a bustling clamor to defend them.—Now, all who take active part on such occasions, certainly let themselves down in my estimation. Nothing is more satisfactory evidence, to me, that a man is rotten at the core himself, than to see him habitually defending delinquents. It is an evidence that he is one of the cast, and that in defending his man, he is indirectly defending himself.

These remarks were elicited by reading the charge of Judge Barton, of Philadelphia, to the jury, in the case of Sarah Ann Davis who was convicted of the murder of Julia A. Jordan. He prefaces his charge with some general remarks on the cause of the prevalence of crime, which will forcibly apply to the prevalence of delinquencies among us. From these we give the following extract. A LAYMAN:

"Gentlemen of the Jury:

"Before reviewing the testimony which this case has furnished, I will avail myself of the present as an appropriate occasion to address to you a few remarks of a general character. The increase of murders, however appalling, is not in the least degree astonishing. It is idle to speculate about causes, when the cause is self-apparent: to dig the soil in search of reasons, when the reason lies upon the very surface. No intelligent man need or can hesitate an instant to say, that it is chargeable mainly to the criminal weakness of Jurors. By the mild and benevolent laws of Pennsylvania, one crime and one crime only—is punishable with death; that of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated murder.—Many good and wise men doubt the right of society to inflict, even for this last and worst of crimes, the punishment of death; and others, who entertain no such conscientious scruples, question the expediency of capital punishment. As I remarked upon a former occasion, "it may be that capital punishment is inexpedient; and, indeed, it is scarcely questionable that if the doom of the wilful murderer were the cell of a penitentiary for life, with no hope of pardon save from legislative enactment, the safety of society would be thereby greatly promoted;" but, while it is the law of the State, those jurors who, (having disavowed, before taking their seats in the jury box, such scruples, upon their solemn oaths or affirmations,) in the teeth of the most clear and conclusive proofs of a defendant's guilt, screen him from the penalties of his awful crime, are, I hesitate not to say, scarcely less culpable than the criminal himself. While his hands may have been stained with the blood of but one victim, they, by turning him loose again upon society, through mawkish sensibility and unmanly weakness, give him a license to commit more murders and tell every other assassin, almost in so many words, that, however foul his offence, he will experience no difficulty in securing an acquittal.—It is scarcely too strong language to say, that to all such renewed murders, they are very little short of accessaries before the fact.

"The columns of every day's gazette or journal are reeking with the revolting details of some attrocious murder; the hand of the assassin is busy alike in the crowded city and in the most lonely solitude; human life appears to be held almost as cheap as flesh in the butcher's shambles—but when the vigilance of police, or the voluntary efforts of private citizens, have ferretted out the assassin, and he is placed upon trial, it is but too often the sad and painful spectacle, to behold a jury, sworn to render faithful and impartial justice between the Commonwealth and the accused, straining every nerve, distorting every fact, and misinterpreting every proof, that the gibbet may become cheated of its due, and that a wretch, whose heart is black with guilt and whose hands are red with blood, may be screened from the consequences of his crime. While this deplorable state of things is permitted to continue, it is wholly impossible for any individual in the community to regard his life as for a moment safe. If laws are made only to be outraged with impunity—if the institution of trial by jury is to be perpetuated and perverted into a mere process for the protection of offenders,—it is better by far that the first should be all repealed, and the latter itself abolished."

TENDENCY OF THE WRITINGS OF BOZ.—One of the ablest reviews of the day, well says, of the writings of the author of "The Old Clock," that what he writes never raises a blush on the face of modesty. Boz is never vulgar. His humor is always quiet, but pure—there is no coarseness about it—and it may be said of all his productions, that they may well be perused at every fireside.

A perfect cure for the gout is the application of sal volatile rubbed with the hand on the gouty member.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From Bicknell's Reporter.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE NORTH AMERICA.

Important from China.

We are indebted to our New York friends, and particularly the Commercial Advertiser, the Times, American, Sun and Herald, for late European advices received at that port by the packet ship North America, in 22 days from Liverpool. The London dates are of the 6th and the Liverpool of the 7th. The chief intelligence is that which relates to China. We give the accounts below in all their details. The only fact, says the Commercial, about which there can be no question is, apparently that the Emperor's envoy who met Admiral Elliott at Pecheelee, had wit enough to effect a transfer of the theatre of negociation from Pekin, or its vicinity, to Canton; the very policy which we pointed out months ago, as that the Chinese government would be likely to pursue.

It will be seen that the results of the expedition, thus far, are not considered very brilliant or promising by the London editors.

Some of them, however, appear to consider the difficulties as settled, and attempt to raise a full shout of triumph. The London Mercantile Journal says:—"The intelligence from China is as gratifying as it is important, and it is especially satisfactory because it bears with it this great zest—it was unexpected; so little importance had been attached to the progress announced by the last overland mail, to have been made by the Chinese expedition. It appears, however, that the Chinese question is thoroughly settled—that the occupation of Chusan, and the proceedings of Admiral Elliott have brought the Emperor of China to his senses, and that he has offered to send plenipotentiaries to Canton or Ningpo, for the arrangement of all matters in difference with Great Britain."

Shortly after the capture of Chusan, Admiral Elliott, in proceeding to the Pecho river, was met by a mandarin of the third rank of the Chinese empire, though some accounts say the Emperor himself, while others affirm that Admiral Elliott had arrived at Pekin, and had an audience of the Emperor.

The Emperor has agreed to pay £3,000,000 for the expenses incurred by the British in making war; other authorities state £2,000,000 sterling as indemnity for the opium seized, and £1,000,000 for the expenses of the war. The Emperor, either himself, or through his officers, has expressed pacific intentions to the Admiral, and he disavows the accusations of Commissioner Lin. This latter, indeed, has fallen into disgrace, and the Emperor offers to surrender him into the hands of the British, to be dealt with as they think proper.

Chusan is not to be given up until the treaty be signed.

It is stated (and certainly there is nothing miraculous in the fact that his Celestial Majesty should be so influenced,) that the Emperor is greatly annoyed at the occupation of Chusan, and his Minister hinted "that the Admiral's visit had prevented the march of fierce soldiers to retake the island!"

The Earl of Somers died at his residence at Brighton on the 6th of January. The death of Rear Admiral Sir Philip B. Verebroke, the officer who commanded the Shannon in her engagement with the Chesapeake during the last war, on which occasion he was severely wounded, and for which he was made a Baronet, is also announced in the London papers.

A great fire had occurred at Dundee. The venerable Cathedral which had weathered the storms for 700 years, and two of the other churches, were entirely consumed—the damage being estimated at between 30 and £40,000.

The packet ship President had arrived at St. Catharine's Dock, and was found to have received very little, if any, injury.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM CHINA AND INDIA.

LATEST DATES RECEIVED.

Bombay,	Dec. 1	Chusan,	Oct. 1
Calcutta,	Nov. 29	Macao,	Oct. 6
Madras,	Nov. 24	Singapore,	Oct. 25
Ceylon,	Nov. 16	Manilla,	Sept. 7

From our Bombay Correspondent.

Accounts have been received from Chusan to 1st of October, which are generally regarded both at Bombay and Calcutta to be of a highly unsatisfactory nature. Admiral Elliott, in the Wellesley, had returned from the Gulf of Pecheelee. This squadron, consisting of the Wellesley, Volage, Blonde, Modeste, Pylades, Madagascar steamer, and transports Ernaud and Malcom, arrived off the mouth of the Pecho on the 9th of August, on the 11th Captain Elliott proceeded into the mouth of the river on the steamer, with boats of all the men-of-war present, manned and armed, and on arriving at the bar, the steamer anchored, and the boats proceeded up the river, with the flag of truce flying. On their arrival off the forts at the entrance, a mandarin boat pushed off to them, and received the Admiral's letter; at the expiration of six days a chop was received, stating that the Emperor required ten days to consider, which time was agreed to; at the expiration of which an interview took place between Captain Elliott (the Admiral declined meeting him) and Khe Shan, the Imperial commissioner, who is the third man in the empire, a mandarin of the first class and red button.

Nothing further is known; but it is generally believed that the Emperor has agreed to send Khe Shan to Canton for the purpose of conducting the negotiations. The Emperor is stated to be willing to permit a renewal of commercial intercourse, provided we evacuate Chusan and confine our trade with Canton as before. He is also willing to give us an island near Lintin, and to pay for the opium. Lin is said to have exceeded his instructions, and to suffer whatever punishment the English shall think fit, if it shall be proved, after an investigation into the circumstances, that the representations of his conduct contained the Admiral's letter are correct. He says, however, that Lin gives a very different version of it.

Now all these professions are regarded as a mere pretence on the part of the Emperor to get rid of our force, which is in unpleasant proximity to his capital. The general opinion appears to be that no good can be done until the Bogue forts are destroyed, and that the Admiral and Captain Elliott have allowed themselves to be completely overreached by the Chinese, and that an indefinite period will be consumed in negotiations. Mr. Astell, formerly of the company's factory, is of opinion that affairs cannot be settled amicably. Mr. Clark differs on this point.

"We laid before our readers, in our yesterday's extras, the substance of the intelligence from China. We are apprehensive that they, as well as ourselves, will experience a feeling of no little disappointment upon the occasion. It would seem, that although we have a prospect or rather a promise of remuneration for offences offered by the Chinese authorities, yet we have, as it appears to us, from all we can learn, very little security that the promise will be fulfilled. We are reluctant to say that we believe the Chinese Government has gained its point.—That it has referred us to a land of promise, and we have consented to forego possession and accept of the bond of promise.

"Some little time ago, we stated that if we wished to make an impression upon the Chinese Government, we must strike at the heart and not at the extremities; it would seem that we have made an ineffectual blow at the heart, which having failed, we have been referred very coolly to the extremities. We have consented to go to the extremities, and by so doing we have given to the Chinese authorities, be it Emperor or mandarin, a basis whereon to erect a "mighty big lie." The empire of China exists on a "mighty big lie"—they will now swear that they, that is the Chinese Government, have made us knock under, that is again to say, that they have forced us to go to Canton to settle preliminaries, and we shall be placed just in the position ante bellum. We have thus lost our opportunity, we shall have our work to do again, and at last we shall be obliged to do that which we ought to have done at first, to strike at their heart."

Opium was in great demand on the coast, and had advanced to 900 and 1000 dollars per chest.

Her Majesty's ship Cruizer, which bro't these accounts, passed Macao on the 6th of October, but had no communication with the English there; all, however, was quiet at that date.—The latest direct accounts from Macao are to the 22d of August; they are interesting but unimportant.

It appears that a Mr. Vincent, officiating chaplain at Macao, had gone out incautiously to bathe, beyond the natural Portuguese territory, when he was seized by the Chinese and taken to Canton. The British authorities demanded him of Lin, who, instead of delivering him up, sent down a large force to Macao, and fortified a fort and a joss house there. Captain Smith, the naval commanding officer, determining to anticipate their designs, brought up his ships and battered the fort severely, the joss house leniently, it being on neutral ground, and then landing the marines and volunteers, dispersed the Chinese forces. The Chinese lost many more, of course, than they will confess, but they stood better to their guns than we had thought they would.

H. M. S. Alligator on her way down from Chusan went into Amoy, and found all the fortifications rebuilt, and about one hundred cannons mounted. The Englishman states "that there were not the least signs of any thing like commerce to be expected at Chusan, and there was a total stoppage of all trade to the south." The Indian Oak, proceeding down with despatches, was wrecked upon the coast, which accounts for our continuing so long without intelligence.

From the Bengal Hurkaru, Extra, Nov. 16.

The troops of Chusan have been suffering severely from sickness—the deaths, since the occupation of the Island, being, Europeans, 69—natives, 19. H. M's 26th had particularly suffered. Want of fresh meat had caused dysentary to break out among the troops, and the bazaars were ill supplied. The navy, at sea, had also suffered severely from dysentary, but few casualties had occurred.

Captain Shean, of H. M's 59th, was the only officer that had died at Chusan. The sudden transition from heat to cold had caused much suffering among the troops, who were forthwith to go into winter quarters at Chusan, and supplies of fresh provisions were expected from Manilla and elsewhere. There seems a strong disposition on the part of the Chinese to sacrifice Commissioner Lin, who has become very unpopular.

At Amoy the Chinese attempted to capture H. M. ship Alligator, and a few days after to cut off three of her boats, but failed on each occasion, suffering very considerable loss, though the Alligator has only small brass guns. Captain Anstruther, of the Madras Artillery, and his servant whilst walking in Chusan, were kidnapped and carried off to Ningpo, where they are detained, but treated with kindness.

The armed brig Kite, a vessel taken up for the service, and employed in surveying the mouth of the Yangzea river, had either been wrecked or captured, and her commander and Lascar crew were also detained at Ning-po, and treated kindly likewise. The news from Macao is, that affairs remain in statu quo. Mr. Stanton was detained at Canton, and no farther collision had taken place between the Chinese and our forces.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE DISPUTE WITH CHINA. Death of Kurruck Singh, and of his Successor Nou-Nebal Singh, and the accession of Shere Singh to the Throne of Lahore—Surrender of Dost Mahomed.

We have received, by extraordinary express from Paris, the Messager of Monday night. It contains the following most important Telegraphic Despatch:

"MARSEILLES, Jan, 2, 6 o'clock, evening,
"Received in the afternoon of the 4th.
"MALTA, Dec. 28.

"The Consul of France to the Minister of Foreign Affairs:

"Kurruck Singh, King of Lahore, died on the 5th of November. During the funeral ceremony, his successor, Nou Nebal Singh was killed by accident. Shere Singh was to mount the throne.

"The affairs of China are on the point of being settled. The English are to receive three million sterling as an indemnity.

"Dost Mahomed has definitely surrendered to the English."

In these three pieces of intelligence, brought no doubt by the Indian Mail, are comprised, the settlement of the China quarrel, the termination of Cabool war, and the menaced hostility of the Sheiks removed; for the prince, announced as having died during the funeral of his relative, was he who was considered likely to make use of his power against the English.

Br. Warren, you say, "the West Chester brethren wish you to send their papers via Cambridge," &c. Now, we have but one West Chester on our book,—that is in Harrison, and there is only one subscriber there, N. Lapelly.—As we presume you have not given the correct office, we can do nothing until we hear from you again.

The post master at Lima, Ohio, informs us that Anthony Hall has not taken his paper from the office for some time. He owes us $3,50,—will our agent there be so good as to see to this matter for us?

ANTI-SLAVERY MEETING IN NORWICH, ENG.

INTERFERENCE OF THE CHARTISTS.

Considerable excitement has prevailed in Norwich for some days past, owing to the promulgation of a requisition for a county meeting, presented to H. Villebois, the high sheriff of Norfolk, by a numerous and highly respectable body of the freeholders of Norfolk and of the inhabitants of Norwich, to consider the propriety of forming an auxiliary society (in connection with the one lately formed in London) for the suppression of the slave trade and the civilization of Africa.—No sooner had an arrangement for the meeting been made, than a handbill was put in circulation by a Chartist leader, named Dover (a weaver by trade) calling upon the Chartists to attend with their wives and families in St. Andrew's hall on the day of meeting—an invitation which led to the presence of some 50 or 70 Chartists and their families. The county court was opened pro forma on Wednesday in the Shire hall, and immediately adjourned to the St. Andrew's hall. Long before the hour appointed, 12 o'clock, the seats in the body of St. Andrew's hall, as well as those on the platform, were filled by a numerous and brilliant assemblage of the elite of the ladies of the city and county.

We noticed among those present the Dowager Lady Suffield, the Dowager Lady Francis Suffield, Mrs. Stanley, the Lady of the Bishop of Norwich, Mrs. Opie, &c., Sir T. F. Buxton, Bart. and Mr. A. Johnson and family, were early on the platform. Soon after 12 o'clock, the High Sheriff entered the hall, accompanied by the Bishop of Norwich, Mr. Weyland, M. P., Mr. Woodhouse, M. P., the Dean of Norwich, Lord Berners, Lord Colborne, the Hon. Lord Irby, Mr. John Joseph Gurney, Sir Charles Clarke, Bart., the Hon. and Rev. E. Pellew, Mr. Jeremy, recorder of Norwich and a large assemblage of the wealth of the city and county. At the same moment the party of Chartists, to whom we have already alluded, headed by Mister Dover, the weaver, obtained ingress to the hall at one of the lower doors, and it soon became apparent that it was the intention of the party to attempt to gain the ascendency in the day's proceedings.

The High Sheriff, on taking the presidential chair, opened the business of the day by reading the purport of the requisition, and his proclamation calling the county meeting pursuant to that requisition. He had to request that all present would give a calm and patient hearing to those gentlemen who should come forward to address them.

The Bishop of Norwich then rose to propose the first resolution, and was received with mixed demonstrations of approbation and dissatisfaction. The Right Rev. Prelate commenced by observing that he had rejoiced at the opportunity afforded him of taking a prominent part in this great, this influential, and he would say, this most important meeting; a meeting which he was happy to find had met with the universal approbation of the county, as testified by the requisition on which it had been called together, and by the numbers of the assembly he saw before him. At this, however, he was not surprised, for the subject which had this day called them together was one which entwined itself, which intermingled, and which identified itself with every honorable feeling and worthy feature which constituted the superiority of the British character. It was a subject which combined their duty to God with a due and proper sympathy for the suffering community. Upon the list of the requisitionists stood the names of 13 peers. The name of one peer connected with the county was, it was true, wanting, but this was owing to his absence in London. He alluded to the liberal peer, the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl Marshal of England, who held a permanent and honorable position in the immediate presence of his sovereign. (Applause on the platform.) He (the Bishop of Norwich) had received a letter from the noble duke this day expressive of his Grace's unqualified approbation of the objects for which the meeting was assembled, and desiring him (the Bishop of Norwich) to make those feelings on his Grace's part known to the meeting. But to return to the requisitionists. It contained the names of no less than 18 baronets of the county, Sir John Boileau being abroad, owing to the illness of a near relative. Of the municipal officers of this city, and the boroughs within the county, he believed that all had appended their signatures. Of the members of Parliament, seven in number, he believed all had signed: and tho' last, not least, one-fifth of the 210 signatures, he was happy to say, was composed of those of that profession to which he (the Bishop of Norwich) belonged. (Slight applause.)—The remainder of the list was composed of the members of the army and navy and leading land owners of all sects and persuasions, all happy to lend their names to this great and godly cause. [Applause and slight murmurs.] He [the Bishop of Norwich] could not avoid also still further congratulating the High Sheriff, as the representative of the laws, the justice, and equity of England, upon holding on such an occasion the station in which he was so properly placed. Still more he congratulated the meeting on the fact that the lord lieutenant of the county, the representative of her Majesty in it, had accepted the office of President of this Society. Not that her Majesty required an inferior representative on such a question, for be it remembered she had delegated to her royal consort the expression of her opinions on this question at the most numerous and splendid meeting ever held in Exeter Hall, he alluded to the meeting at which his Royal Highness Prince Albert had presided and attended in her Majesty's name; a meeting which would never be forgotten by those who had the satisfaction of attending it. [Applause, partial cheers, and sensation among the Chartists.] All these were anxious to declare throughout the land that slavery ought to be abolished. [Loud cries from the end of the hall, "Why don't you look at the New Poor Law?" and "Where's the slavery of your work houses?"] This, continued the Right Reverend Prelate, was a proud day for Norfolk and for the representatives of all ranks, professions, and sects by whom the meeting had been convened. [Renewed cries of "Why don't you look at the New Poor Laws?" followed by loud hisses and groans.] It was far from his wish to wander for a moment from the question really now before the meeting, but he trusted he might be allowed for a moment to say, in reference to other meetings which occasionally take place for political and religious discussions, at which strife was rather engendered, that he [the Bishop of Norwich] was a man of peace—ready to bear and forbear with others—to give the right hand of fellowship to those who differed from himself in opinion, and required only that they on their part would allow him to hold those opinions which through life he had conscientiously maintained. In the present day it would not be thought possible that the church should have always supported slavery; to say so in the present day would be to traduce the clergy of that church, by the bare suspicion that any of the clergymen would refuse to raise his hand, and heart against the odious and detestible traffic in human flesh. [Hisses, groans, and cheers, mingled with cries of "Look at home before you go abroad."] Now, it had always been his [the Bishop of Norwich's] principle to speak manfully and boldly, and he begged to ask the meeting how long they meant the veil to obscure the truth, and not permit a gleam of light to approach their understandings? He came, however, back to the point from which he had digressed. It would scarcely be believed that Mr. Wilberforce in his time had actually been opposed by some of the Bishops of the church. [Loud hisses and groans.] He [the Bishop of Norwich] attributed that opposition to the circumstance that they lived in prejudiced times, and he could imagine that now brighter days were dawning—nay, he believed he could pledge himself that at the present moment there was not a single clergyman who supported slavery. [Cheers and groans.] The Right Rev. Prelate concluded by moving the first Resolution, which was:

"That while this meeting rejoices in the total abolition of the slave trade in this country, and the influence which Great Britain has so long exerted with other nations in promoting this great cause, we learn with the deepest regret that the Foreign Slave Trade has increased and is still increasing under circumstances of aggravated horror, and that it prevails to an extent which imperatively calls for the strenuous and continued exertions of the whole Christian community to effect its extinction."

Mr. Weyland, M. P., seconded the motion.—During the whole of the address of the honorable member, the uproar and confusion were beyond description.

The High Sheriff, in the midst of the uproar, inquired whether any person desired to move an amendment upon the original motion.

The Chartist leader, Dover, started up, and said that he was prepared to move an amendment, upon which he was determined to take the sense of the meeting.

The High Sheriff inquired whether the claimant to be heard was either a freeholder or inhabitant of the county of Norfolk?

Mister Dover, who was attired in a fustian jacket, replied that he was a freeholder of the county, and a freeman of the city of Norwich.

The High Sheriff, on receiving this intimation, declared that Mr. Dover had a right to be heard. The uproar and confusion at this moment were past all description.

Mr. Dover proceeded, amid frequent interruptions from the vociferous plaudits of his friends, to propose his resolution. He said (in a strong provincial tone) there was no man in the present meeting who was more opposed than himself to slavery; but there was a misunderstanding on behalf of the gentlemen in the orchestra or platform as to where slavery existed; and he thought he was capable of proving that the gentlemen who had addressed the present meeting after the chairman, were really the advocates of slavery to the greatest possible extent. Before he did so, he must remind the meeting that the bishops were too avaricious of filthy lucre. (Groans and hisses.)

The High Sheriff reminded the speaker that he was deviating from the subject, and he (the High Sheriff) could not sit there without keeping him strictly to his text.

Mr. Dover. You should have kept the bishop to the text too. He (Mr. Dover) had heard the bishop from the pulpit speak respecting the employment of the laboring classes in a factory in their city, where £20,000 per annum wages were paid. But what was that divided amongst the work people? Why about 8s. per week. Now, was not that slavery, when the bishop, who so boasted of the employment of his fellow men, received £12,000 a year? (Loud hisses and groans.) But perhaps it would be well to point out the inconsistency of the bishop who had spoken today. Why, last week he had presided at a Temperance meeting, and the next day had taken his share at a wine party. Now, where was the consistency in this? (Loud groans from all parts of the hall.)

The High Sheriff again interposed, and said he could not allow Mr. Dover to go on if he did not stick to his text. (Great uproar and laughter.)

Mr. Dover said he was just coming to his text. (Renewed laughter.) He begged to ask what was slavery? He called that slavery where a man did not get an equivalent for the labor he performed. (Loud cheers from the Chartist party.) A man that did not receive that fair equivalent for his labor was a slave to all intents and purposes. (Renewed applause from the same quarter.) He begged to ask whether a man in this country obtained a fair equivalent for what he produced? No such thing. The productions of England were £300,000,000 annually. This was produced by the labor of 5,000,000 of the population for the remaining 25,000,000 to enjoy. This was a fact which he defied the gentlemen in the orchestra or platform to deny.—(Applause.) Such, however, were the facts; and though he did not presume to set himself up as a legislator, still it was for the Legislature to provide a stop gap for the great difference now existing between the producer and the consumer. (Cheers and hisses.) If wealth was not obtained without producing a fair equivalent for labor, there would be no slavery. If the slave drivers paid a fair equivalent it would never be in their power to buy slaves. (Loud applause from the Dover party.)

At this juncture, and in obedience to the call, a forest of hands were displayed by their owners, who had gained possession of the lower or extreme end of the hall from the platform.—The display was welcomed by loud and long continued cheers from the Chartist party. As soon as silence was comparatively restored,

Mr. Dover proceeded. Those who were not represented were indeed political slaves, for they were called upon to pay taxes from their hard earnings—to fight the battles of their country, if called upon or pressed into the service; and, looking to these and other responsibilities, why, he begged to inquire, in this land [as it was called] of freedom, persons so liable should not have a vote in the choice of their representatives?—[Great cheering from the Dover party.] He repeated, this state of things had brought about political slavery; and what had been the result? Why, in 1793, France wished to relieve itself from the notion that they were a nation of slaves; and yet Great Britain and other powers, with the aid of still smaller states, had contributed no less than £1,200,000 to prevent the emancipation of France from thraldom. Talk about freedom—what, he must inquire, had this country done to preserve Poland from the aggression of the Autocrat of Russia? And yet emancipation from slavery was talked of! [Loud applause and some tumult.] But to come nearer the mark, what had been done after 20 millions of money of the British people had been voted away in order to put an end to negro slavery in the West Indies? After all this, he found in a Jamaica paper, now three months old, that the clergy had taken a predominant part in order to defeat emancipation. But there still remained another kind of slavery to which the English people were subjected—he meant mental slavery.—That had been a system of slavery pursued now for nearly two thousand years, and that system was to allow a man to enjoy £400 a year at the expense of another who could be made to live upon 4s. a week. Thus it was that the people were insulted and their pockets picked to the amount of £8,500,000 a year; but ere long the veil would be drawn aside, and the buggaboo which had frightened and alarmed them be done away with. [Great cheers from the Chartist party.] Having said this much, he begged to move the following resolution by way of amendment to that proposed by the Right Rev. Prelate the Bishop of Norwich. It was as follows: "That this meeting views with deep regret the many proofs of despotic slavery at home, and pledges itself to use all exertions to put a final stop to slavery wherever it is found to exist." [Loud and general plaudits from the Chartist party.]

A person, who gave his name as Robert Fayne, rose to second the amendment, but in answer to questions put by the High Sheriff, he admitted that he was neither a freeholder of the county nor an inhabitant therein. The High Sheriff, therefore, at once declared his ineligibility to address the meeting.

Mr. Thomas Hewett, who was accoutred in a fustian shooting jacket, announced himself as prepared to second the amendment. As an operative he came to that meeting to be heard in behalf of his oppressed fellow-countrymen. Last week Mr. Gurney had, at a meeting at which he was in the chair, described the state of slavery in America. He [the speaker] did not want to travel so far. He was content to go a few yards from the spot in which he stood—namely, to the workhouse door. [Loud cheers, and general cries from the body of the Chartists of "Look to the slavery and misery of the new poor laws—Emancipate the white slaves before you think of the blacks."] He should like some of the gentlemen who stood on the platform to attend at the door of the workhouse, and see the poor girls driven, without hats or shawls, thence to the factories. He would ask them what did they call that but slavery? [Tremendous cheering.] This was not all, however, for he had himself found a weaver in this city who, after working sixteen hours a day, could only earn 9s. a week. This was to support six children, his wife, and himself; and deducting the outgoings, those earnings just left him 1½d. a day per head for that family to subsist upon. He could go with the bishop who had supported the new poor law bill to-morrow and show him, not an individual case, but a hundred such instances of destitution. He could take the right reverend prelate to houses where the husband worked as a weaver for eighteen hours a day, and yet had nothing but a lock of straw for his wife, his children, and himself to lie upon.—[Great applause.] Mr. Gurney, on Friday last, had described a pic-nic party he had been at of the negroes in the West Indies; but what was the sort of pi-nic the laborers at home had to partake of? Why, it amounted, after all their exertions, to one of Mr. John Harvey's messes of red herrings and potatoes. [Great confusion, hisses, and groans.] But with £385,000 given to the Queen for pocket money, and 14,000 parsons, how could England expect things to be otherwise? [Loud shouts from the Chartists.]—Priestcraft and kingcraft must be done away with; he was willing to work to support himself, but starve, come what might, he would not, to support others. This country had now three kings and queens to maintain. There was Queen Victoria with her German husband, who cost the people £30,000 a year; there was the king of Belgium and his wife; and lastly, there was the bloody king of Hanover and his spouse. [Tremendous yells.] This was a true state of slavery, which could only be abolished by the adoption of the people's charter. Taxation without representation was tyranny, productive of slavery, and with these views, he cordially seconded the amendment. (Loud cheers and groans.)

The Venerable Archdeacon Bathurst came forward amidst the confusion which prevailed, and said, before the question was put, he had an amendment to propose—an amendment which he thought would command the support of all parties. It was with very great pain he had heard the speeches which had been made by the two last speakers; not because he was one of those who considered that there was nothing in the present state of the country to call forth such feeling as has been exhibited at the present meeting—in short, he considered that to call a meeting like that now assembled, at such a moment, was injudicious; for why should Englishmen be asked to lend their ears to the details of misfortune and oppression which existed at a great distance, when the people themselves felt—whether right or wrong, it was not for him to say—they had great cause of complaint at home? He therefore must say the present was not a very fortunate moment at which to hold such a meeting. (Loud cheers from the Chartist party.) It was with great pain, he repeated, that he, making all allowance for excited feelings, had heard to day speeches which, alluding to priestcraft, were a libel upon the clergy, and still more upon the worthy and excellent bishop with whom it had been his misfortune to have some difference, which happily was now at an end. Of that Right Reverend Prelate he would say, and he spoke with a recollection of what his father, so long the diocesan here, had done—that no prelate had opened his purse strings more liberally or readily than the Right Rev. Prelate now on the platform.—(Cheers and shouts of "Your father could afford it with twelve thousands pounds a year!") It never realized more than 5000*l*. He had heard a great deal about the new poor law, and, on the whole, he was not a friend to that law, because, as a permanent measure, he considered it harsh and impracticable; but, at the same time, he admitted that the evils which existed under the old law called for a remedy; and though he looked upon the new law in the same light as the Jewish laws, as compared with those promulgated by Christ, it was not for permanent adoption, but like the Jewish law, to be amended and made less stringent and severe. He hoped ere long to see a more generous system in operation—a system which would give satisfaction to all classes of the community. In his opinion the affections and confidence of the people of Africa now redeemed in the West India colonies, must be acquired, before any successful interference could be made with the chiefs of the African coast; and looking to the state of Jamaica so lately as April last, he could not think that confidence and affection were at present to be acquired. Looking at these points in this light, he should move as an amendment the following resolution: "That this meeting, while it warmly advocates the rights of humanity, by the exertions this day made to form an auxiliary society for the suppression of the slave trade and the civilization of Africa, does hereby express a hope that this auxiliary society when formed, will, together with the institution lately formed in London, take every opportunity of holding out to those who have in the British colonies been already redeemed from slavery by the generosity of the British public, the bounden duty of those so redeemed to make the only return in their power for the benefits conferred upon them, while so many distresses amidst the British people require alike the aid of public and private beneficence, namely, by kindest feeling towards their employers, by the most zealous industry and interest in their employers' welfare, and by a docile and respectful demeanor towards those whose bread they eat, and whom they, by their own voluntary agreement, serve." The venerable archdeacon, who was frequently interrupted in the course of his address, resumed his seat amidst continued tumult.

The High Sheriff then proceeded in the midst of great confusion to take a show of hands. Archdeacon Bathurst's amendment fell to the ground for want of a seconder, and on the show being taken for the original resolution and Mr. Dover's amendment, the number appeared to be tolerably equal. The High Sheriff, however, declared it to be his opinion that the majority of the meeting was in favor of the original resolution. This announcement was productive of increased tumult, which continued without cessation throughout the remainder of the proceedings.

The very Rev. the Dean of Norwich then came forward to move the next resolution—"That the meeting, deeply sensible of the debt which we owe to Africa, is convinced of the importance of promoting legitimate commerce and productive agriculture on that continent, and of doing every thing in our power for the civil, social, and moral improvement of its benighted inhabitants."

The resolution was carried;

This announcement drew forth peals of laughter from the opponents of the meeting, who responded to it by calling for and heartily giving three groans for "The Whig Bishop of Norwich and the New Poor Law."

Mr. J. J. Gurney next presented himself to the noisy auditory, but with no better success.—While he was warmly cheered by the leading personages on the platform, the hisses, groans, and yells, issuing from the body of the hall, were absolutely deafening. He called upon the Chartist Dover to use his influence with his party to give him (Mr. Gurney) fair play and a hearing, but

Mister Dover remarked that his friends were not slaves, and therefore would not allow themselves to be gagged. (Cheers.)

Mr. J. J. Gurney—then, pray do not let them gag and make a slave of me. (Renewed confusion.)

Mister Dover—What! Mr. Gurney, how is it that you have become so unpopular here in Norwich as to be obliged to appeal to me, a weaver, to get you a hearing? (Loud cheers from the Chartists and increased confusion and uproar, in the midst of which

Mr. J. J. Gurney gave up the attempt as hopeless, and handed to the high sheriff as his motion, the following resolution:—"That the meeting cordially approves of the society lately formed in London under the patronage of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, for these express purposes, and that a society be now formed in aid of that institution, to be called 'the Norfolk and Norwich Auxiliary Society for the suppression of the Slave Trade and the Civilization of Africa."

The Honorable Admiral Irby, seconded the resolution, which was declared by the High Sheriff (but without being put to the meeting) to be carried. Great confusion followed and the demands by the Chartists for "Fair Play" were loud and deep.

Mr. J. J. Gurney then, in almost dumb show, moved a resolution to the effect, that Lord Woodhouse the Lord Lieutenant of the county, be appointed president of the society; that Mr. H. Buckbeck be appointed treasurer; and a long list of clergy and gentry be the committee.

Sir T. F. Buxton, Bart. rose to second the resolution; but his reception was but little better than that with which his immediate predecessors had been saluted. Sir T. F. Buxton resumed his seat amidst the strongest demonstrations of chagrin and disappointment.

The High Sheriff then (as before) declared the resolution to be carried, and after a vote of thanks had been suggested to the High Sheriff for his conduct in the chair, by Lord Colborne, the meeting separated in the greatest uproar and connfusion.

PRESENTMENTS.—Jackson, in his life of Watson, says,—"In passing the churchyard, Mr. Watson pointed to a conspicuous grave and said, 'the first time I travelled this way that grave stone caught my eye, especially the words *who died * * * aged forty-two.* A very strong impression, for which I could not account, was immediately made upon my mind, that I should die at precisely the same age. The impression was both strong and sudden; I have already passed that age, and this shows how little stress can be justly laid upon those sudden impulses and impressions, of which some people make so much account. This impression, it appears, had created considerable uneasiness in the family of Mr. Watson; but its effect, on his own mind, it is not easy to determine." Watson possessed a vigorous mind, one that we should suppose would be the last to indulge fanatical or whimsical ideas; we may learn, therefore from his case, the liability of weaker minds to be deluded by such impressions. Had he been similarly susceptable with his anxious family, it is not improbable that he would have worn away under the impression, fallen into some fatal disease and expired at the precise time; and all this the result merely of imagination.—Medical history is full of proofs on this subject, and it is altogether probable that most who die under such circumstances, fall victims to their own folly, instead of a revealed design of Providence. Cases have been known where criminals, condemned to death have been blindfolded, lain upon the block, slightly struck on the neck with a cane, and taken up dead, without the loss of a drop of blood. It is singular with what tenacity these morbid fears will cling to the mind. We knew a young man who once received one of these presentments of his death, and received it upon his knees in private prayer. The circumstances were strong, the impression at the time he represents as singularly clear and forcible, like an intuition.—Subsequent circumstances seemed confirmatory of it. The very next day an excellent Christian died in his neighborhood who had just such a presentment, and had even provided his coffin for the event.—As the time passed, the omens became stronger; by an accidental exposure he caught a cold, was taken with a cough, confined to his room with incipient symptoms of consumption. How easily would some minds have given way under these circumstances, and have realized the expected result? He, however, was not disposed to give away to superstitious fears. He knew the caprices of the imagination, and its dangerous influences on health. He therefore calmly prepared his mind and circumstances for any result, and waited throughout the period of six months, within which he expected to die, and which terminated precisely with the year; all this time he was confined to his room, the impression was still present; he treated it with respect but not with fear; it might be from God or it might not. The last night came, but still there were a few hours, and what might not occur in them? He watched until midnight, and not until the last moment of the year had flown was he clear from this remarkable illusion. He states that he then fell upon his knees, thanked God that he had not fallen a victim to his own folly, and prayed that he might better remember that "the secret things belong to the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of His law."—We would not say that God does not, in rare instances, reveal their dying hours to His people, but that we never have known a case which we could rely upon, and that the best reasons apply against such a course on the part of his Providence.—Zion's Herald.

THE WESTERN WORLD & WEEKLY MESSENGER is published every Thursday morning, by Henkle, Logan, & Co., Main street, three doors below Fifth, Louisville, Ky.

The country is flooded with political newspapers in great abundance; but these, generally, are so devoted to political controversy as to afford little else, and many of them are so bitter in spirit and so violent in language as to render them unfit, and even unsafe visitors of the family circle. There are also a number of papers of a religious cast, under the special patronage, and devoted to the inculcation of the peculiar views of the different religious sects, but these are not quite suited to the general reader and do not serve the purposes of a miscellaneous family newspaper. A few literary papers there are too in the west—some light, some heavy—chiefly published but monthly. All these are well enough in their way, and we have nothing to say in opposition to them. But there is not among them what can be properly called a Family Newspaper. Several attempts have been made to get up weekly papers to supply this deficiency in the periodical literature of the west, but they have not been adequately sustained; and in consequence, the entire west is supplied with family newspapers from the east, so far as there is a supply at all. And our great western valley drained of thousands of dollars to pay for eastern papers, which come to us not so fresh as we could have papers of our own, and burdened with a heavier tax of postage.

We have now undertaken to supply the desideratum, by presenting the western public with a western family weekly, containing a larger qaantity of select reading matter than any western paper of any description we have ever seen, and at a lower price. This we are enabled to do, by publishing our weekly in connection with a family daily paper, as we can thereby use the choice reading matter of six daily papers (besides other matter) in making up each number of the weekly paper. Feeling ourselves prepared to furnish our patrons as good and as cheap a paper, at least, as they can get by sending their money away from among us, we may confidently expect a liberal support; and our liberal encouragement thus far, assures us of this result.

Local Agents will be appointed at all the principal points in the west and south-west, which will save subscribers the expense of ordering paper by mail and of making remittances.

The "Western World" is printed on good type and fine paper, on a mammoth sheet of the largest size, each paper containing about thirty columns of select reading matter, at the very low price of two dollars a year, or—still lower—six copies for ten dollars—payable in advance in all cases. All letters to the editors or publishers must be post paid.

Editors in the west and south, with whom we exchange, will confer a favor—which, on occasion, will be reciprocated—by inserting our prospectus and noticing the paper.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Alms-houses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as the most admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs, throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which are undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior in all the requisites called for in such a work to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we have little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe that this book and the preceding have been highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow our books of this description."—*Charleston (S. Disciple: I find, under No. 3, what I und as a reply to my last. Had I not found your signature and allusion made to myI never should have thought of its being a as none of the points of which I have are touched.

to No. 3, you say: "the great starting in this new kind of doctrine, is the day of ost, when Peter preached baptism for the ion of sins." Why do you call this a kind of doctrine," admitting at the same that "Peter preached it on the day of Pen?" This only by the way.

u next speak of the case of the Pentecosas being unlike any now in existence.—ay, "they were Jews." Peter says, God o difference between the Gentiles and the You say, further, "they were guilty of ng Christ"—so is every sinner. Paul says, has concluded all under sin"—"in unbe—where now is your great dissimilarity?

will again call your attention to the comn as recorded by Mark, xvi, 15th and 16th: e into all the world and preach the gospel ry creature: he that believeth and is baptiall be saved, but he that believeth not shall nned." Was not this gospel to be preached tiles as well as Jews? and was not salvaromised to "every creature" on the same ions? This you must admit.

in, take the commission as recorded by xxiv, 47: "And that repentance and ion of sins should be preached in His name all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."—this, we learn that as the gospel was to at Jerusalem," so it was to go "to all s." By what authority then, does my Br. le say, we are not now to preach to the as Peter did "on the day of Pentecost?" will be perfectly safe, my dear brother, in ing the "new kind of doctrine" which preached eighteen hundred years ago.

n the commission as recorded by Mark and we find that faith, repentance and bapre conditions made known to us by the and salvation or the remission of sins is ed to those who comply with those conditions. Let us, in the next place, see the commission carried out.

Paul went to Corinth to preach. The commission said, "go preach"—"he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Many of the Corinthians believed and were baptized." 1 Cor. xviii, 8. The Corinthians were saved.—See 1 Cor. xv, 1st. Now, Br. Disciple, here we have the gospel carried out. Do you not think that sinners now can be saved by the same process?

You next call on me to "show that the one hundred and twenty disciples were baptized." Well, suppose I cannot. You say, "the 3d law or rule of the kingdom is baptism, to introduce and connect us with the discipleship of Christ," and you say "the laws of Christ's kingdom never will be repealed to the end of time." Now, if you are right, they were baptized, otherwise you have one hundred and twenty disciples unconnected "with the discipleship of Christ." Strange disciples! I hope my brother Disciple is not one of those unintroduced, unconnected disciples. I hope, hereafter, to show, at least, the probability that those disciples were baptized, but I must, for the present, come to a close. You say, you "have only began on this subject." Go ahead, brother, I want to learn; but don't mix up Br. "O" with Timothy, hereafter; they are different persons. Yours, in the hope of eternal life,

TIMOTHY.

DAVID CRALL.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

JACKSONBURGH, O., FEB. 4, 1841.

Mr. Editor: I have just returned from a route of six weeks, and near 500 hundred miles travel in the northern circuits. I spent the last Sabbath of December, 1840, in Miami circuit.—Held meetings at Br. Fish's and Br Stephen's in Shelby county. Was happy to find that the Lord has blessed the labors of our junior brother Flood, who travels the circuit, and given him favor in the eyes of the people. One new class has been organized since last conference, near Troy, of which your readers have been advised.

I reached Lima circuit at Dr. Besse's near Wapaukonetta in Allen county, where I rested during a stormy day. On the Thursday which closed the year, proceeded to Lima, where I met Br. J. M. Young, superintendent of the circuit, and Br. Guest of Findley circuit. We attended a watch-night at Br. Rumbaugh's, three miles from town. Found that, as a matter of convenience, brethren had changed the order of my appointments for the two following Sabbaths. This gave me an impracticable distance to reach Wood county Mission in time, with the existing condition of the roads, and of course I did not effect it. Had I got word a day or two sooner all might have come right. We attended, first Sabbath in January, 1841, a three days' meeting at Brother Tipton's, in Putnam county, where a class has lately been formed. The weather was severely cold, but we had some blessed times,—several joined society.

I accompanied Br. Guest to his circuit—held meetings at some half dozen places in the northern part thereof. But in the freshet of January 7, high waters prevented our crossing Blanchard's Fork of Au Glaize, to attend quarterly meeting, which was to have been held near Williamstown, on the 10th. I find that this circuit suffers much by being divided longitudinally by the above mentioned stream. Br. G. has had some accessions, and will I trust yet reap abundantly if he faint not. Two camp meetings are in contemplation. One is to be held at Br. Swaney's 16 miles west of Tiffin, last Sabbath in June. How glad I should be to see my old friend and colleague, Br. Ragan, should it suit his convenience to visit Sandusky circuit, about that time or the Sabbath previous. For the want of bridges or ferries I was unable to pass the river until Friday, 15th, and so could not reach Br. Young's meeting until Sunday morning, when I found the brethren engaged in a lively love-feast meeting. This was at Br. Mahan's, in Hardin county. Our aged Br. E. Keraw, a veteran Reformer, was with us here, and what is better, the Master of assemblies did not hide His face from us. After Sabbath, I preached for Br. Young at 3 other points. Lima circuit is evidently rising. Am glad to find that preacher and people are much encouraged by the addition of about 60 to their number since last conference.

Br. Young accompanied me to Union circuit. At Middleburgh, Logan county, we joined Brs. Hunt and Devore. I rejoice to find that the Lord is blessing the labors of these brethren.—They report about 60 accessions since conference. Held meeting in Middleburgh. Preached also at Mechanicsburgh, Champaign county, in the commodious church of the M. E. brethren, the use of which was kindly furnished us. Next we attended the quarterly meeting at Catawba, 24th Jan. This meeting was continued through Monday and Tuesday following, and seemed to advance in interest and in good results to the close. Several happy conversons took place, and several joined society.

On the 30th and 31st ultimo, attended the quarterly meeting of Springfield circuit, at Pleasant Hill. Had a profitable season. The labors of Br. Crall are highly appreciated in the bounds of his charge. Our little church in Springfield, though bereft of so many prominent members, by deaths and removals, is looking up. The congregations have, of late, decidedly improved.—Our conference session is anticipated here next summer, not without interest. It is a coincidence that the election of delegates to General Conference took place here four years ago, and is to take place here again at next session. Mr. Editor, can you not visit us on that occasion?—It is but a moderate distance, and might be a pleasant trip by the National Road. And we shall be glad to greet you once more. Farewell.

A. H. BASSETT.

P. S.—Br. Z. Ragan will please take notice that a small misfake must have occurred in regard to Br. Guest's note. He meant to have said June 27th instead of 17th.

ALLEGHENY, PA., FEB. 1, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having to write on business, I would say for the information of the friends of the good cause, that we are getting along pretty well, all things considered. The meeting you noticed some time since, as having commenced, continued about three weeks, and resulted in a number of convictions, the church revived, and 26 of an increase to her membership. Our Sabbath congregations are large, but owing to various causes, our week night meetings are not so well attended as we could wish.

We commenced yesterday another protracted meeting, to be continued, probably, two weeks, and if the Lord should bless, you may hear from us again. Yours, &c.

JNO. BURNS.

CLEVELAND, O., FEB. 6, 1841.

Br. Springer: Through the medium of your widely circulated paper, I wish to inform our friends, and the President in particular, that we are prospering on this circuit as well as can be expected. Through mercy I met my appointment on the 25th of September, and also met a host of difficulties.

Hear we have a good officiary, and they are all but three or four, determined to defend our constitution. Thank God, I am not discouraged. We are gaining public confidence, the congregations are large and respectable generally, and the work is reviving in many places. I have added 19 to the church since I came, and the prospect is tolerably fair.

Yours, with all due respect,

R. BAMFORD,
Cleveland ct.

THE ATLANTIC STEAMER ON FIRE.—The steam-ship Columbia took fire on Monday morning week at 2 A. M, when within about four hundred miles of Halifax. But few passengers were awake at the time; the Captain was immediately called up, and succeeded, by great exertions, in the course of half an hour, through the agency of the crew, who conducted themselves manfully on the occasion, in suppressing the flames. For a few minutes much consternation prevailed, and the vessel was put for the nearest land. The life-preservers were collected together, the boats were placed in readiness, and due preparations were made for the worst.—The conduct of the Captain was cool, self-possessed, and creditable in the highest degree.

MIGHTY MEN.—Dr. Adam Clarke said that "the old proverb about having too many irons in the fire was an abominable old lie. Have all in, shovel, tongs and poker." It is not so much the multiplicity of employments, as the want of system in them, that distracts and injures both the work and workman. Wesley said, "I am always in haste, but never in a hurry, leisure and I have long taken leave of each other." He travelled about five thousand miles in a year; preached about three times a day, commencing at five o'clock in the morning; and his published works amounted to about two hundred volumes!

EXTRACTS

FROM THE REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE OHIO LUNATIC ASYLUM.

[Concluded.]

No. 12. This was a gentleman, of fair complexion, light make, and modest appearance, about twenty-one years of age. For some months he had been a student in college, and was of good repute amongst his fellows; unexceptionable morals, and disposed to make the most of his time and opportunities. From indigence, or some other cause, he had attempted to board himself, subsisting for several months upon the most frugal and coarse fare, chiefly bread and water. The subject of religion engaged much of his attention, and it was said that he suffered greatly from mental perplexity and anxiety upon this subject; at one time, strongly impressed with the conviction that he had forfeited every hope of redeeming mercy, by the commisssion of the unpardonable sin. Subsequent to these feelings of distress, he had an acute attack from a disease of some violence, and passed many sleepless nights and anxious days. Upon his partial recovery, he applied for admission into the church, and was received, there being no suspicions of mental alienation. It was remarked that he was unusually loquacious and zealous on religious subjects; very soon, he was a violent theologian: then, an inspired angel, and, in a short time, completely deranged. When received at the asylum, he was furious, profane, obscene and filthy, and disposed to abuse his person and clothing; dancing, singing, whistling, swearing, shouting and muttering incoherently in rapid succession. We were obliged to place him in solitude in one of our strongest rooms, and, when left to himself, he became, if possible, more violent and shocking in conduct than before: destroying his clothing, and tearing up his food like a beast, and smearing it over his person in the most disgusting manner.—Medicines were administered with great difficulty, and, for many days, appeared to be of little service in controlling the violence of his disease, which almost immediately was disposed to relapse the moment it began to yield. A variety of means were tried, with little or no benefit, and we began to despair of permanent relief, when we happily discovered both the difficulty and cause of his intractable malady, and were able, by the persevering use of suitable means, to restore him to health, and reason, and prospects of usefulness in society.

MASTURBATION.

We have been successful in but two or three instances of mental derangement from this peculiar cause. One of them was of a very furious and obstinate character, which, for a long time, baffled all our efforts, and appeared to be hopeless, until we fortunately discovered the cause of his disease, in the practice of masturbation, to which (as he subsequently confessed) he had been addicted for several years, without appearing to understand that it was exceedingly sinful and destructive to health. It will be unnecessary to give the history of our difficulties, whilst gaining the ascendancy over his violence and pernicious habits; and an endless task to describe, in proper language, the various means that were used. Happily, we found a remnant of the moral sense, in his more lucid moments, and were by degrees enabled to make a profitable and permanent impression upon his shattered mind: so that, through the blessing of God, he eventually recovered, in all respects, and was discharged, a sound man, willing and zealous to lay aside this ruinous vice.

The secret indulgence of this disgusting and debasing practice is much more common to the youth of both sexes than parents and guardians suppose; and its debiliating influence upon the general health, and the brain and nervous system in particular, is every way deplorable.—It impairs the memory; weakens the general powers of the mind; prostrates the moral faculty; and is a fertile source of insanity, fatuity, and permanent old age. So far as our observations extend, the practice is more common in those of a diffident, modest and fair character; and whilst it is so delicate and painful a subject, that it can scarce be spoken of, or hinted at, without tinging the cheek, it is greatly to be feared that it is, in numerous instances, wholly unsuspected; and the pale face and downcast look, with the cold and trembling extremities, general lassitude, drowsy disposition and extraordinary appetite, pass for the symptoms of constitutional disease. It may be proper to add, that constant bodily labor is among the most important means for the restoration of both mind and body, in this, as in other cases.

OF THE CHRONIC STATE OF INSANITY.

Recoveries, though more striking and apparently satisfactory, are far from being the only important and beneficial results of a well regulated and pleasant retreat for the insane. Very many unfortunate instances of this fearful disease will prove to be incurable; owing to the violence of the attack and a strong predisposition to insanity, or, more frequently, the duration of the malady before the application of suitable means. The tissues of our frame cannot hold out against time and decay. Months and years of irritation must impair the strongest brain: and disease of structure will succeed to disease of function; rendering what was transient and occasional, both permanent and irreparable. In these, and other chronic conditions, from a variety of causes and circumstances, it is impossible to cure; the injured structure can only admit of a certain amount of repair, which will indeed be gratifying, and, in many cases, promise fair; but the stationary point once reached, science and skill shall persevere in vain.

Incurables demand our warmest sympathy and most tender regard; and to a vast majority of these, the blessings and comforts which the institution confers exceed, if possible, all the good of the most perfect recoveries; which was, doubtless, a part of the design in the erection of this noble structure. We are always indeed trying to cure; our second great duty is to take care of those that are past cure, and make them comfortable, happy, and useful to themselves and others around them. They must form an extensive class in every public institution; and the visiter, in passing through this asylum, will find many, who, for years, had been violent, unmanageable and wretched, naked and filthy, now decently clad, industrious and civil, and in the enjoyment of all the outward comforts and blessings of life.

The following examples, we trust, will be interesting:

Mrs. E———, is about fifty years of age, and in many respects, quite an interesting and remarkable woman; lively and talkative, her animated countenance and lady-like appearance is sure to attract attention and excite the sympathies of every feeling heart. She usually carries a book in her hand, and is very obliging with a song of the olden time, particularly 'Highland Mary,' and Campbell's simple, but touching ballad of "Lord Ullin's Daughter," which she occasionally sings with much taste and feeling. Her favorite stanza—

"Oh! haste thee, haste! the lady cries,
Though tempests round us gather;
I'll meet the raging of the skies,
But not an angry father."

Her pleasing vivacity and kind disposition are thus exhibited, while you are perhaps busy in examining the strong lines of character, and lamenting the ruins of her once fascinating and accomplished mind. She has been deranged a number of years, and is the widow of an officer, who did this country some service,—It is not at all probable that she can ever recover the use of her mental faculties; but she has greatly improved, both in appearance and disposition, and though still occasionally excited and rude, is comparatively happy and contented; with few wants beyond a cheerful cup of tea, her spectacles and bible, and pleasant companions.

Mrs. C———. This was a most dreadful and furious maniac, who, after having been chained some twelve or fifteen months, in a public institution, was taken into the country and shut up in a cell, or dungeon, for five or six years, in the worst possible condition; noisy, and filthy and degraded. She was brought to the asylum by force in a strong wagon, bound down in a straight-jacket, with straps and ropes; screaming, swearing and shouting at every person she could see. All efforts to control her wild fury, or induce self-restraint, were entirely disregarded, and there seemed for a long time no hope of relieving or improving her sad condition. At length, we resolved to command such assistance as might be necessary, and commence and persevere with active remedies, against every opposition. She almost immediately became more composed, and, in a few weeks, was entirely under control, so as to allow us to improve her dress and appearances, and direct the administration of her food and drinks.—In a month or two, she was quite sociable, and willing to hear a proposition for her removal from solitude in the lodge, to good company in the house, where she was promised a clean bed and a pleasant apartment. She was a little wary and suspicious at first, but, with some persuasion, eventually consented to take an arm, and accompany us over. Here she was much surprised, but delighted with the appearance of the halls, and soon became attached to her attendant, and made an offer to assist her with the work. At this time, she is very industrious, neat and careful, and has become perfectly docile and harmless, though still entirely deranged.

Mr. W———, is a gentleman who has been more or less insane for a number of years, and was a source of much anxiety to his neighbors and friends. As early as 1823, he made an unsuccessful trip, with produce, down the river, where he suffered much from an attack of fever, which greatly impaired the strength of his mental powers. Since that time he has, in many respects, acted imprudently and unwisely. His friends think he has never been the same man, in habits and business capacity, since this unfortunate adventure. At the time of his admission, he was completely deranged upon the subjects of politics and religion; believing in regard to the one, that he was endued with power from Heaven to raise th dead, perform miracles, heal the sick, an converse with departed friends and disembodied spirits: and of the other, that the destinies of the general government rest upon his shoulders. He has, accordingly, been severely engaged in defeating the fancied designs of several distinguished politicians, especially, General Jackson and Henry Clay; considering them dangerous to the welfare of the nation in general, and certain plans of his own in particular. Other delusions exist, of a superstitious character. He was greatly dissatisfied with those who were instrumental in procuring his commitment to the asylum, insisting from day to day, with great energy and zeal, that he had no opportunity to defend himself before the jury of inquest, and that the whole proceeding was conducted improperly and unfairly. Wearied, at length, with his everlasting din upon this subject, we one day asked him how he would like to refer his case to a select jury. He was delighted with the idea, and quickly replied, that it was the very thing he had so long desired. We told him it was the easiest matter in the world, and immediately requested him to pick one man, and we another, and so alternately, until each party was satisfied; at the same time asking permission, on our part, to be represented by council, which was cheerfully agreed to; and we all prepared for the trial without delay, having, on the part of the institution, engaged the services of a loquacious gentleman in the same class, who was willing and every way qualified to do us justice. The jury were perfect Solomons. They were duly seated, and the case opened with a speech of unusual length and variety, from our complaining opponent, which was succeeded by an equally able one in reply, from our attorney. The jury, at last, were permitted to retire, and after extraordinary deliberation, returned their verdict in writing, declaring, as their united opinion, "That he ought to stay where he was for three months longer!" What arguments led to this unexpected conclusion, we never could exactly ascertain; but it was a woful disappointment to the unlucky plaintiff, who solemnly declared it "the most botched piece of work that ever happened since the creation of the world," and "the foolishest jury that ever got stuck together."

Under the constant use of medicine, this man has considerably improved, and, of late, has shown some disposition to become useful. A recovery is even yet possible, though we think it exceedingly doubtful, and have the strongest reasons to fear that his derangement must be permanently established.

Mr. V———, the state's attorney in the above interesting trial, may also, be very properly mentioned. He is a singular compound of good nature and self-esteem, with a strong leaning towards eccentricity, and originality. His derangement has existed for a number of years, and is said to have been caused by disappointed love, on which occasion his brain was sadly perplexed. Amongst other qualifications, he is a writer of some notoriety in this institution, where his productions have been quite numerous, upon a variety of subjects, more especially freemasonry, and the arts and sciences in general; no doubt very extraordinary and interesting, if they could be read. Altogether, he is a clever fellow, in his way; quite affable and accommodating in his disposition; and always ready to do any one an accommodation, when he has it in his power. He is engaged with us for a series of years, on what he considers a highly favorable contract, and with a little watching, is an industrious and quite an useful man. He has opened a subscription for the erection of a "National Sanctuary," and is very anxious to obtain subscribers.

HOMICIDICAL INSANITY.

The following case, though somewhat long, we hope will be interesting, as an instance of that fearful species of Moral Insanity, which in jurisprudence, has received the appellation of HOMICIDAL.—This is a form of mental derangement in which there are few or no delusions, or hallucinations, and apparently, very little impairment of the intellectual faculties; but a morbid condition and perversion of the moral sense and social affections, feelings and propensities. Persons thus diseased may be capable of reasoning, particularly when calm; but under any excitement, the moral alienation entirely misleads and perverts the judgment, and consequences can neither be estimated nor regarded. Directed by an impulse, which is headlong and irresistable, the unfortunate subject of this disease may be hurried to deeds of outrage and blood, which will shock the stoutest hearts, and excite the strongest sympathies of human nature. We know that it is exceedingly difficult effectually to distinguish between vice and perverseness, the legitimate consequences of disease: but, certainly, there is such a distinction, and is clearly marked by the following strong and remarkable features, want of motive; unconsciousness and indifference as to the crime; admission of the fact, with the absence of grief, remorse, repentence or satisfaction.

To illustrate this important definition we give the history of this case, with all important circumstances in detail, as taken down from the simple narrative of the person who is the subject of this peculiar form of disease, now entirely free from excitement, and apparently in the enjoyment of reason, at least upon all the ordinary matters of life. A modest and diffident female, with a pensive and imploring countenance, and perhaps the last person that would be selected as a homicide in our halls. Her body is now wasting to the tomb, and her spirit must ere long ascend to God who gave it.

"I was born in the State of Maryland, and am forty-four years of age. From my earliest recollection, I was of a quiet and steady turn of mind and have seen nothing but hardship, and trouble all my days. I was married in my twenty-fourth year, in opposition to the will of my parents, but was devoutedly attached to the man of my choice. He received an injury in his shoulder sometime after our marriage, and was in the habit of assisting him with his work on the farm. I worked uncommonly hard at making fence, burning brush, and clearing up the land. The stooping, heat of the sun, and hot fires of the burning brush, appeared to affect my head very much. On a certain day, while engaged in the field, I was suddenly struck almost blind, and felt an uncommon stiffness in the back of my neck, accompanied with a drawing down of the skin over my eyes, and forehead, and the sensation of tight cords passing through my head. It was some time before I felt able to return to the house and attend to my domestic duties. I had lost much sleep for two or three weeks previous to this attack, and felt troubled in my mind, on account of our difficulties in getting along in the world. On the following night I was greatly distressed, and thought somebody was coming to kill me. I could not go to sleep, and by morning, I believe I was completely deranged. I continued out of my head for three or four months, and suffered much distress and anxiety of mind, from the apprehension that I was to be killed; but through the attention of the physicians and kindness of my husband, I began to recover by degrees, and eventually got entirely well.

"After I got well, we concluded to come out to the State of Ohio. We were very poor, and the journey was accomplished on foot. It was in March, and the three children and myself suffered greatly from cold and fatigue. Husband had taken to drink, and we had hard work to get along; and in the month of November following, I had another attack of derangement. I forgot to tell you, that my health began to fail previous to my first attack, (Amenorrhœa & Leucorrhœa,) and I think this brought on the second attack also. I continued ill for several months, during which time we removed to the north west part of the state. I did not know what was to become of me; my distress was so great, that I longed to make my escape, and hide where no mortal could find me. We again had to make our journey on foot, and I cried and fretted most of the road. I wished I had never been born, and often said to my husband, 'there's my poor children, and I've got to go to hell for having them:' he would scold me for talking so, but I could not help it, such dreadful thoughts would come into my head in spite of all I could do. I sometimes tried to drive them out of my head, by beating it against the fence. Frequently it appeared to my mind as if it would rain hail and fire upon my head, and I should be beaten to pieces with thunder and lightning; and when I did once in a great while fall into a troubled sleep, I would suddenly start up in a fright, with my hands before my face to keep the awful danger off. It was all, however, respecting myself and the children; I did not think that anything was to happen their father.

"At this time husband was sometimes a little crabbed, but he could not get any liquor and did not get drunk. I was as much attached to him as ever, for he was a kind and good man to me. I don't think two persons could have been fonder of each other. At last, however, I took an idea into my poor head that he was going to kill me! This painful idea continued to torment my mind for two or three weeks. It was dreadful. We had lived together so many years, and why should he want to kill poor me?

"One Sunday, I was full of this idea the whole morning, and about 12 o'clock ran off on the wild prairie, where I wandered during the whole afternoon, and did not think of returning till near night. I met husband coming after me, with one of the children, and we all returned to the house together. I got the supper and the family went to bed as usual. I could not sleep. It was a terrible night to me. About day-break I got up and built a fire. Something appeared to tell me, there was dreadful work to be done. I was very much agitated when the thought came into my head that I must kill him; but my mind was so much excited that I cannot tell any body exactly how I felt. The same thought came into my head in the night, but I succeeded in putting it down. I had a confused notion that I was born to be lost; it appeared like a hidden mystery; but the thought that I was born to be lost was uppermost. At the same time I supposed he would be saved. I often thought that every body was made righteous beside myself.

"I stood alone by the fire. All were sound asleep. Husband partly wakened when I first got out of bed; he merely opened his eyes and then went to sleep again immediately. I knew he was sound asleep, and I felt I must kill him, to save myself. I accordingly went to where the children lay, and drew out a broad axe from under their bed, that he had borrowed from a neighbor. I went right to his bed, with the axe in my hand, trembling like a leaf. He was laying on his right side, with his neck bare, and I immediately struck him the one fatal lick across his neck! He kind o' struggled, and partly raised himself to his knees, and wakened the children, a dying. My daughter came running to me in a fright, and took the axe out of my hands, screaming that I had murdered father! and sprung to him, and kissed him on his forehead, crying, "oh! he's my poor, poor father!"

"As quick as they could get their clothes on, the children ran off to the neighbors. I sat down, and staid in the house alone, until the neighbors came.—A gentleman first looked in at the door, and asked me what I had done. I said (evasively,) that I had not done any thing—that I had to go to hell, and I would have something to go there for. He came in and said he must tie me. I told him I did not want to run off, and would go along with him without tying. He first took me to the next house, and in three days they sent me to jail. I was as distracted as ever; and what I had done gave me no relief nor satisfaction. I think it was as much as three months before I began to come to myself. I was not tried for the murder, which I never attempted to deny, but sent here to the lunatic asylum. I supposed they would hang me, and did not expect any thing else, for a long time. My mind now appears to be clear, and I want to go home to my children. I feel much better, tho' very weak. I am thankful they brought me here. My mind is altered now about going to hell: I have hopes, and think when I die, I shall go to rest. I like to go to your evening worship, very much when I am able to walk up stairs," &c.

To our question, "well, Mrs. S., you say your mind is now clear: don't you know it was wrong for you to kill your husband?" "Yes, doctor, I know it was wrong." And are you not sorry you did it?—This question appeared to touch the very cord that had been so long diseased. Her eye flashed; the pupils contracted; and her whole frame shook, as she raised herself up, and emphatically replied, "No, doctor, no! I'm not sorry for it! It was God's will—why should I be sorry? He made me do it, to show me His power—and I was willing to do something to go to hell for!" It was but the flash of a moment, and all was calm as before. Her next remark was in reference to her general health, and perfectly rational.*

RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

Through the blessing of Almighty God, we have been permitted to continue our regular family worship every evening in the week, and the reading of a short sermon on the Lord's day; not only without interruption from the patients, who, to the number of thirty or forty, usually attend; but with the most happy influence and positive benefit to many of our patients and the large family of officers, attendants and assistants, connected with the institution. At first, it is true, we had some doubts concerning the necessity and propriety of daily religious exercise for the insane mind; and the difficulty of conducting the service appropriately appeared great; but we felt constrained to make the experiment, through a strong sense of duty; and the experience of two years has abundantly satisfied our mind upon the subject.

In an institution of this description, we have an extensive family to govern, as well as to provide for the daily wants of the insane; and, merely as a moral regulation, the daily worship of God is of the first consequence to inspire confidence and respect, and to harmonize the feelings; but above all this, we are fully prepared to add our testimony to the importance and value of religious exercise with the insane, as a special means of grace, well calculated to bring light and wisdom to the mind, relief and peace to the heart and conscience. By many of the convalescing, it is estimated as a blessed privilege; and in respect to them, there can be no doubt of its propriety. We have never seen any evil effects from the practice, with the more diseased and unsteady; and when we find many of the positively deranged who are anxious to accompany the rest, and half an hour in social worship, and not only conduct themselves with propriety and order, but sincerely thank us for the privilege, and we are satisfied, that in many instances the soul has been refreshed, though there may have been but an imperfect and beclouded view of a merciful Redeemer.

When the bell rings for worship, they gather in from the different galleries, each several class accompanied by its proper attendant, and all are regularly seated, without strife or confusion; males on the left, and females on the right of the superintendent's table; and there is the most respectful attention when the blessed Bible is opened, and the words of eternal life are read. There, amid the group upon the right, is the countenance of one who has been a witness to many sorrows. Upon the opposite side, sparkle the wild eyes of a stronger mind in ruins; and directly in front, is the pale form of the female homicide, who, with one awful stroke, severed the head from the body of her sleeping husband!—all ready and willing to unite in the praise of God, and, in greater or less degrees, enjoy the spiritual blessings of the gospel of righteousness and peace.

In the wreck of mind and loss of reason, perhaps the very last ideas which remain will be something of the reverence and respect which is due to the "Maker of our frame;" and it is not at all uncommon to see the aged and demented christian reverently bend the knees, when years of darkness, to all human appearance, have shut out all correct knowledge of earth and heaven.

*Upon this subject the Directors remark:

The Superintendent has reported the symptoms and progress of recovery in several highly interesting cases, showing how far the intellectual and moral faculties may be disordered, and even suspended, and yet, by proper treatment, restored to healthy action. The last case reported, is one of rare occurrence. It explains the state of mind existing in certain cases of moral insanity leading to homicide, and probably always existing in suicide, where no previous alienation had been observed. Here, the patient is, at present, perfectly sane on all subjects, except the one relating to the homicidal act. On that, the perversion of sentiment remains unchanged. It is a case of moral insanity, distinctly marked, exhibiting in the strongest light the effect of perverted sentiment and feeling in controling physical action. No malice or ill-will previously existed; on the contrary, tender affection. The act was not denied; no regret followed, notwithstanding the nature of the deed appeared to have been understood. Every circumstance proves it to have been the effect of an uncontrolable impulse, placing it beyond the guide of reason. So far as the intellectual faculties were concerned, the act was irresistible.

This case, in connection with numerous others of similar character on record, may contribute in divesting human actions, under peculiar circumstances, of that odium and criminality, too often attached to those of a mysterious nature, or such as have been perpetrated without apparent motive.

To medical jurisprudence belongs the analysis of motives and causes of criminal action, and the application of such analysis to the prinples of justice. Every case, therefore, having reference to this intricate subject, unconnected with general insanity, is worthy of preservation. The present affords a striking instance of disorder of the moral faculties prevailing over the intellectual, and must afford a subject deserving the consideration of the most profound medical jurist.

EXPLOSION OF AN "INFERNAL MACHINE."—Some time during the last summer, a common soap-box, directed to "Peter Weed, Wilkes Durkee, care of Mr. Kelsey, Birmingham," Oakland co., was left, by some unknown person, at the Eagle Tavern, in this city. It has remained, and almost unnoticed, in the baggage room ever since. On Saturday night, however, Mr. Lawson, the keeper of the hotel, having occasion to be in the baggage room, tossed over the box with his foot, when an explosion ensued which knocked the siding off from the room—tore away the partitions—broke in the sashes of six or eight windows, tore up the floor—several of the joice—and severely injured Mr. L., particularly his hands, from which he will lose one or two of his fingers.

An examination of the fragments resulted in the discovery of what had constituted a very strong oaken box, capable of holding two or three lbs. of powder, which had been fastened together with strong iron bands. Attached to this box, was a steel spring, to which appeared to have been attached a small hammer, which was doubtless constructed to strike upon a percussion cap, the explosion of which would communicate with the oaken deposite of powder: the whole doubtless designed to explode upon the opening of the box which encased it.

The explosion was as destructive as would have been the explosion of a keg of powder. It is a miracle that Mr. L. was not killed upon the spot. Measures will doubtless be at once taken to solve the mystery which now attaches to the affair; and if murder was designed, to bring the wretches to punishment.

THE NORTH EASTERN BOUNDARY.—Governor Davis, of Massachusetts, sent a message to the Legislature on Friday, accompanying a resolution of the Legislature of Maine, in which he expresses his fears that there is no disposition on the part of Great Britain to settle this long disputed question in regard to which the terms of the treaty of '83 are plain and intelligible.

McLEOD.—The New York correspondent of the National Intelligencer states that McLeod's bondmen have withdrawn his bail, and that the owner of the Caroline has commenced suit against him, and he is required to find bail for twelve thousand dollars.

GEN. HARRISON.—The Harrison party in the Pennsylvania Legislature held a meeting on Tuesday and appointed the Speakers of the Senate and of the House to receive General Harrison, should the President elect come to Harrisburgh.

GEN. HARRISON.—Arrangements have been made by the citizens of Washington to receive the President elect in a suitable manner. The Mayor of the city is to deliver the welcoming address.

Many doubt the accuracy of the last news from China. The next arrival will be looked for with deep concern, as we have large interests in this country, which must be affected by the result between England and the Chinese.

McLEOD.—Accounts from Lockport say that McLeod still remains in jail, to protect himself from popular violence. He is said to be largely a defaulter in his capacity of sheriff.

There has been a shock of an earthquake and a terrible thunder storm in and around London; Spitalfields spire is destroyed; so is that of Streatham's church.

It is said that the British are fortifying Halifax in the most imposing and formidable manner.

RELIGIOUS REVIVALS.—The leaders of the several religious persuasions, are actively engaged at present, in making converts to their faith. The success that has attended the exertions of Doctor Meriarty, has awakened those of opposite persuasions to action. We have heard it stated that Dr. M. in a short time converted upwards of three hundred to the Catholic faith; and that the Rev. Mr. Chambers, Mr. Boardman, and others, have been successful in converting many to the Protestant faith. On one evening of last week, a reverend gentleman, whose name we have unfortunately forgotten, preached at a church in the lower part of the city, against "Romanism," and we are informed, that during his sermon he was interrupted by a female, a believer of the sect he was preaching against, who arose in the church, and told him he was uttering falsehoods, but the reverend gentleman was but little moved, and continued. During the latter part of the week, it was announced that he would preach at Broad street church, (Chambers,) on Sunday evening, and the result was the large building being crowded to excess, with many persons around the outside, some expecting a disturbance, and others anxious but unable, to gain admittance. During the sermon or lecture, several men among the auditory, at some assertions of the reverend gentlemen, exclaimed aloud that he was speaking what was false, and for a time it was feared serious results would ensue, but the calmness of the preacher, which deserves commendation, prevented any farther outbreak, by his not paying any particular notice to the exclamations.—Will not some of our religious friends furnish us with communications on this matter—we should esteem it as a kindness, and will promptly lay all truths before the public.—Phil. Chronicle.

THE DISCOVERY.—The N. O. Bulletin says:—"On the death of our fellow citizen, Nicholas Girod, his large estate was administered upon a vacant succession, as he died without heirs in the State and was supposed to have left no will. Within a few days past, however, discoveries were made in rumaging the contents of an old desk sold as part of the estate, which may lead to a very different disposition of the property from what was anticipated. The desk alluded to was purchased at public auction by a gentlemen of this city, and on examination was found to contain in a secret drawer, due bills signed by the deceased, giving to certain individuals, corporations and public institutions, large bequest. We have heard the following legacies mentioned:—To the city of New Orleans, for building an Asylum for French Orphans, $100,000; to the Orphan Asylum, $30,000; to Second Municipality, $100,000; to Charity Hospital, $30,000; to E. Moutamat, $50,000; to E. Mazareau, $20,000; to Mechoud, $20,000; to Denis Prieur, $41,000."

FROM THE OREGON.—We have interesting intelligence from this far country, but the state of our columns to-day precludes its insertion in detail. The mission under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church was in a very prosperous condition, and since our last advices about one thousand of the natives have become converts to Christianity. It is worthy of notice that when the ship Lausanna entered Columbia River, with the reinforcement, under the charge of the Rev. Jason Lee, Mr. Daniel Lee, his nephew, was addressing a congregation of natives on the bank of that noble stream. The meeting of the Messrs. Lee, after so long a separation, was one of high interest.

The mission packet-ship Lausanne was to leave the Sandwich Islands on the 15th of October, for New York.

The corner stone of a new Roman Catholic Chapel was laid on the 6th of August, at the Sandwich Islands, His Majesty, Gov. Kekuanasa, and the officers of the French frigate La Danaide, being present.

AN ATTEMPT TO FORFEIT THE UNITED STATES BANK CHARTER.—We learn that on application of Mr. Andrew Miller, a grocer of this city, and last year a candidate for State Senate, the Bank of the United States has been cited to appear before Judge King on the 15th inst. to show cause why its charter shall not be forfeited, for refusing to pay him specie for certain notes, amounting to some twenty or thirty dollars.—Bicknell.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.—In the House of Representatives, at Harrisburg, on Friday the following resolution was submitted, Resolved, That a committee of—— be appointed to act in conjunction with a similar committee from the Senate, should that body appoint one, to investigate the affairs and condition of the Bank of the United States, and report the result of said examination to this House—and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.—ib.

OUTRAGE.—The Rochester N. Y. Democrat gives a full account of the seizure of the schooner Llewellyn of that port by the British authorities of Presque Isle in July last, and the maltreatment of her officers and crew, remarking that these outrages demand the prompt interference of our government.

An article in the London Quarterly expresses the opinion that Patrick Henry must have been equal to Chatham and Mirabeau.

MONEY MARKET.

SUSPENSION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

U. S. BANK.—At three o'clock yesterday, the Cashier gave notice to those persons who had made demands upon the Bank, for various large sums amounting to nearly $100,000, that they could not be supplied. The Cashier, Mr. Lardner, upon announcing the inability of the Bank to continue specie payments, appeared deeply affected, and exclaimed that the continued calls from Banks, Brokers and the East, had exhausted their means, and as there was no evidence but that they would be still subject to the same want of confidence, they "might as well quit first as last." The announcement of the suspension has caused the greatest excitement, and rumors and speculations as to the effect upon the city Banks, are rife among all classes. The Banks were represented at a special meeting last night; the result is that they will continue specie payments This resolution was unanimous, and the "monster" is at last separated from them.

At last this ill-starred institution has met its fate. It would have been much better for the city and State if it had not resumed so prematurely, but the mandate of the Governor and Legislature could not be resisted, and we now see the sad consequences. It is evident that the Bank did not anticipate the continued run upon her; she has paid on an average $100,000 per day since the resumption, making $2,000,000 that has left her vaults, most of which has gone to New York.

It is impossible to anticipate the result of this important era. The credit of not only the city but the State is involved, and will suffer in common with that of the Bank. The recent loan of 800,000 dollars to the State has not yet been paid, although subscribed; and on the part of the United States Bank cannot be complied with, unless the notes of the institution are again the circulation. The Bank has no other means to provide for it. If the remainder of the Banks agree to suspend, doubtless we shall see the same state of things as for thirteen months past. But we much doubt if they will longer link their fate with her. Nearly all the city Banks have suffered severely, and have been drained of a large proportion of their specie.

Yesterday there was a general settlement of balances, and in the "melee" a heavy load was thrown upon the United States Bank. We cannot contemplate calmly the prospect before us.—In financial affairs the whole system appears to be fast dissolving, and ruin and dishonor to be coming upon us. In the event of a general suspension in this State, the Baltimore and Virginia Banks will not be able to retain the position they have recently taken.

Exchange on New York will keep pace with the panic. The bill holders of the U. S. Bank need anticipate no loss, as long as the stock is worth one farthing—they will receive the full face of them. United States stock sold yesterday at 45, seller 30 days.—Phil. Chronicle, 5th inst.

THE BANKS.—Yesterday a tremendous rush was made at the different banks in the city, by all classes and descriptions of persons, from the millioniare, to the fish market loafer. Every one that had a five dollar note was jostling and crowding his neighbors for a chance at the counter, anxious to be served with specie. Corns were mashed, noses skinned, pockets picked, and we should not be surprised to hear that some ribs were broken. At the United States Bank, Mr. Biddle's fame and name were subject to the deepest execrations, and many jokes were also bandied about, having allusion to the "Great Financier." We looked into most of the banking institutions, during the forenoon, where many a scene was presented, pathetic as well as ludicrous. We noticed several poor, honest, industrious women, who had earned their money by hard work, but who were so unfortunate as to possess bills of the denomination of tens, and, when refused payment in specie, burst in tears and retired broken-hearted. They had slaved themselves day after day, and night after night, to earn the means whereby to live—had worn themselves to mere skeletons for the sake of providing for their children—had toiled and drudged, late and early, and garnered their gains in what proved to them nothing more than worthless rags. We pitied them from the bottom of our hearts, but alas! we could not relieve them, having been disappointed ourselves in procuring silver. Much misery and distress has been created by the action of the banks, in refusing to cash notes of a higher denomination than fives', and when or where it will end time only will show.

It was stated, on the best authority, last evening, that all the banks would suspend the payment of specie to-day.—Phil. Chron. 6th inst.

THE ACADIA.—The snow storm on Monday was very severe at the east.—The steam ship Acadia left at two o'clock, and the storm commenced very soon after. She was off the Light at 3 P. M., when she discharged her pilot and proceeded to sea. The snow storm continued throughout the night. There were rumors in Boston, late in the evening, that she had put back, but nothing certain was known. The Boston Daily Advertiser says that the Acadia takes about 30,000 letters, and the amount of exchange, it is said, is more than ever taken by one vessel from America before. The number of newspapers must be very large, several wagon loads having been sent on board.

REVIVAL OF RELIGION.—A powerful revival of religion is now in progress in this place in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. About sixty conversions have taken place within the last ten days and of the persons converted, forty have been added to the Church. Great excitement prevails, In all the neighboring towns, the Lord seems to be pouring out his Spirit. At Wilmington, an astonishing revival has taken place and is still going on. A good work we understand is begun at Franklin: and indeed, from all quarters we hear that the people are anxiously inquiring, "Men and brethren, what must we do?"—Leb. Star.

PRIVATE BANKING.—Mr. John L. Harris, of Lynching, Va., has petitioned the legislature of that State for a charter as private banker, with a capital of $220,000; and he proposes to place himself under the provisions which apply to other banking institutions, of making regular reports to the Executive, and of subjecting his affairs at any time to the scrutiny of Executive commissioners.

THE EXPLOSION AT DETROIT.—A man named Warren, now a resident in Upper Canada, is believed to be the author and contriver of the infernal machine which exploded lately at Detroit. Jealousy is the alleged cause, one of the individuals to whom the box was addressed being suspected by Warren. The matter is in the hands of the authorities.

☞THE PITTSBURGH CHRISTIAN ADVOC. AGAIN.—A neighbor of ours, a worthy mem of the Methodist Episcopal Church, happen to see the paper containing our former rema on the Pittsburgh Advocate, stated, in substan that we had hitched our horse to the wrong ra —we would have our hands full of Br. Cook. are beginning to think he understood the mat pretty well. Br. Cook appears to be rathe hard case; and principally from the conside tion, that he does not appear at all times know when he is beaten. He is a tolerable c rect exemplification of Goldsmith's school mast "In arguing, too, the parson owned his skill, For even though vanquish'd he could argue sti

After a preparation of several weeks, Cook makes a lengthy reply to us in his pape the 3d instant, in which we have to dodge missiles like a duck in a hail storm. Now, do not think it worth while animadverting up all his erroneous positions and inferences, there are some things, in this long-hatched a cle, in relation to ☞"Mr. Springer," wh may deserve a passing notice.

1. The first we shall call attention to, is t heresy matter. On this subject, Br. Cook marks:

"He says we slandered him in saying we h heard of a Rev. Mr. Springer who had publi denied that men are called by the Holy Ghost preach the gospel. We plead not guilty. had heard what we stated, and did not doubt because the impression from some other sou had previously reached us. We have conver with our informant since, who is of age and c answer for himself. As Mr. Springer, howev denies he ever uttered such a sentiment, or t he holds it, we will with cheerfulness accord him the best right of knowing his own views the subject, and suppose our friend may hims have been misinformed."

Reader, look at the casuistry of this artic This editor publishes a palpable falsehood in columns, going to slander the christian repu tion of his neighbor, and now he "pleads guilty," because, forsooth, he had heard some o else utter the untruth. A few years since, ju such a case occurred in this neighboorhood; itinerant preacher had circulated reports wh were not true, to injure the character of a m ister of the Methodist Protestant Church, a when confronted and called on for the proof his slander, he stated he had heard so. He w reminded by the injured party that a christi minister was not at liberty to give currency tales of scandal, until by examination he fou them to be true. But the other took the po tion here assumed, that it was not wrong circulate what he had heard, &c. Now, fr the understanding we have of the precepts the gospel, a man who will give currency to famatory reports, gathered from the breath slander, is equal in depravity to him who origi ate falsehoods to injure his fellow. If Br. Co will examine the jurisprudence of his own Sta if we are not mistaken, he will find it does n allow a citizen, when prosecuted for slander, give the truth in evidence, going upon the su position that it is slander to state even defam tory facts, when they are not called for. recommend him also to look at Mr. Wesley evil speaking, which, we think, may help ideas some little. However, in charity, we w concede that when our brother published charge of heresy against us, he may have thoug it was true. But, as he is, no doubt, satisfi by this time, that these reports are false, w does he not, like a gentleman and a christia acknowledge his error, and frankly unsay wh he has said against us?

2. The editor of the Advocate makes anoth effort to be witty, by effecting to discard wi Says he:

"Our attempts at wit, it is alleged, 'is som thing only fit to be addressed to low minds a filthy tastes.' We do not profess to be witt We may be tempted to try this weapon som times, but we are certain we should never attem it except in addressing minds so low, and tast so unrefined, that our awkwardness cannot detected."

Very great compliment this upon your reade indeed. If this, and what Dr. Bond, of t New York Advocate, utters, be correct, when says of some of his most talented brethren the ministry, they are nothing but "metaphysic tadpoles," (fine classical style this,) it is hi time you were making efforts to raise the cha acter of your church. We have not, howev quite so unfavorable an opinion of your reade Br. Cook, as your account of them would see to justify.

3. The editor, in discoursing about chur property, alluding to the secession at Pittsburg asserts that the "number left exceeded the nu ber which went out from us." The assertio that the episcopal party had the majority, w made at the time of the secession, by the cler all through the country, and was repeated open court when the property question was bei investigated, and responded to by the judge the bench, who stated it was very evident th the seceders had the majority, from the fact th they were able, on all occasions, to elect their ficers,&c. This very consideration of the secedi party having the majority, and thus holding t seals of the corporation, ruled the case. A now to parry off the charge of an attempt cheat the people out of their property, on t part of the itinerant clergy, Br. Cook re-asse what legal investigation has decided incorre right in the face of scores who know better. Why is this? Can it be done to maintain the character abroad, with the thousands of reade of the Advocate who know nothing of the ma ter only what they see stated in its columns?

4. Our Pittsburgh friend seems to be ve much distressed about some plain epithets v have used, and makes a formidable parade them. We are sorry that he is thus afflicte But still we cannot well avoid giving such offen under the circumstances. As we have n learned that kind of refinement which induc the modern priest to tell the sinners of his co gregation, if they did not repent, they wou "go to a place that was too bad to be named he ministers and members of the Meth- rotestant Church will abide by the senti- t forth in the paragraph quoted, so far as concerned, and our influence can reach, apons of warfare' shall be laid aside and fields shall be assiduously cultivated.— e will further cheerfully admit, that the list Protestants are a Christian Church, at them with all those christian courte- ich are due from one denomination to r. he "News" of Hillsborough, Ohio, speaks revival of religion in that place, at a pro- ed meeting of some eighteen days' continu- , during the Christmas holidays, by the opal Methodist brethren, at which 110 added to the church. The editor highly ends the example of thus cheating the out of his holidays. If there be any one of the year more particularly dedicated to ervice of old forkey, than an other, it is the stmas holidays, so called. We, too, com- l the practice of thus breaking in on his ned time, and appropriating it to the servi- f religion.

IE PRESS.—We are sorry to see a portion e press endeavoring to excuse the Dayton crats by attempting to throw all the blame e late riots in that place, on the abolition- and negroes. A press which could thus titute itself, ought to be sent where the olic bishop, of New York, in a late speech e the Council of that city, in relation to school funds, indicated his opponents might when he stated: "If the Protestants do not our purgatory they may go farther, if they sc, and fare worse."

UNITED STATES BANK.—The following preamble and resolutions were passed by the Directors of the Bank of the United States:

"FEBRUARY 4, 1841.

"At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Bank of the United States, held at the Banking House, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, the Bank of the United States, in compliance with its pledge to the public, has made a fair and bona fide effort to resume and maintain specie payments, having, since the 15th of January last, paid out an amount little, if at all, short of six millions of dollars, in coin or specie funds: And whereas, the effort to maintain specie payments by this Bank, has been rendered abortive by the intentianal accumulation, and extraordinary enforcement of its instant liabilities: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Bank is under the necessity for the present, of suspending specie payments.

"Resolved, That every exertion will be made by the Directors, to collect the debts, and convert into cash, the assets of the Bank for the purpose of resuming payments in specie, at the earliest practicable moment.

"Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be published.

"Extracts from the minutes.

"A. LARDNER, Cashier."

Why are men like cattle? Because, when one gets on the lift the whole herd immediately commence goring it, as in the case of the U.S.Bank.

We give in this, and our former paper, large extracts from the second Report of the Superintendent of the Ohio "Lunatic Asylum." In perusing the history of these cases of moral and mental aberation, we have virtually realized the truth of Solomon's aphorism: "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting." Our sympathies and moral feelings have been far more interested and improved than they would have been by mixing with the gay circles and festive scenes of life.

We gave it as our opinion, last year, that Dr. Awl possessed a genius which particularly fitted him for the superintendency of such an institution. We were sorry to see some attacks afterwards which we feared were merely political, calling in question his ability to do justice to those afflicted children of Adam. For we care not what a man's politics or religion is, if he possess a liberal mind, and have talents to administer relief to the unfortunate; he is the person we desire to see placed in a situation to be useful.—The large extracts which we have given from the Dr.'s Report will certainly satisfy our readers that he possesses the ability to understand the cases submitted to his care, and that he is attentive to their several pecularities.

We call particular attention to the case of Homicadical, or moral insanity, in this number. Ministers of religion who have to do with the moral character of church members, should pay particular attention to this subject, without which they will not be prepared to make a proper estimate of many cases that may come under their notice. Every pastor of a congregation should read Dr. Rush on the "Diseases of the Human Mind." Such study will not only qualify him to give suitable counsel on many important occasions, but it will prepare him properly to appreciate many afflicting cases, and to afford his sympathy, which would otherwise receive his condemnation. In our church relations we have come to the knowledge of several monomaniac jealousies, which were of course without the least foundation in fact, and which ultimated in the ruin of the families concerned. We are sorry to say that the want of skill, or information, on the part of pastors who attend to the morality of these cases, tended to produce a state of desperation on the part of the monomaniacs.

It will be seen by articles in this paper that the banks of Philadelphia, after a specie paying career of nineteen days, have again suspended cashing their notes. In thus doing, by the explicit law of Pennsylvania, they have all forfeited their charters. The public will look to the issue of this affair with much solicitude. As the legislature is now in session, some action upon this subject will, no doubt, shortly be had. We should suppose the public good would call for the exercise of lenity towards these institutions, on the part of that body. Many a business man, if pressed under embarrassed circumstances will be ruined, but if borne with, might recover from his difficulties. So in regard to the banks.

In relation to the respectful invitation of the President of the Ohio District, in his communication in this paper, to attend their conference at Springfield, in August next, we have to say when we heard of its appointment at that place, owing to its convenience, we had thoughts of trying to attend, though it is somewhat uncertain whether we shall be able to accomplish it or not, owing to the confining nature of our editorial duties.

The last New York Luminary reports the Methodist Protestant Church in Sullivan street, as in a prosperous condition,—and the Sabbath School as increasing in interest. The whole of Harper's Family Library, consisting of 129 vols., have recently been procured for the benefit of the school.

THE WEATHER.—Since our last we have had a week of as cold weather as we have had this winter. The ice did not freeze quite so thick, probably, as some time back, but owing to the keen westwardly wind, which was constantly blowing for several days, the cold effected the system severely. It has became milder.

We are called on to explain what we mean by the emancipation of the white man. We mean his deliverance from political or ecclesiastical bondage, wherever these exert a control over him.

ECLIPSE.—The Philadelphia Chronicle states that on the evening of the 5th instant, time of the eclipse of the moon, the night was radiant with beauty at that place; here, it was cloudy with a slight drizzle of rain.

The New York Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, will hold its next session in New York city, in the church in Attorney st., commencing the 2d Wednesday in March.

☞ The OLIVE BRANCH and NEW YORK LUMINARY have both animadverted upon the difficulty between the Protestant and us. We have a slight personal acquaintance with these editors, and as far as this acquaintance went, it prepossessed us much in favor of both the gentlemen. We also esteem both their papers as ably conducted and useful journals: And have been waiting for a suitable opportunity to tell our readers that the Luminary is much improved under the editorial management of its present incumbent. What they have said, in relation to this matter has not in the slightest degree interrupted our good feelings towards either of them; yet, we think on mature reflection, they will see that their statements have done us some injustice.

The Olive Branch represents us as "sparring about trifles," or "small matters." The Luminary says, we have been "disagreeing about trifles." Now, if these statements be correct, we both deserve reprobation. But we very decidedly differ in opinion with these worthy editors in relation to this matter. And what we complain of, is, that they did not give the facts of the case, so that their readers might be able to form an independent opinion, and not have to take the thing for granted on their mere say so.

In order to place the merits of this question, in its proper light, we will propose an inquiry to our brother of the Olive Branch: Suppose that while you were handling the "giant hierarchy with a rough hand," that your brother of the Luminary, of whom you have made so many commendatory notices, should step forward and put a weapon in the hands of your adversary with which to beat you. Would you call this a "small matter?" Such, precisely, do we consider the treatment of the Protestant to us. If, what it said, had been said in connection with any other subject, we should not, probably, have noticed it. But making such an invidious reference to us, under the circumstances, we tho't both merited and called for the reproof which we administered. And this was not given in a 'moment of excitement,'—for we have not been at all excited on the subject,—but deliberately; and it is not probable that we shall see cause to repent of it,—though we do regret that the occasion ever occurred.

The above is all the objection we have to the remarks of the Luminary; but, in addition, the Olive Branch has done us much injustice by representing us as "sneering at the youth of the editor of the Protestant." Certainly we never intended to sneer at youth; because, we know there is neither merit nor demerit in the mere circumstance of age. It is no crime to be young, nor is there any virtue in advanced life, abstractly speaking. It was the acts of the youth, and not his age we rebuked. The Luminary is correct when it says, "Br. S. does not dispise his youth."

Now, Br. Norris, let us beg of you, whenever, hereafter, you feel it to be your duty to pass a censure upon any man's reputation, who has any claims to respectability, be it ever so slight, to always give the facts upon which you predicate your censure, that your readers may be able to judge of the matter for themselves; otherwise, should you be wrong in your views, you will injure the person who may be the subject of your condemnation, in the estimation of all who confide in your opinions.

But we repeat it,—these remarks of our esteemed brethren shall not interrupt our relations with them in the slightest degree. For we cannot for a moment suppose they intended us any wrong. And their general style is quite respectful towards us.

PITTSBURGH CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.—Br. Cook has indicated his intention to exchange with us. Very well, we shall be glad to hear from you weekly. But in order to get along together we will have to agree to disagree. We have exchanged with the Tennessee Advocate nearly ever since our commencement, and so far we have not had a spar with it. And it has treated us with more candor than our own folks have on some occasions. For instance, its former editor did our church much injustice in an editorial, which seemed to be authorized from a communication, from one of our own brethren, found in our columns. When this communication was replied to, and the matter set right, by another of our correspondents, we called the attention of the Advocate to the reply, by marking it with a pen, in the paper we sent to him. Upon which, like a christian gentleman, he acknowledged his error, and published so much of the article as set the matter right.

WYANDOTT EXECUTION.—We see by the Bucyrus Democrat that the view we took of this execution is sustained by Mr. J. Scott, Representative from Crawford, who writes a letter to the editor of the State Journal, correcting him on that subject, and which is republished in the Democrat. Mr. Scott says, the account of the execution was written by one of the Wyandott nation. We suspected at the time, from the style, it was written by our old friend and acquaintance, Wm. Walker, than whom no man in the State writes with more ease and elegance, and who is, or has been one of the Chiefs of that nation.

CORRECTION.—We stated in our last that 20 or more had joined the church at the Bethlehem quarterly meeting. We have since paid them a visit; but thirteen have united with the church. We do not rely so much on the great argument of numbers that we would falsify facts to avail ourself of such an argument. The meeting as stated, was a season of refreshment.

THE PHILANTHROPIST.—We have been in the regular receipt of the Philanthropist, for several weeks past. We presume the editor has again placed us on his list of exchanges, and accordingly we have entered him on ours. If he be agreed we will bury past difficulties, and begin good friends anew.

BAPTIST CHURCHES.—Both the Baptist churches in this town are favored with revivals of religion. Mr. Parr, of the 1st church, b ptized fifteen last Sabbath, and Mr. Miles, of the 2d church, some five or six on the Sabbath previous.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

Mr. Carpenter, of the Senate, on the 8th inst., made before that body the following statement of facts, in relation to the Dayton mob. Mr. Barnet, Senator from that county, admitted the statement to be correct, but said the proceedings alluded to have been decidedly disapproved by a large portion of the citizens of Dayton:

More than a year ago, Thomas Morris was written to by the Mayor, and fifty or more of the citizens of Dayton, the most of whom are not avowed abolitionists, to come to Dayton and deliver a public speech. It was expected that his speech would be on the political bearings of slavery. The incidents which resulted from this, and to which he (Mr. C.) had alluded, were as follows:

1. Thomas Morris entered Dayton, Saturday afternoon, January 23, 1841.
2. Hand-bills were circulated, giving notice that Mr. Morris would speak in the Court House that evening.
3. Mr. Morris was prevented from speaking by the mob.
4. The carriage in which Mr. Morris and friends rode, was attacked—whereupon he determined to leave town immediately.
5. When ready to set off, Mr. Morris and friends were attacked by the mob—the driver was knocked down, and the horses ran away with the carriage.
6. The house of Dr. Jewett, where Mr. Morris lodged, was assailed that night with filthy missiles.
7. Mr. Morris left town next morning, (Sunday.)
8. Sunday night the colored people were driven from their meeting house, and from a religious meeting.
9. A prayer meeting for the enslaved everywhere, had been for some time held in the city on the last Monday in each month. At the last meeting, it had been agreed to hold the next, at the house of Dr. Jewett. This meeting was not disturbed, but the house was soon after attacked—much of his property destroyed, and his life threatened, because a prayer meeting, which had been appointed a month before, was held at his house.
10. Soon after this attack upon Dr. Jewett's house, some young men went from the coffee house to the house of a colored man, in search of a woman of ill fame—not a white, but a yellow woman.
11. Not finding the woman, but forcibly making search, the affray and bloodshed followed.
12. The house of a colored man was subsequently burnt.
13. On the night of the 3d of February, the mob, about one hundred in number, drove three colored families from their beds and set their houses on fire, giving no time to the fugitives even to take the clothing necessary to shelter them from the inclemency of a winter night. One young man was driven out by the flames before he could get his clothes or money, which lay in the house; and, on his rushing in to recover his property, the ruffians shut the door upon him. It was only by a desperate struggle that he burst the door and escaped.

The House is still progressing with the State Bank bill. The Journal of the 13th instant, thinks that in three or four days the final question will be taken on its passage.

Rather discreditable sparring took place in the House on the 10th instant, between Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Bartley, which caused considerable excitement. The words, liar, scoundrel and dastard, were used by Mr. Bartley, conditionally, in reference to Mr. H.

The bill for the protection of religious societies was taken up on the 6th; Dr. Glover moved to have it recommitted to a committee of three, but his motion was negatived by a vote of 18 to 16; it was then laid on the table.

Dr. Glover is becoming quite an author it seems. Mr. Senator Bissell said in a speech before that body, they had "Glover on Banks; Glover on Campmeetings, and now Glover on Grogeries." We expect he is able to discuss this last subject with greater ability than either of the former.

It will be seen by reference to the remarks of Mr. Carpenter before the Senate, that the houses of three more colored families have been burned by the mob in Dayton, since we last noticed that subject. We have no language to express our contempt of a city which would permit such things. Savages would be humane gentlemen beside them.

We expect to be away from home to attend a quarterly meeting in Mt. Vernon on the 20th inst., near one week. We have injured our health by close application to our editorial duties for some eight weeks past, and must take relaxation. As letters will not be opened in our absence correspondents will have to exercise patience.

The counsel for Sarah Ann Davis, of Philadelphia, who was recently convicted of murder, have filed twenty-seven reasons why the defendant should have a new trial granted her.

"Wesleyan Methodist," is the name of a new monthly paper commenced at Utica, N. Y., by the seceders who have recently left the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Dr. Olin, on account of ill health, has resigned the Presidency of the Wesleyan University, and Dr. Bangs, of New York, is about to succeed him.

Gen. Harrison has been received in Baltimore and Washington city with much cordiality.

There are some doubts, on the part of the press, about the settlement of the Chinese question.

BANK SUSPENSIONS.—The result of the meeting of the officers of the Banks of Baltimore, held on Monday, 8th inst., was the adoption of a resolution, by an unanimous vote to suspend specie payments. The American says, this course was unavoidable, in view of the general suspension, which had previously taken place among the Banks of Philadelphia. On Saturday perhaps upwards of $100,000 in specie were drawn from the Banks of Baltimore by note holders and on drafts; and on yesterday morning a number of brokers and agents from the eastward stood ready to draw the coin, had not the determination to suspend interposed to prevent them. The Virginia Banks will, without doubt, also suspend. Phila. Chronicle.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Flour 3 dollars; Wheat 50 cents.

NEW YORK, February 6th.—Flour.—The market for Western Flour continues extremely inactive, and although holders of Genesee generally demand 4,94, yet on the part of some there is a disposition to recede a trifle, and the article may now fairly be quoted 4,87½ a 4,94, for common brands, as they were offered on Tuesday at the former rates. Ohio and Michigan are without material change. Southern is also dull, and the only sale which has come to our knowledge, is 600 bbls. Georgetown at 5,00 cash, for export, a reduction of 12½ cents on this description. Howard street is offered at the same price.

Provisions.—Mess and prime beef are without change, with small sales. Mess pork is dull at a small decline; 800 bbls. city prime have been sold at ten dollars, a reduction of 25 cents per barrel. Lard continues inactive, with an increasing stock of Western. Hams, smoked beef, &c., are in fair demand.

Beeves.—At market, 1110 beeves, including 150 left last week; 160 were from the South, and balance from this State. 810 were sold at 6½ to 9c, average 7,25 per cwt. Demand steady.—New World.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 6.—Flour.—Except a lot of 400 bbls. Howard street, at $4,44, cash, we cannot perceive a feature to distinguish the market from its condition of last week. The store price is generally $4,50, cash; in some instances at 60 and 90 days, with interest, and the sales amount to 2 a 3000 bbls. The car and wagon price continues at $4,37½.—Sales of several thousand bbls. City Mills at $4,62½, full, taken for shipment to the South American and West India markets.

Teas.—The arrival of a packet ship at New York from Liverpool, bring advices of an overland mail from China, with accounts to Oct. 1st, that peace was restored between England and China, very materially affected the Tea market in England, as well as in the U. States. In London, the price on the lower qualities of Green declined 7*d.* per lb. at once; and in New York, where the great bulk of the articles is concentrated, the market completely unsettled; and it will require some time to establish a price—at all events, not until the accounts already received are confirmed or disproved by other arrivals.—Lyford.

WASHINGTON, D. C., FEB. 1, 1841.

Mr. Editor: It was a most interesting period, last week, in the Senate. Mr. Clay made a speech which will be deemed one of his very best. As to his sentiments on slavery, and several other subjects, of course you do not agree with him, nor do I. But this ought not to prejudice our minds, as to prevent our doing him justice in other respects. That Henry Clay is one of the very first orators and statesmen; that he is the American Demosthenes is a matter past dispute. And if I speak of him in terms of eulogy, it will be in these respects, and not with reference to his principles, political, moral or religious.

The speech of Mr. Clay, of which I have spoken, occupied the principal part of two Congressional days, which, as you are aware, consist of 3 or 4 hours each. The Senate was crammed to overflowing during the whole time, and the interest felt by the audience increased to the end. Every one must have felt regret when he closed. He gave many fine touches of oratory; and the concluding one will remain indelibly impressed on my mind, while memory retains her throne. He was speaking of the tendency of the distribution of the receipts from the public lands among the States, to preserve and perpetuate the Union. And here his imagination winged its flight to the distant future, and the boundaries of the continent. With a countenance radiant with the enthusiasm of glorious anticipation, he exclaimed: "When this vast public domain shall be peopled, and new States shall spring up in the farthest West; then will the representative from Oregon scale the Rocky Mountains; pass through the land of the grisly bear, and in this very capitol, find himself at home!" Come from whom it may, Mr. Editor, I could sit all night and hear such eloquence.

Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Webster have likewise been upon the stage. They have been out in their intellectual majesty and might. Thus you perceive, "the Northern ox and the Southern bull" have been hooking and pushing each other again. I was never before so strongly impressed with the beauty and power of unadorned reason, as when listening to Mr. Webster's speech on this occasion. I could think of nothing else so appropriate as the sun, with which to compare his mind, when I was thinking of his remarks.—He poured the beams of noon on the subject.—"Show me," said he, "the constitutional authority for purchasing Louisiana, and I will show you the constitutional authority for distributing the proceeds among the States." This is but a specimen of his speech.

Mr. Wright, Mr. Tallmadge, and several other distinguished Senators also participated in the discussion, more or less. On the whole, it was, I think, the most interesting week of the session, thus far.

In the House, the time was principally consumed by set speeches on the treasury note bill. But little interest was excited except by a speech of Mr. Wise, in which he came out against the distribution bill, an extra session of Congress, &c., contrary to the spirit of the Whig party in general, of which he is a prominent member.—And it was rather a curious coincidence, that while Mr. Clay was advocating with all his transcendant powers, the distribution bill, at one end of the capitol, Mr. Wise was vehemently opposing it at the other.

It will, I presume, afford you some gratification to learn that one flagrant case of abuse has been publicly rebuked in this Hall. Mr. Stanley, of North Carolina, one day last week, observing the Secretary of the House, Mr. Garland, for once, as a rarity, at his post, inquired whether it would not be quite as well for that functionary, who was receiving $3000 per annum, to attend to his appropriate duties, as to be absent from his post three weeks at a time, closeted in his own private room, reading Shakespeare, and writing articles for the Democratic Review.

Mr. Vanderpool, of your own State, has occupied the attention of the House to-day. He is called by some the Kinderhook roarer. He is one of the ablest and most interesting speakers of the administration party in the House. He commands much attention when he speaks, and produces no little sensation.

The temperance cause has recently taken a prodigous start in this place. The Washington City Temperance Society held a meeting on Wednesday evening last; and during the exercises, a deputation arrived from another meeting near by, held by the Catholic Temperance Society, tendering us their most cordial fellowship in the good cause in which we were engaged, and announcing that they had that night received 51 additional names. We took 38 names.—In this meeting, I got the Society to institute an inquiry into that "striped pig" affair at the capitol; and likewise to petition Congress, in remodelling the charter of the city, to make provision granting the people the right of deciding, by a direct vote, whether they will permit the traffic in spiritous liquors. A union temperance meeting of Catholics and Protestants is to be held to-morrow evening. A Youth's Temperance Society was formed on Friday evening last. The Catholics are holding a weekly, Sunday evening, temperance meeting. Last evening 200 names were obtained by them in Georgetown. The Sunday evening before, 59 names were obtained in this city. The Sunday evening before that, 300 names were obtained in Georgetown. There's for you.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the New York Herald, Extra.

Sunday, Feb. 7, Two o'clock P. M.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The packet ship Emerald, Capt. Howe, arrived this morning from Havre, bringing dates to the 9th of January, her day of sailing.

The state of Paris was tranquil; the emeute which was expected when the North America left Liverpool, had not broken out.

The important news from China, which was brought by the North America, and which reached London by a telegraphic despatch overland, via Marseilles and Paris, was doubted by many mercantile men in Paris. The "Courie Francais" says that if the Chinese have agreed to pay the English 65,000,000 francs, 35,000,000 of this sum must go to pay the opium merchants, leaving only 30,000,000 francs to defray the expenses of the war; whereas the war will cost England double that sum.

The same paper adds that Admiral Elliott could not have had any authority to make a treaty with the Chinese, unless he thereby obtained some permanent advantage to the British government, which was not spoken of in the late news.

The Courier Francais further says, that they are assured upon the highest authority that the British government will positively insist (as an ultimatum to their reconciliation with China) that they shall be allowed to have a resident minister constantly at Pekin.

In Paris, M. Theirs had not made any further progress. M. Guizot was strengthening himself, and endeavoring to preserve pacific relations all round.

The Count de Pointois and M. Cochelet had not been recalled from Constantinople and Alexandria when the Emerald left.

Great dissatisfaction still existed in the public mind in Paris relative to the state of the Egyptian question, but no further demonstration had taken place in the Chambers.

The weather was still very cold in Paris.

The fortifications around the city were progressing slowly.

WAR SPIRIT IN MAINE.—The following resolutions were introduced in the Maine Legislature, on the 3d instant:—

Resolved, That the Governor be authorised to take immediate measures to remove the troops of the Queen of Great Britain, now quartered on the territory, called disputed by the British Government, but by the treaty of 1783, by the Resolutions of both Houses of Congress, passed in 1838, and by repeated Resolves of the Legislature of Main, clearly and unequivocally a part of the rightful soil of this State.

Resolved, That the resources of this State be and they hereby are placed at the disposal of the Governor, and the specific sum of four hundred thousand dollars be and the same hereby is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury, for the purpose of carrying said Resolutions into effect.

The Resolves were referred to the Committee on N. E. Boundary.

An Impressive Case.—We had at one time in the employ of this office a person whose life and its termination adds one more to the many thousand instances of the fickleness of fortune. He was a gentleman of education and refinement, possessing a high sense of honor, a blandness of manner, and, in his palmy days, a noble bearing that distinguished him from the crowd. When he first visited this country, his position was an enviable one: possessing an accomplished family and a princely fortune. It was our chance to have become, almost at the outset of his career, the intimate of that family and the adviser of its head, in matters relating to business, with which a stranger to the country was necessarily unacquainted.—After a sojourn of a few months in our delightful city, partaking liberally of the elegancies and luxuries which wealth insured, he removed to a distant part of the country, where, on a luxuriant farm, determined to participate in the healthful exercises and the ennobling charms of a country life, varying its attractions with those of an occasional city residence.

Without intending to follow up the varying scenes through which they reached the humiliating point, at which we next meet them, we will briefly observe, that after a few years' absence, we received, with profound astonishment, a letter of solicitation, dated from a neighboring city, portraying a scene of distress, and begging, for charity's sake, employment, to keep the wolf from the door. So painful an appeal we of course need hardly say, met a ready and hearty response.—Employment such as we had was furnished, and we again were occasional inmates in that family circle which we had last met in apartments rivalling the richest and the proudest of the city. But now how changed the associations!—how altered the man!

As he possessed a competent knowledge of commercial affairs, and was an accurate accountant and a good penman, a larger field of enterprize opened itself in the West, and thither he went. His family shortly after followed him, and for a while there appeared a glimmer of sunshine—a hope of comfort, if not of prosperity.

Not long since, we opened a newspaper published in the "far West," and among other matters of every-day occurrence, we read a notice of a "melancholy suicide" It stated that a gentleman recently settled in that place, and engaged in mercantile pursuits, was found in a grove, adjoining the town, with his brains blown out. The pistol by his side, the letter to his wretched family, and other matters, clearly indicate the nature of this shocking event. It was death voluntarily sought as a relief from the anguish of a distracted head and a broken heart. The name of the sufferer accompanied the notice, and revealed to us the termination of our friends' earthly career. The accomplished gentleman, the man of honor and of high expectations, landed upon our shores with an independent fortune, and in a few brief years we find him laying on the green sward of a remote wilderness, with his brains blown out

We might hazard a homily on the misfortunes of life and the hardships which poor mortality is heir to. But we shall not do it in this case though it may be suggested that so faithful a text should be suitably improved. Were we to do so, it would be to insist on the too common error of ascribing all our ills to the wrong source—of throwing upon misfortune the blame which more rightly belongs to ourselves; to insist more fully on the important truth, not duly or profitably recognized, that we are the architects of our own fortunes. In the case related above, this was particularly & emphatically illustrated. The misery here entailed tho' doubtlessly ascribed to misfortune, was in reality the result of a settled preference, a voluntary assumption, made and decided by the individual himself. All the reverses which befel himself and family; all the wretchedness that prostrated him and lacerated the heart of those he loved, were the plain, legitimate results flowing from a deliberate devotion to the transient pleasures and endless pains of an indulgence in drinking. He lived and died a victim to intemperance.—Philadelphia Courier.

Interesting Incidant.—The Milledgeville Standard of the 24th relates the following. In the examination before the Legislature of the claim of Jas. Hunter, of legislative clemency or pardon, for the crime of murder on B. Lovejoy; Mr. Jones, Senator from the county of Paulding, made the following statement, which he said he had not heard contradicted: "After the conviction of Hunter, he was visited in his prison by his wife. During one of her visits, she clad herself in his apparel and he dressed himself in her's; and in that disguise made his escape.—After some hours the affair was discovered, and the jailor detained the wife in prison. H. hearing in some way, that his wife was kept in jail, came forth voluntarily, and gave himself up to the proper authority, to suffer upon the gallows, in order to relieve an affectionate and confiding wife from the walls of a prison." Such conduct is truly ennobling, even in a felon, and the mention of it created a deep emotion in the legislative halls.—Hunter was pardoned by the Legislature, and has bsen restored to the bosom of his family. And we hope that his subsequent conduct will prove him not unworthy of the enjoyment of those civil privileges to which he has been again restored.

Newspapers.—The intellectual spring into which every body dips his bucket, while few thank the fountain for its supply.

The London Dispatch complains that Prince Albert has not yet appeared at the head of any public meeting of great domestic interest, and desires to know his opinion upon the Corn Law, the Ballot, and the Suffrage. Alluding to the British efforts on behalf of the Abolition of Slavery, the Dispatch remarks:

"We have already spent thirty-five millions upon the Slave Trade, and if one quarter of that sum had been expended upon the education of the people at home, the Slave Trade would have been exterminated fifty years ago. All that has been laid out has only aggravated the evil.—The point to pursue in Africa is to engender commercial habits, and teach the natives that it is more profitable to make their soil fertile, and exchange vegetable and mineral commodities, than to trade in slaves. The way to civilize Africa is to instruct the people in the construction of roads and warehouses, the application of the ordinary principles of barter, and an appreciation of commerce. It is of course, a very distant day at which the Africans can be taught the principles of political economy, and this observation applies to our own country, especially with respect to the Corn Laws, but still the practicability of bringing the western coast of Africa into commercial connexion with this country is palpably. We have just signed a commercial treaty with the Republic of Texas, and yet in Texas there is not a single inducement to a connexion that does not exist on the western coast of Africa. Here we acknowledge an independent State, and upon the casual calculation that Texas can maintain its independency. The people of Texas have started on noble grounds; they have decreed an unlimited liberty with respect to religious opinions, have adopted the Republican system of the United States, and have declared the Slave Trade to be piracy. During our Peninsular war we had great qualms of political conscience with respect to acknowledging the independence of Republican governments, and now we find that there is a disposition to acknowledge them prematurely, and before they can have established a claim to existence. We admire the conduct of our Foreign Department, after the North American orators had so condemned the establishment of Texas as a Republic.—In less than ten years, Spain, Portugal, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, and even France, will be Republics, or in a very critical situation between the two stools. We do not take up the principle, or wish to intrude upon the public mind, but it is the principle gaining ground every day, and becoming absolutely rampant throughout the western continent of Europe. Our Government acknowledging the State of Texas, is indeed extraordinary. We shall soon hear of New Zealand being recognized at our Court as an independent country, and we may have its ambassador kissing hands with her Majesty."

The Story of a Defaulter.—We recently adverted to the defalcation of James L. Hawkins of the Franklin Bank of Baltimore, to the amount of $138.000—nearly one-fourth of the capital. The Boston Atlas has a long and interesting account of this individual. It is stated that he resigned his office in the bank some time last summer, before it was known to any, save the directorship, that he was largely indebted to the institution. He had been its cashier for twenty years, during all which time he was believed by the world to be a man of incorruptible integrity.—When he first entered the institution he was poor, but his salary increased gradually, until it reached 25 hundred dollars, and a dwelling; yet it was certain that his expensive style of living could leave but little to be laid up from this source.—He first received some ten thousand dollars from his wife's estate, and this he is understood to have invested so fortunately, that the ten thousand grew to twenty, then to thirty, and forty, and fifty; and going on in equally fortunate investments and speculations, it grew to one hundred thousand. Then he drew a prize of twenty thousand dollars in a lottery, and fortune smiled on him, every thing prospered with him, and he became a wealthy man. But he was prospering by fraud the while. Like Dadney and Levis, he had ventured once to appropriate to his own use a small amount of the property of the bank; and, the Rubicon passed, compunctious visitings were like those of the angels. He paused not, until, by chance, during his absence for a brief time, last spring, his long concealed frauds were discovered, and then, surrendering privately his property to the bank, he precipitately left Baltimore. His wife, on learning that he had become involved in pecuniary difficulties, sent for one of the directors and handed him a release of dowry in the real estate. She had then no thought that crime could be laid to his charge, and it was only two weeks ago that the fact was made known to her. She was a devoted and affectionate wife, noble hearted and high spirited—one who could have met poverty with a smile, but, as she said, could not survive dishonor.—She sank quickly under the accumulation of mental suffering, and on the evening of the 16th, died of a broken heart. She told those around her that she was dying, and besought them to send for her husband. He came from his concealment in time to receive the last look of the partner of his young years, and the solace of his old age—the victim of his crimes, whose parting words were yet of forgiveness and affection.

The Ring.—Queen Elizabeth gave to the Earl of Essex a ring, assuring him that into whatever disgrace he might fall, or whatever prejudices she might herself be induced to entertain against him, yet if he sent her that ring, she would, immediately upon the sight of it, recall her former tenderness. Difficulties at length arose, and he was imprisoned in the tower. He sent the ring to his mistress, and wondered that he did not receive from her some favorable regard. The ring had been stopped on the way. The Queen, not receiving it, supposed him obstinate, and signed the death-warrant, the Earl was executed. Was no wrong done him? Who would be willing to take the responsibility of stopping that ring? The individual who did it, the Countess of Nottingham, when she came to die, was overwhelmed with remorse. She sent for the Queen, and disclosed to her the fact. The Queen, bursting into a furious passion, shook the dying countess in her bed, crying to her, "that God might pardon her, but she never could." (See Hume's History of England, chapter xliv.) The Bible is much more than the ring. It is a token of love from God to His creatures. Into whatever difficulties they may fall, if they present to Him this, in humble reliance on the grace it reveals, He assures them of His compassion and the return of His favor. He will remember them in mercy, He will save them. Who will not fear to have this token of heaven's love stopped on its way in his hands? Who will not hasten it to its destination, that every creature may know his privileges, and by the use of them, obtain eternal life? Neglect may bring guilt which it will be difficult to forgive. It may fill the soul with anguish, when it will be too late to rectify the evil.

THE CHIEFTIAN'S DAUGHTER.
BY GEO. P. MORRIS.

Every part of the brief but glorious life of Pocahontas is calculated to produce a thrill of admiration, and to reflect the highest honor upon her name. The most memorable event of her life is thus recorded: After a long consultation among the Indians, the fate of Capt. Smith, who was the leader of the first colony in Virginia, was decided. The conclave resumed their silent gravity—two huge stones were placed near the water's edge—Smith was lashed to them, and his head was laid down as a preparation for beating out his brains with war-clubs. Powhatten raised the fatal instrument, and the savage multitude, with their blood-stained weapons, stood near their king, silently waiting the prisoner's last moment. But Smith was not destined thus to perish. Pocahontas, the beloved daughter of the king, rushed forward, fell upon her knees, and with tears and entreaties prayed that the victim might be spared. The royal savage rejected her suit, and commanded her to leave Smith to his fate Grown frantic at the failure of her supplications, Pocahontas threw her arms about Smith, and laid her head upon his, her raven hair falling around his neck and shoulders, declaring she would perish with or save him. The Indians gasped for breath, fearing that Powhatten would slay his child for taking such a deep interest in the fate of one he considered his deadliest foe. But human nature is the same every where; the war club dropped from the monarch's hand—his brow relaxed—his heart softened—and, as he raised his brave daughter to his bosom and kissed her forehead, he reversed his decree, and directed Smith to be set at liberty! Whether the regard of this glorious girl for Smith ever reached the feeling of love, is not known. No favor was expected in return. "I ask nothing of Capt. Smith," said she, in an interview she afterwards had with him in England, "in recompense for whatever I have done, but the boon of living in his memory." —Sketches of Virginia.

Whitefield.—Once upon a time, when the celebrated Whitefield was addressing an immense crowd, with his accustomed fervor and eloquence, under the shade of a venerable tree in the Meadows of Edinburgh, a poor creature, thinking to turn him into ridicule, had perched himself on one of the overhanging boughs just above the preacher's head, and with monkey like dexterity mimicking his gesticulations, endeavoring to raise a laugh among the audience. Guided by the looks of some of his hearers, Whitefield caught a glance of him, but without seeming to have noticed him, continued his discourse. With the skill of a practised orator, he reserved the incident for the proper place and time. He was expatiating at the moment on the power and the sovereignty of Divine grace. With gathering force and earnestness he told of the unlikely objects it had often chosen, and the unlooked for triumphs it had often achieved. As he rose to the climax of his inspiring theme, and when in the full sweep of his eloquence, he suddenly paused, and turning round, and pointing slowly at the wretch above him, exclaimed in a tone of deep and thrilling pathos: "Even he may yet be the subject of that free, that resistless grace." It was a shaft from the Almighty. Winged by the divine Spirit, it struck the scoffer to the heart, and realized in his conversion the glorious truth it conveyed. —Scottish Guardian.

New Discoveries in Phrenology.—A Michigan paper says that a lecturer on the science in the Far West, has discovered several bumps not before noticed.—He calls them Brassfaceittiveness and Softsoapability. But he says the organ of Mind-your-own-businessitiveness has entirely disappeared.

Folly of Petty Distinctions.—Mr. Bethune, in his eloquent address before the 'Philomathean Society,' speaks justly of the false distinctions which would-be aristocrats sometimes seek to maintain even in American society.

The orator very truly says, "The prejudice of dark ages, when a false aristocracy contemned labor in any form as a dishonorable necessity, is passing away, and should have no place in a philosophical or republican mind. To determine a man's position in society by the honest calling he follows in life, is as contrary to justice or good sense, as it is to the genius of our political institutions. The petty distinctions of social rank, which have obtained in this country, excite the deserved ridicule of calm observers from other lands. Nothing can be more absurd than pride of family, in people who scarcely know the birth of their grandfathers; or an assertion of superior nobility, by one who sells cloth in packages, over another who sells ribands by the yard; or by the importer of bristles in hogsheads, or of hides in cargoes, over him who makes brushes or shoes; or by the professional man over either, when he is in reality the paid servant of all. We are members of one body, necessarily dependent upon, and contributive to each other's well-being. To look down upon a neighbor because his way of serving the community differs from our own, is to despise ourselves. We should own no superiority but that of age, worth and wisdom."

A Good Example.—That excellent little sheet, the Baltimore Sun well asks, what better can illustrate the genius of our institutions than instances like the following, which we remark, are almost daily occurring? The incident is related of Mr. Craddock, now a member of the Kentucky Senate, from the counties of Hardin and Meade, who is said to be not only a respectable Senator, but a good lawyer. A debate had occurred, and Mr. C. in concluding some remarks, said:—

"Sir, what I have said here to-day, has been said in a rough way, and, if it has wounded any Senator, I hope he wil no t attribute it to unkind feelings, but to my want of the polish of education. Sir, your superintendent of common schools has said that there are many men of family in this commonwealth who can neither read nor write, and it is but too true. My own marriage bond bas my mark to it; and my son, who sits in the other House, was a stout boy when I learned to write."

The Antidote.—By J. M. Fulton.

Oh, when the sickly mind begins to flag
And with'ring thoughts of sorrow long gone by Come like keen bayonets to the sensate heart,
When wave on wave of mental miseries dash
And for a time oer'whelm the struggling soul,
Let us look backward to those pleasures past,
Where blessed delights of youthful days once reigned,
And thus draw joys to back the woes we feel
And give prepond'rance to a pleasant state.
Perchance, chill poverty has blighted prospects fair,
And laid your tow'ring castles in the dust;
Perhaps some friend, or, may-be two or more
Have proved unfaithful to the vows they made
And given cause for unexpected grief.
Well, cast your eye to yonder school-mate kind
Whose friendship for you ne'er was born to die,
Who loved you kindly and though life will love
Through weal and woe the mention of your name.
Suppose you departed when in youth [met;
And numerous years have 'lapsed since you have
You in some distant land from that where born
Apparently by accident now meet.
O! what is such a meeting with my friend worth?
'Tis as the meeting of the blessed above,
Tears of affection stream and words are frail,
Too frail to tell the half that there is felt.
All those deep sorrows goading at the heart
That as a vulture, hungry for his prey,
Have nearly drank the wounded spirit up,
At once are gone and scattered to the winds;
Suppose when earth, by long continued drought,
Has seemed to paint the inward blight you feel.
Suppose you cast your inward eye aback
To that green waving field of thrifty grain,
Through which you passed but a few months before;
Perhaps you're stiff and feel that age is here
And life will soon be all her sands poured out;
Then look beyond the tomb to that blessed world,
Too blessed, too happy, even to be told,
And lift your pinions, plume yourself for flight,
And mount to reach your destined home above.
There night never comes, there reigns eternal day,
There sorrow has no place and tears are dried
Or kindly wiped away by that kind hand
That felt the roughewed nail on Cal'vry's brow;
There youth, unfading as eternity,
Blooms through the cycles of eternal day;
There, while earth stands and men are born anew,
Angels rejoice that penitents return.
And burst on burst of constant joys are heard
Re-echoing through the lofty dome of heaven;
There old acquaintance, long apart, now meet
And hail each other on the eternal shore
With warm emotions and in language sweet;
There the storm-rent and weather-beaten soul,
That crawled through life beneath a load of woes
Too much, almost, for mortal man to bear,
Is safely landed on that happy shore.
No more to wander through a friendless world
No more to feel the least attack of pain,
Nor writhe beneath a disappointment more;
But vain are words to tell the joys above,
They fall far short as arrows at the sun
By some vain marksman fruitlessly shot forth.
Let wild imagination take her wing
And soar to every pinacle of thought
To furnish figures to portray that state,
Let reverend divines deduce from Holy Writ
Strong texts to show how blessed a place is heaven,
Still it remains unknown, unfold at last,
For words are wanting and conceptions fail.

A Yankee named Sam Scott, has been figuring in England as a great American diver. Some of his feats are described as quite marvellous. On a recent occasion, says an account before us, he gave a flying leap from the top gallant yard of the coal-brig Wakefield, of Blyth, lying off Rotherhithe, in the presence of an immense concourse of spectators, who had lined the shores on both sides of the Thames. He astonished the spectators for upwards of an hour, on the topgallant yard, by his feats, although it was blowing a gale at the time. On mounting aloft he fixed himself on the topgallant-mast-head, and with his feet kicking in the air, and his head on the top of the mast, remained in that position for some time. He then descended to the yard, which was braced taut, and, although the ship was any thing but steady, ran from one end of the yard to another, without holding on by any rope, occasionally haranging the people. He made a slip-noose, which he placed round his neck, and threw himself off the yard. He remained suspended for a few seconds, with the rope under his chin, and raised himself with great dexterity on to the yard, when he exclaimed, "Come to-morrow, and you will see me hang myself again." He then hung to the yard by one foot, with his head downwards, and exhibited many other antics. All this was done with the greatest apparent indifference, and indeed he appeared the only unconcerned person present. He stated that he had jumped off a place below the falls of Niagara, a height of 597 feet from the water, and amongst his other exploits he had leaped from a cliff at Pori Isaac, in Cornwall, 347 feet high; into the sea, from Bangor bridge, the highest in Great Britain, 210 feet high, and frequently from the top-gallant-masts of English and American line-of-battle ships. At last he prepared for his leap, first making fast a handkerchief round his head, and securing one of his hands with a rope, which he twisted about his fingers. After doing this he held up his arm, and exclaimed, "I only use one hand; the other is tied up, and I can't move it." He then told the people that his head was as hard as iron, and to convince them that it was so, he rattled it against the topmast until he actually made the lower mast shake. He then made his last address previous to the leap, by acquainting the people that it was erroneous to suppose that a man's breath was taken away by falling from a great height, for while he was descending he would speak something, which he hoped would not be forgotten. He then pulled off his shoes, held them above his head, and exclaimed, "Now, here he goes," he made a flying leap from the end of the yard into the water, calling out as he descended, "Good bye, don't forget me as I come ashore." When he fell into the river the spray rose above him to the height of 12 or 14 feet, and in an instant his head and arms appeared above the surface of the water, waving the silk handkerchief which he fastened about his head while on the yard. Loud cheers greeted him from all quarters, and he swam ashore, and the people as he landed rewarded him with money, which he deposited in his shoes, and in a box carried by a man on crutches, for his benefit.

A British officer attached to the Thunderer, furnishes the following interesting sketch in a letter to his brother in London. The horrors of war are here adequately pictured:

"Sidon is a most extraordinary town.—The streets will hardly admit of three persons walking abreast and they are nearly all arched over, which renders the town in many places bomb-proof.—They are also very short, and go off at right angles, so that if the Eygptians had not been paralysed (which certainly they were,) they might have killed every one of the besiegers from the houses, which commanded the whole of the streets. The marines met with a good deal of resistance in taking the castle in the town, but when they came to the charge, the Egyptians fled in dismay. In many places the marines were obliged to burst open the doors of the houses, and force people out. Such a miserable body of troops I never saw; they were more like slaves than soldiers, and they seemed weak, sickly, and dispirited. I went through the town on the following morning, and witnessed the most deplorable spectacle, dead bodies lying in the streets covered with blood, and flies in myriads around them, wounded men groaning in their agonies, houses and shops deserted doors and windows battered in, immense holes in the walls from the shot and shells of the ships, rubbish and stones lying in the streets, articles of merchandise strewed about, and swords and muskets in every quarter.—The smell was sickening—the sight fearful. Now, however, every thing is quiet; the inhabitants have returned to their shattered abode, shops are open, the dead bodies have been removed to the grave, and the wounded to the hospital. I visited the hospital, and the scene presented there was of the most dreadful description.

Well, there is no end to 'go-aheadism.' It is said there is actually to be built this season a steam-packet to run from the new city of Cairo to Liverpool. This city is situated on the extreme southern point of Illinois, on the peninsula formed by the junction of the Ohio & Mississippi rivers. It is a town of yesterday.

Licentiousness of the Press.—Duri the heat of the Presidential contest a l ris editor announced that he had receiv a file of American papers, and regrett exceedingly, to find by them, that the t candidates for the Presidency were t greatest rascals in the country.—I change paper.

This is but one of many evils arisi out of the abuse of the press, and espe ally some portion of the political press. the coarseness, vulgarity and vitupe tion indulged in times of high party e citement, effected only the degradati and shame of those who participate in as it ought to, we should have less cau of regret and mortification; but it exten abroad, and among those who do not f ly understand the spirit of our institutio the result must be determined to our N tional character. Honor, virtue, libert all call aloud for the abolishment of th vile and pernicious practice, and perha the present is a proper time to establish sanative code for the "infected district We hope this suggestion will be second by all who have a love for their countr or a respect for the profession which the should adorn.

Controversy.—There is no learne man but will confess that he has muc profited by reading controversies, h senses awakened, his judgment sharpe ed, and the truth which he had held mo firmly established. If then it be profit ble for him to read, why should it not least be tolerable and free for his adve sary to write? In logic, they teach th contraries laid together more evidentl appear: it appears then, that all contr versy being permitted, falsehood will a pear more false, and then the truth th more true: which must needs conduc much to the general confirmation of th implicit truth.—Milton.

Abolition.—At an Abolition conve tion held lately at Rochester, N. Y., reso lutions were passed to rescind the chu ches of the South from all fellowshi with their Northern brethren.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

POETRY.

THE INQUIRY.

Tell me, ye winged winds,
That round my pathway roar,
Do ye not know some spot
Where mortals weep no more?
Some lone and pleasant dell,
Some valley in the west,
Where, free from toil and pain,
The weary soul may rest?
oud wind dwindled into a whisper low, ighed for pity as it answered "No!"

Tell me, thou mighty deep,
Whose billows round me play:
Know'st thou some favored spot,
Some island far away,
Where weary man may find
The bliss for which he sighs,
Where sorrow never lives,
And friendship never dies?
oud waves rolling in perpetual flow, ed for a while, and sighed to answer "No!"

And thou, serenest moon,
That with such holy face
Dost look upon the earth
Asleep in night's embrace;
Tell me, in all thy round,
Hast thou not seen some spot
Where miserable man Might find a happier lot?
d a cloud the moon withdrew in wo, voice sweet, but sad, responded "No!"

Tell me, my secret soul,
Oh! tell me, Hope and Faith!
Is there no resting place
From sorrow, sin and death!
Is there no happy spot
Where mortals may be blessed,
Where grief may find a balm,
And weariness a rest?
Hope and Love, best boons to mortal given, their bright wings, and whispered "YES, HEAVEN!"

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: I noticed in the Recorder of this morning, (i. e.) came to hand this morning, a communication from one of your correspondents, who denominates himself "A Layman," who steps forth to second your effort to arouse the Pittsburg Annual Conference to a sense of its "childishness" or carelessness of duty, in not administering deserved censure upon certain delinquent brethren, who it is said, failed to comply with their obligations to their appointments and the conference.

I do not come up to excuse brethren who will-fully and unnecessarily (if there be any such) neglect their work, or to inquire into matters gone by; but, if possible, to suggest a few thoughts that may tend to prevent their recurrence.

Does 'Layman' live within the bounds of a circuit or station that regularly and promptly meets the just claim of the itinerant, and renders it impossible for him to spend his time and talents in building up the church? if so, he is the very man I want to hear. Give it to the eloquent preacher, and also to the equally eloquent Layman.

But if "Layman" should have the misfortune to be connected with one of those charges, that pay their preachers the enormous sums of from $100 to $160 salary per year, by which the indomitable man is to feed, clothe, &c., himself, wife and children, I would, most respectfully, suggest that he take up his pen, at least, one other time, and after having ascertained something near the number of thousands that some of his brother laymen are worth, who inquires not after the wants of the suffering preacher. Then write an article on the mutual rights of the ministers and members of the M. P. Church, also, on mutual suffering. And if the article should not be written to that proper effect, then we shall hope, at least, for a diminution of the cases complained of.—Then, every brother and sister should consider themselves but "stewards" of the bounties of heaven, and should be willing to offer even their all to God in the spirit of sacrifice. To elucidate on this subject, allow me to "show my opinion." If dollars came as free and easy as cents, many a good preacher would be relieved of the painful necessity of feeling his pockets, and sighing for naught, when informed by the partner of his sorrows, that the flour barrel, meat tub, &c., were empty, and the store-keeper has sent his bill. And further, I doubt not but your receipts, Mr. Editor, for the Recorder, would tell more plainly upon your feelings.

I have another subject that I wish the privilege of introducing; and, as I don't take these liberties often, I hope you will indulge me in this matter. The subject alluded to, I wish to present by way of an interrogatory or two; trusting that some of your correspondents will be kind enough to favor me with a little light.

1. What are we to understand by a "free discussion paper?"

Is it a paper in which every body, who can or is capable of writing an article, that will not have to be re-written before it goes into the hands of the compositor, may say what he pleases on any and every subject?

2. If so, do we do well to circulate disrespectful and untrue insinuations upon our church [illegible], coming from a source (as we judge) from which we could look for very little better. The [illegible] seat or mourner's bench ridiculed. We are represented in inviting mourners to the "altar" for prayer."

This brings to my mind, what is said can be [illegible] without going very far: a certain gentleman who became a convert to the faith of a certain people, having the gift of the tongue, threatened all the sects of christians in the place with a speedy overthrow, especially the Methodists. Consequently, he prepares for his work of conversion, by having painted on one side of a paper a mourner's bench with the mourners and preacher, and on the other side John the Baptist, baptising, &c.; after exhibiting the mourner's bench, then he turns the other, crying, this is the way! come on, &c. But some, probably, would say, the paper is open to correct such invidious attacks upon the church. This may be so, but it is my opinion, that there are few indeed, who are capable of writing, that feel disposed to meddle with such creatures of contention, for a similar reason why the lion avoids the [illegible].

I shall stop for the present, hoping, Mr. Editor, that you will not lay me under the table, but allow me to be set up to appear in the Recorder. If it should be in the midst of the advertisements, I'll be content. Yours, &c,

J. B*.

A SKETCH.

Jesse Walker was a plain, unlettered man, and although poor and incumbered with a family, he was an enterprizing pioneer, and such was his zeal and activity in searching out new fields of labor, destitute places, and enlarging his work, that one said of him, "if he had an infinite body, an infinite horse, and infinite space, he would have an infinite circuit." In the fall of 1803 I found him forming a new circuit in Livingston county, Kentucky, above the junction of the Ohio and Cumberland rivers,—having myself travelled about eighty miles, along a small path, through barrens and forests, where there was but here and there a hut, and nothing to nourish man or horse, to meet him and hold a quarterly meeting,—for I was then travelling in the capacity of a presiding elder, which was in those days not only a laborious office, but its power was used like the power which St. Paul used, "for edification and not for destruction." This new region was quite thinly populated, but that spirit which attended Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost was at work, and many collected and much good was done.

The indefatigable Walker shunned no swamp, or smoky hovel, where he could find souls, and pour forth with a warm heart and in simple strains, the story of the cross, and point to that balm that was to heal the wounds of a bleeding world,—many a star will be in his crown from this solitary region. We planed a tour to the small portion of Illinois, then settled, in May, 1804, but the Ohio being out of its banks, and the waters of the wilderness impassible, we turned our course up the Ohio, crossed Trade Water, Pond river and Green river, formed a circuit, and in the vicinity of Hartford organized a large society. Here we found the plain, zealous blacksmith, Thomas Taylor, a local preacher, doing much good, and a thorough revival in progress. The old man was long useful, but men rose up that knew not Joseph,—aspiring young men tyranized over the staunch old pioneer, which his republican soul could not so readily relish, and after he had borne long, sought an asylum in the M. P. Church, where he finished his course.*

Here now was work enough to fill the heart and hands of the enterprizing Walker—two new circuits united. But James Axley and Peter Cartwright, just merging from obscurity, were useful helpers. This was then indeed the far West, the extreme boundary of white population westward. Walker continued to fan the flame, and after a tour around the district, bounded north by Green river, east by Cumberland mountain, south and west by savage tribes, I returned in July, when a camp-meeting was appointed at a spring in the woods, and a small shelter made,—the people came from 30 or 40 miles, with their wallets of provision, to spend four days, and great grace rested upon them—many found the pearl of great price.

The persevering Walker afterward went to Illinois, where he was entensively useful; crossed the Missouri, kept pace with emigration, still a pioneer. If he yet lives he must be aged and infirm. But little has ever been said of him in print—the days of "puffing" had not arrived when his revivals were in progress, nor was he the kind of a man to puff straw-fires, and exaggerate evannescent revivals—he was content to be "little and unknown, lov'd and priz'd by God alone." It is well that the record of early pioneers is on high, and that the Chief Shepherd knew them—saw their work and labor of love, as well as their sufferings and privations, for which those who have entered into their labors care but little!

*This is the Taylor, we believe, who is the author of a large portion of our camp-meeting songs which were so happily instrumental in stimulating the revivals of the West. It is an honor to our church that such a man chose to end his days in her.—ED. REC.

For the Western Recorder.

OREGON TERRITORY.

The events of the last few years have tended to call public attention, to some extent, to that portion of the western hemisphere, commonly called the "Oregon Territory." The book entitled "Astoria" written by that splendid American author, Washington Irving, has thrown much light on the subject. The departure of some missionary families, recently, for the Oregon regions, has also elicited queries in the public mind in regard to the localities and history of that section of our country. The subject of the claim of the United States, to the Oregon Territory, and to our right to occupy it, has been several times brought before the United States Senate, by that indefatigable Senator, Dr. Linn, of Missouri, and has resulted in bringing before the American people many interesting facts, and much information, in relation to that, in some respect, interesting portion of our country.

My object is to compile, for publication in the Recorder, the facts in my possession, touching the geography, resources, and history of the Oregon Territory, and the title of the United States to the same. The compilation and publication, in a brief manner, of these facts, it is thought might interest, at least a few, of your numerous readers. "Oregon Territory comprehends that portion of country drained by the Columbia river, together with the sea coasts of that territory. It is bounded on the east by the Rocky Mountains, extending about nine hundred miles, from the fifty-fourth parallel to the forty-first; on the south, by the Snowy Mountains, in their whole length about seven hundred miles, from the Rocky Mountains to Cape Mendocius, on the Pacific, near the fortieth degree of latitude; on the west, by the Pacific Ocean, from Cape Mendocius, about five hundred miles due north to Cape Flattery, at the entrance of the Strait of Fuca, near the forty-eighth degree of latitude; and on the north, by the Strait of Fuca, from Cape Flattery, about one hundred and twenty miles eastward, and thence by a line running north east, along the summit of the highlands separating the waters of the Columbia from those of Frazer's River, to the Rocky Mountains, which it would reach about the fifty-fourth degree of latitude. Such are the natural boundaries of the Oregon Territory, the surface of which is estimated at about three hundred and fifty thousand square miles."

"Oregon Territory presents a constant succession of mountain ridges and valleys, or plains of small extent. The principal ridges are two in number, besides the Rocky Mountains, running nearly parallel to each other and to the coasts; and the country is thus divided into three great regions, which differ materially in climate, soil and productive powers. The first region, or low country, is that between the coast and the chain of mountains nearest to the sea; the second region is between the mountains nearest the sea and the middle ridge, called the Blue Mountains; and the third region, or high country, is between the Blue Mountains and the Rocky Mountains. All these divisions are crossed by the Columbia, the main stream of which is formed in the middle region, by the union of several branches flowing from the Rocky Mountains, and receiving in their course supplies from innumerable smaller tributaries draining the intermediate countries."

The climate of that portion of the Oregon Territory, which is situated between the coast and the chain of mountains nearest to the sea, is regarded rather adverse to great productiveness, though generally considered more favorable to agriculture than the other portions of the territory. The summer is warm and very dry. From April to October, while the westerly winds prevail, rain seldom falls in any part of Oregon; during the other months, when the south wind blows constantly, the rains are almost incessant in the lower region, although sometimes the dry season there continues longer. Farther from the Pacific, the rains are less frequent and abundant; and near the Rocky Mountains, they are reduced to a few showers in the spring. In the valleys of the low country snow is rarely seen, and the ground is not often frozen, so that ploughing may generally be carried on during the whole winter. In 1834 the Columbia was frozen for thirteen days, but this was principally in consequence of the accumulation of ice from above.—"This country," says Capt. Wyeth of Massachusetts, who had command of two expeditions which crossed the continent into the valley of the Columbia, since 1830, "is well calculated for wheat, barley, oats, rye, peas, apples, potatoes, and all the roots cultivated in the northern States of the Union. Indian corn does not succeed well and is an unprofitable crop. The yield of wheat, with very poor cultivation, is about fifteen bushels of the best quality to the acre. Horses and neat cattle succeed tolerably well; the winter being mild, they are enabled to subsist upon the produce of the open fields. Hogs live and multiply, but cannot be made fat on the range of the country. The agriculture of this region must always suffer from the extreme dryness of the summer.—The products which ripen earliest sustain the least damage, but those which come late are often injured."

Of the soil of this region the same accute observer says: "The uplands are tolerably good, but the cost of clearing the enormous growth of timber on them would be beyond their worth; it is too thick and heavy to allow crops being obtained by girdling the trees; and it must be removed or burnt, the labor of which is beyond the conception of those acquainted only with the forests of the United States. There are however, prairies sufficiently numerous and extensive for the cultivation of the next century, which, being chiefly on the second bottoms of rivers, are extremely fertile, and above inundation." The forests in this part of America are from all accounts magnificent. Ross Cox describes a fir, growing on the Columbia near Astoria, which measured forty-six feet in circumference at ten feet from the ground, one hundred and fifty feet without a branch, and not less than three hundred feet in its whole height. Another tree, of the same species, is said to be standing on the banks of the Umqua, the trunk of which is 57 feet in circumference, and two hundred and sixteen feet in length below its branches. Cox adds, "that prime sound pines, from two hundred, to nearly three hundred feet in height, and from twenty to forty feet in circumference, are by no means uncommon."

The middle region of Oregon, between the mountains nearest the coasts on the west, and the Blue mountains on the east, is more elevated, more dry, and less fertile, than the low country on the coast. It consists chiefly of plains between ridges of mountains, the soil of which is generally a yellow sandy clay, covered with grass, small shrubs, and prickly pears. Timber is very scarce; the trees, which are small, and of soft useless woods, such as cotton wood, sumach and willow, being only found in the neighborhood of the streams. The climate during the summer is universally represented as agreeable and salubrious; the days are warm, and the nights cool; but the want of moisture in the air prevents the contrast of temperature from being injurious to health. The rains begin later in the year and end sooner, than in the lower country, and they are less constant and heavy. There is little snow in the southern valleys; farther north it is more common.

Few attempts have been made to cultivate this region, and they have not been, upon the whole, successful. Capt. Wyeth conceives that "the agriculture of this portion of Oregon Territory must always be limited to the want of a pastoral people, and to the immediate vicinity of the streams and mountains; and irrigation must be resorted to if a large population is to be supported in it. This country, which affords little prospect for the tiller of the soil, is perhaps one of the best for grazing in the world. It has been much underrated by travellers, who have only passed by the Columbia, the land along which is a collection of sand and rocks and almost without vegetation; but a few miles from the Columbia, towards the hills and mountains, the prairies open wide, covered with a low grass of a most nutritious kind, which remains good throughout the year. In September there are slight rains, at which time the grass starts; and in October and November there is a good coat of green grass, which remains so until the ensuing summer; and about June it is ripe in the lower plains, and, drying without being wet, is like made hay; in this state it remains until the autumn rains revive it. The herdsmen in this extensive valley, (of more than one hundred and fifty miles in width) could at all times keep his animals in good grass, by approaching the mountains in summer, on the declivities of which, almost any climate may be had; and the dry grass of the country is at all times excellent. It is in this section of the country that all the horses are reared for the supply of the Indians and traders in the interior. It is not uncommon that one Indian owns some hundreds of them. I think this section, for producing hides, tallow and beef, is superior to any part of North America; for, with equal facilities for raising the animal, the weather in winter, when the grass is best, and consequently the best time to fatten the animals, is cold enough to salt meat, which is not the case in Upper California. There is no question that sheep might be raised to any extent, in a climate so dry, and sufficiently warm, where very little snow or rain falls. It is also the healthiest country, I think I have ever been in, which I suppose, arises from the small quantity of decaying vegetable matter, and there being no obstruction from timber to the passing winds." RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

ALLEGHENY, PA., FEB. 15, 1841.

Br. Springer: Our meeting again is closed. Br. Dalbey spent a week with us, and his labors blessed in building up the good cause. Some ten or twelve professed to obtain peace with God, through Christ Jesus our Lord; and ten more united with us in church fellowship. The winter, thus far, has been rather unfavorable for protracted meetings in this place, there being but very little paving done, and the streets and walks being very muddy. But, on the whole, we have much cause of thankfulness to our heavenly Father. There is a very considerable improvement in the church, as to spirituality and attention to the means of grace. May the good Lord bless us more abundantly, with the pouring forth of His holy spirit.

Yours, &c., JOHN BURNS.

SMITHFIELD, O., FEB. 6, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having to write you on business, I will give some information of the state of religion on Mount Pleasant circuit. We have held several protracted meetings, all of them have, to a greater or less extent, been profitable. The reviving influences of God's grace has been experienced by His children. Sinners brought to weep on account of their sins, while some, at all of these meetings, have consented to be saved by grace through faith, and have cast in their lot among us.

Two weeks since, we commenced a protracted meeting at Lagrange, which was a time of abundant refreshing from the presence of the Lord. We had to hold our meeting in a store room, not having any meeting house at that place; this was tolerably large and was generally filled, and frequently crowded to overflowing; yet, the congregation was characterized by deep solemnity from the first to the last of the meeting. Better attention to the preaching of the word I never witnessed. The meeting continued five days. There were eight belonging to the society when we commenced; during the meeting thirty-one were added to their number,—it increased in interest from the first to the last, and had it not been for other appointments we might have continued it to great profit. We hope the good work will still progress. May the Lord carry it on with mighty power.

We have just closed an interesting meeting in Mount Pleasant. Seven were added at this meeting. The congregations were large, attentive and solemn. We have much encouragement. Between sixty and seventy have, in all, been added to the church on this circuit since conference. Unworthy as we are, and feeble as the efforts are which have been put forth here for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, God has owned us, and by His blessing sanctioned the efforts. Glory be to God for His abundant goodness and mercy to us. Is it not exceedingly strange that this circuit is not cursed with deadness on account of the Anti-Slavery sentiments held and vindicated by brother Richardson and myself?

Yours, in Christ,
WM. ROSS, JR., Ass't Pr.

WASHINGTON, PA., FEB. 4, 1841.

Br. Springer: The discipline makes it the duty of each superintendent of a circuit or station to inform the President, once a quarter, of the spiritual welfare of his circuit or station. I suppose the intention is that the above rule should apply, only, when such information may be interesting or important. We have nothing to communicate at present, that is very especially important or interesting, and yet we think the friends of Zion, especially those brethren who have labored in this region, will be pleased to hear from us.

At the first quarterly meeting I attended on this circuit, more than two years since, the Lord was with us to the great joy of many souls. A gracious work then commenced which has been extending its influence to the present time. We think we may say, without exaggeration, that the present condition of the circuit is, in every point of view, at least, one hundred per cent. in advance of the condition in which we found it.

We have held several protracted meetings since conference, all of which have been crowned with considerable success. Three new classes have been organized and considerable accessions have been made to several other societies on the circuit. About fifty, in all, have joined the church this year, and present appearances are of a pleasing character.

We have just closed our second quarterly meeting at this place. The meeting, throughout, was quite interesting. The congregations were uniformly large and attentive. Much liberality was manifested by the citizens in aiding to support the gospel and sustaining the meeting. Br. Davis was with us and labored with much acceptability and profit to the close of the meeting; five joined the church and much good seed was sown, which we trust will be seen hereafter. To God be all the praise and glory. It does appear to us that our principles must and will prevail among the intelligent who are not prepossessed in favor of old customs and usages.

JAMES HOPWOOD, Superintendent of Monongalia circuit.

KANE P. O., GREEN, ILL., FEB. 4, 1841.

Br. Springer: I am taking papers from six or seven presses, and I would not exchange your paper for any other that I know of, for a family newspaper.

Our little Zion is still alive and her march is onward. Our members are few in this county, but we live in peace and, I trust, in the enjoyment of the love of God. This, I prize above numbers. I can say of a truth that I know of nothing that affords me more satisfaction than reading the Recorder, and learning from its columns that religion and religious liberty is alive and marching forward in the strength of our God. May the Lord bless both you and the church, is the prayer of your humble brother in the bonds of a peaceable gospel.

C. J. GARDINER.

EVANSBURGH, PA., FEB. 12, 1841.

FRANKLIN MISSION.—This mission embraces a large section of country, sufficient for the employment of several missionaries. Here are a number of circuits and preachers of the Episcopal Methodists; here are the Old School and the New School Presbyterians, Cumberlands, and two circuits of Wesleyan or Howard Methodists; the Albright Methodists and several other denominations, all laboring more or less, agreeable to the economy of the sect to which they severally belong.

Our Protestant church, with a few exceptions, is not known in this region, and the people in general, on my introduction, manifest a desire to become acquainted with us. I have visited and preached with and among all the above denominations, and had some refreshing seasons. I have visited some settlements where they had no preaching, and have been well received, and have seen some fruit of my labor in the vineyard of the Lord. The prospect is flattering, and I feel disposed to go forward and sow the good seed in the morning, and in the evening not to withhold the hand, in hope of reaping a plentiful harvest.

If you will favor me with your excellent paper, the Recorder, I will endeavor in return to get as many new subscribers for the same as I can. Please direct to Evansburgh, Crawford county, Pa.

Yours, in the bonds of a peaceful gospel, BENJAMIN WESCOTT.

FREEPORT, O., FEB. 1, 1841.

Br. Springer: We have just closed our second quarterly meeting, held at West Chester, it was protracted nine days and resulted in the conversion of twenty or more—I think, eleven joined the church, and a prospect of more—and great rejoicing and encouragement to christians.—Our ministerial aids were Brs. Ferguson, and Neal, of the M. E. Church, and Br. Lynder, of our own persuasion,—all labored with christian zeal for the salvation of sinners. We have one protracted meeting in progress, and one for next Sabbath. M. N. WARREN.

This letter was mislaid, which has caused its delay.—EDITOR.

WESTMINSTER, O., FEB. 9, 1841.

Br. Springer: We commenced our second quarterly meeting, January 30.—We had to our aid Brs. Hunt, Devore, Flood, Stephens, Kerans and Dr. Bassy, all of whom contributed by their efficient labors to the interest of the meeting, which resulted in the conversion of several persons. Twelve were added to the church, making an increase of seventy this year to our charge.

OBITUARY.

It becomes my afflicting duty to record the death of LEWIS W. WARREN, (son of Wm. H. and Anna Warren, of Warrensville, Cuyahoga county, O.,) who died at Warrensville, on the 22d of December, 1840, after a protracted illness, in which he endured indescribable pain, with inflamation on the brain and lungs. Aged, nearly, sixteen months.

M. N. WARREN.

Freeport, February 1, 1841.

N. B. Mr. H. Warren's letter was mislaid, that caused this delay. M. N. W.

EXPEDITION TO THE NIGER.—The expedition which is now fitting out in England for Africa, is an important one to the cause of humanity, and deserve the good wishes of every friend of the human race. The expedition is to consist of three iron steam-vessels—the Albert, the Wilberforce, and the Soudan. They will take with them surgeons and men of science, botanists, surveyors, geographers, geologist and agriculturists. They are provided with seeds, implements, medicines and presents, furnished from private as well as public sources. This expedition is intended to proceed to the mouth of the Niger, and ascend that river and lay the foundation of commerce with the African tribes; extend among them the principles of Christianity and the blessings of civilization; and in this way give a mortal blow to the odious and unnatural traffic in slaves.

The greatest obstacle to the success of this expedition, will probable be found in the unhealthiness of the climate, which has proved so fatal to Europeans. But the nature of the disease on the African coast has been studied with much attention within a few years, and every possible precaution will be taken to preserve the health of the persons who will embark in this noble enterprize.—Boston Mercantile Journal.

WEIGHT OF MILITARY MEN.—The following Memorandum was found a number of years ago in the pocket-book of an officer of the Massachusetts line:

AUGUST 19, 1783.
Weighed at the scales at West Point.

Gen. Washington,	209 lbs.
Gen. Lincoln,	224 "
Gen. Knox,	280 "
Gen. Huntington,	132 "
Gen. Greaton,	166 "
Col. Swift,	219 "
Col. Michael Jackson,	252 "
Col. Henry Jackson,	238 "
Lt. Col. Huntington,	232 "
Lt. Col. Cobb,	186 "
Lt. Col. Humphreys,	221 "

It appears, from the above, that the average weight of these eleven distinguished Revolutionary officers, was 214 lbs. The heaviest weight having been Gen eral Knox, who weighed 280 pounds, and the lightest Gen. Huntington, who weighed 132 pounds. It is somewhat singular that the biographers of eminent men never, unless under circumstances of a peculiar character, record the weight or dimensions of the clay tenements which were the abode of their immortal spirits.—N. Y. Sun.

THE IMPORTANCE OF MORAL AND INTELLECTUAL CULTIVATION.—Gov. Moorehead, of North Carolina, urges the importance of education. He says:

"If we desire to perpetuate our glorious political institutions, we must give to our people moral and intellectual cultivation—that man who improves his intellect for six days in the week, and on the seventh, endeavors to give it the proper direction, from the precepts of our Holy Religion, who learns to do unto others as he would they should do unto him—that man will never become a tyrant, and he can never be made a slave."

A FACT WORTHY OF NOTICE.—It was ascertained by a careful investigation of the New York Temperance Society, that out of 939 innkeepers selling ardent spirits, 693 became bankrupts.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... FEBRUARY 24, 1841.

METHODIST AND PROTESTANT EPISCOPALIANS.—We, sometime since, referred to a notice we saw running the rounds of the Episcopal Methodist papers, with reference to a letter of Bishop Smith, of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Kentucky, making a proposition to the Episcopal Methodists for a re-union of the two churches. The Methodist papers seem to treat this proposition, of his excellency, rather cavalierly. He does not seem to have understood the matter; his proposition, if he wished a union of the two churches, should have been for him and his to have joined the Methodist Episcopal Church and become merged in that establishment. He would then have received the most respectful attention, and it would have been the finest thing in all the world.

We learn from the Rev. T. B. Crouch, of the Kentucky Conference, that the letter of the Bishop was not addressed directly to that body, but simply to the clergy of the conference in general, published in the public prints, and thus circulated, and that the conference paid no attention to it, and that no action has been had in reference thereto.

Some one is now writing a succession of articles in the Cincinnati "Episcopal Observer" on this subject, over the signature of "B. B. S.," which are the initials of the Bishop's name, from which we give the following extract:

"It is certainly true that the Protestant Episcopal Church has gone very far in its admiration of every thing peculiar to the Church of England. No attempt shall here be made to abate that admiration. That the Church of England is the fairest daughter of the Reformation, that she has been the bulwark of Protestantism, that her liturgy and ritual far transcend any thing of the kind in modern use, let this hand wither, before this pen shall deny. But all this erects no infallible claim to our reverence and admiration of those special points in which the Church of England differs, as she certainly does in some few things, from the primitive church.

"Episcopalians are getting to draw this obvious distinction, and the numbers are many who are ready to concede to any denomination all such points. During the two last General Conventions, the writer, with great satisfaction and delight, heard reverend and right reverend divines maintain, that Episcopalians ought to be willing to impart either the apostolic succession, or our scriptural liturgy, or our clerical costume, to as many as might be willing to receive the one though not prepared to receive them all. Unfettered as we are by acts of Parliament, the influence of American circumstances enables and constrains us to offer to surrounding denominations what the Church of England never could.—In other words, strip the primitive Episcopal Church in America of all that is accidental and European, and there is no good reason left why a Methodist might not be an Episcopalian. In like manner, strip the Methodist Church in America of all that is European, and restore to her all that is primitive, and there is no good reason why an Episcopalian might not be a Methodist.

"This simple and single view unfolds the entire foundation of Bishop Smith's letter to the Conference of Kentucky. Its brevity did not allow of its being drawn out there; but this principal pervades it.

"It will be remembered that the Bishop expressly declined making overtures, or specific suggestions. It may be said, however, that traces of some scheme are clearly discernible. If so, it is this: Let the Methodists exchange a doubtful for an undoubted Episcopacy—let them exchange their novel scheme of interchangeable circuits for their Bishops, for primitive diocesan Episcopacy: and the work of union would be more than half effected. Few other points of difference (none, perhaps, except that of a primative liturgy) which could involve the scruple of an enlightened conscience, would remain. An itinerancy, class-meetings and love-feasts, properly regulated, are all primitive, and would highly subserve the outward growth and inward purity of any branch of the Church Catholic.

"The remarks and feelings drawn forth on all sides, by the Bishop's letter, serve only to deepen the painful conviction, that the period of such return to a primitive and apostolic standard on the part of all concerned, is yet remote. And it should lead all true friends of the church to more fervent prayers, that the God of peace who holds the hearts of all men in His hands, would shed abroad a blessed divine influence, mellowing all unkindly feelings, removing all prejudices, destroying every degree of pride and passion, and disposing all hearts to that unity of the church in the bond of charity, which, more than any other human influence, will hasten the introduction of millenial glory."

Upon this extract, the editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate makes the following remarks:

"The admiration of the writer for all that is 'peculiar to the Church of England' is very strong. It is nevertheless admitted that the Protestant Episcopal Church possesses advantages over her elder sister:—Unfettered 'by act of Parliament' she can 'impart either the apostolic succession, or our (her) scriptural liturgy, or our (her) clerical costume, to as many as might be willing to receive the one, though not yet prepared to receive them all.' This 'the church of England never could' do. 'In other words,' the P. E. Church in the United States has the power of admitting all the Methodist ministers and all the Methodist members within its pale, by unchurching us. If we will say our ordination is invalid, or at best is very doubtful, that our general itinerant superintendency is newfangled, and will admit that the unbroken apostolic succession is a boon only to be imparted by Protestant Episcopalians, as they could bestow a prayer book or a great grown, alias 'clerical costume,' then we may all be made members of 'the church.' No objection possibly would be made to our taking with us 'itinerancy, class meetings, and love feasts,' provided that they be 'properly regulated' by 'the church!' Thus this contemplated union between the Methodists and Episcopalians is to be effected—by the former becoming merged in the latter. This is returning 'to a primitive and apostolic standard.' We highly respect the P. E. Church—in her we were baptised—in her communion our parents died—in her ministry and membership are some of our near connections—our earliest predilections were for her. But neither the prejudice of education, nor any argument we have yet seen—has weighed a feather against constantly accumulating reasons for attachment to the M. E. Church, and conviction of the apostolic legitimacy of our ministry. Far be the period of such a return as is sought after, of our church to any other. Long may other evangelical denominations live, by a holy ministry, a pure gospel, and a spiritual membership, to 'hasten the introduction of Millenial glory.' But we hope when freedom's banner waves in triumph over an evangelized world, that instead of being only known as having been, and as having ingloriously surrendered our very existence, we shall be present, with the Protestant Episcopal and other sister churches, to shout, 'not unto us, O Lord—not unto us—but unto thy great name, be the glory.'"

Sampson Henkle, of Tippecanoe, Indiana, in a letter to the Protestant, dated 5th instant, states that when he settled where he now resides, four years since, there was not an organized society of Protestant Methodists nearer than fifty miles. He now has a society of 80 members within three miles; fifty of whom were recently added at a protracted meeting.

Our old esteemed friend, Eli Henkle, in a communication in the same paper, giving an account of various items of religious prosperity, on his circuit, near Baltimore, Md., names one meeting of four weeks' continuance, at which sixty or upward were converted, and thirty added to the M. P. Church.

THE PROTESTANT.—It appears that our sermons to the editor of this paper have produced some effect; in his last number he asks us to pray for him. It seems he must be under conviction. He also wants us to "love" him. Certainly! How could we do otherwise? He has never made any invidious allusions to us—has never misrepresented us—said no hard things about us—and when we have asked for the use of his columns to defend ourself, they have generously and liberally been granted. How could we do otherwise than "love" so amiable and accommodating a man as this?

A protracted quarterly meeting was in progress in Zanesville, when the editor left for Mt. Vernon, which was very profitable. When it is over we shall give particulars.

For the Western Recorder.

BELMONT, OHIO, FEB. 16, 1841.

Br. Springer: When I wrote from Weston, I was on my way to the appointment for that circuit. My meeting was held on Little Skin Creek, fourteen miles east of Weston. The weather was very disagreeable, and the meeting house being in an unfinished state, the congregation was unpleasantly situated. Our people in that neighborhood will have a neat country church, when finished; and the members are deserving of public confidence for their enterprize and christian liberality. The meeting was believed to be a profitable one. Journeyed with the company of Br. Hughes, we proceeded by the way of Clarkesburgh and Pruntytown, preaching in each, to the appointments on Middletown circuit. The meeting was held in Middletown. Here we have one among the best societies in Western Virginia. The cause of God is prospering on the Middletown circuit. I am told that one hundred and fifty have been added since conference,—the circuit numbers nine hundred members.

Our next effort of a protracted character was in Bridgeport, on the Brownsville circuit. Brs. Hughes, Clarke and Davis labored with christian zeal. The sermons and exhortations were of the most pointed and appropriate character, but no revival of religion ensued. St. Paul preached Christ crucified to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness; therefore, ministers of Christ ought not to be discouraged when sinners turn a deaf ear to their entreaties. It may be that after we have finished our course and gone home to heaven, the sermons which we have preached will be remembered by many who now spurn them, and they may become our companions in glory. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

The first Sabbath of the New Year, we spent with Br. Brown in Pittsburgh. The most interesting part of the meeting was the love-feast, on Monday night. Such an amount of religious intelligence I have seldom witnessed. We left on Wednesday. The meeting was still in progress. It is hoped that some good may be done. Being under the necessity of passing by the way of Lisbon, I was prevented from reaching my appointments on the Ohio circuit, in consequence of the river being impassable.

The 16th ultimo, I visited Steubenville station. A meeting was in progress from the commencement of the month. Br. Dalbey's health was very delicate, in consequence of which, he labored comparatively little. Brs. Hughes, Dorsey, Burns and Matthews were laboring faithfully for a revival of religion. I remained until the 21st. Seventeen were added to the church. The Church, in this place, possesses a great amount of influence. Ill health prevented me from visiting Tyler and Marshall circuits.—Through the mercy of God, my health is measurably restored, and we are now holding a meeting in Belmont, on the Georgetown circuit, which is increasing in interest. I am glad to learn that Br. Reeves is laboring on the Sandusky circuit. I take this opportunity of saying that I deemed the reasons of Br. Mercer quite sufficient for granting him a release from his charge, and would respectfully suggest that the editor of the Recorder suspend his judgment in relation to the executive operations of the District until he is in possession of all the circumstances.

The obstacles which were in the way of Br. Mercer's going to the Sandusky circuit being now removed, he is willing to take the appointment until the close of the year. Should the brethren desire his services they will please signify it through the Recorder.

It will afford me pleasure to comply with the request of Brs. Bassett and Guest to meet them in Tiffin on the 17th June next, and I hope they will make arrangements for remaining over the Sabbath to aid in a protracted meeting.

We have cause of gratitude to God that He is carrying on His work through the instrumentality of His servants, in many places within the bounds of this District.

Yours, affectionately,

Z. RAGAN.

Mr. Editor: Please publish the following appointments:

FROM WASHINGTON.

There was a very exciting scene in the House the other day, during the discussion of the Treasury Note Bill. Mr. Adams addressed the Committee of the Whole, in a wide range, upon the various matters that have been brought before them. During his remarks, he intimated that the tone of Mr. Wise for several days had indicated a determination to consider himself as leader; but Mr. Adams declared that the sentiments of Mr. Wise on the subject of duelling and other measures, were such as would never permit him (Mr. Adams) to rank himself under his standard. Mr. A. went on to hold Mr. W. up as a duellist, and was several times called to order by Mr. Wise.

The Baltimore Sun's correspondent gives the following report of the affair:

Feb. 5.—Last evening after I closed, Mr. Adams spoke at some length on the subject of the anti-duelling law, and its connexion with the course of Mr. Wise. Mr. A. was repeatedly called to order on the ground of irrelevancy, but the Chairman, Mr. Casey, could not call him to order on that account, inasmuch as other gentlemen, during the debate on the Treasury note bill, had wandered much farther from the subject.—After Mr. Adams had concluded, Mr. Wise replied in a very impressive manner. He reviewed his past conduct in relation to duelling, and repeated that he looked upon the practice with the greatest abhorrence. As for the language used by the venerable gentleman from Massachusetts, had it come from a younger man, it would never have been tolerated. Mr. W. then proceeded to express his respect for Mr. A. notwithstanding all his faults, and to say that he would strike down any man who would attempt to injure so venerable a man, who himself, and his father before him, had filled the high office of President of the United States. The mild and forbearing reply of Mr. Wise, called forth loud applause from the galleries.

The pre-emption land bill passed the Senate by a vote of 31 to 19. The amendments, embodying the distribution and cession systems, were rejected. The bill is the original permanent prospective pre-emption system.

The treasury note bill, authorizing the issuing of five million of dollars worth of Treasury notes, has passed the House of Representatives, after having been so long one of the standing subjects of debate.

The general bankrupt bill has been taken up without opposition in the Senate. Mr. Hubbard moved that the bill be recommitted with instructions to report certain amendments materially affecting the bill, and designed to effect its passage.—"To include Corporations," was one of the instructions given. Other amendments were equally objectionable. The yeas and nays were ordered and the proposition was voted down—yeas, 15—nays, 20.

The House, on motion of Mr. John W. Jones, of Va., went into Committee of the Whole, and took up the Pension Bill.—Mr. Waddy Thompson, of S. C., moved an amendment to appropriate $100,000 to carry on the negociations now going on for peace, between the Florida Chiefs and General Armistead, of the United States Army. Mr. Thompson supported his motion to amend, and was warmly replied to by Mr. Giddings of Ohio. This bids fair to produce a long debate.

General Harrison was received by the inhabitants of Washington city on Wednesday. Thousands of the citizens were out to welcome him. The approach of the cars was announced by the firing of cannon, and upon their arrival a procession was formed composed of the Tippecanoe Clubs of the city and crowd of citizens. The procession marched from the depot to the City Hall, accompanied by thousands of the people. The Mayor of the city extended a welcome to him, to which the General answered in a brief speech. He has taken apartments at Gadsby's. There are great numbers of strangers in the city.

PAY OF FEMALE LABOR IN ENGLAND. The Nottingham (Eng.) Journal states, in illustration of the poverty of the female lower classes in that town, who are principally engaged in the lace manufactories, that it is the practice to let out gowns, shawls, bonnets, cloaks, and shoes, at from a halfpenny to a penny per day for the use of them. There is no instance of an article's being detained. This speaks well for their morality, as this punctuality is observed by females who can only earn 2s. 6d. per week.

THE CABINET.—Letters were received here from Washington last evening, stating that the Cabinet is to be composed as follows: Secretary of State, Mr. Webster; of the Treasury, Mr. Clayton; of War, Mr. Bell; of the Navy, Mr. Granger; Attorney General, Mr. Crittenden; Post Master General, Mr. Ewing. We are inclined to believethis will be the composition of Gen. Harrison's Cabinet.—Philadelphia paper.

CASE OF MCLEOD.—We learn from the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser of Friday that a large number of witnesses were in attendance at Lockport, before the grand jury, which was empannelled on Monday. In his chrge the grand jury Judge Bowen urged the propriety of committing all the testimony to writing, which of course retarded the progress of the investigation.—Phil. paper.

AN OLD POSTMASTER.—The oldest postmaster in the United States, died recently, Henry Tutwiller, P. M., at Harrisonburg, Va. He was appointed by Washington, and had held the office 40 years.

News from our Exploring Expedition—Massacre of American Officers by the Sandwich Islanders.

An arrival at New York brings dates from the Sandwich Islands to Oct. 24.—By it we learn that the exploring expedition had arrived at Honolulo. The following extract from a letter received at New York will give the particulars:

On the 24th of July, while on duty in the boats under the command of Lieut. Alden, surveying the island of Malaio, one of the Fejee Islands, Lieut. Underwood obtained permission to land with his boat's crew. Midshipman Henry also joined the party. His intention was to obtain some provisions that had been promised by the chief of the island the day before.

They had just made their landing when the natives rushed upon them from an ambush, in great numbers. Lieut. Underwood & Midshipman Wilkes Henry were killed as they were endeavoring to secure the retreat of the men, in which they succeeded, but at the cost of their own lives. Their bodies were rescued from the cannibals, for cannibals they are, as they afterwards confessed that the attack was made solely to procure human flesh for food.

They were buried on a small uninhabited island of Underwood's Group, which was named Henry's Island in memory of that gallant and ill-fated young officer.

The whole island on which the massacre took place was severely punished two days afterward, when the brig and schooner arrived. Nothing was spared but the women and children, and these, I am sorry to say, are by this time slaves to some chief of the neighboring group.—Fear is the only influence that can be brought to operate on the natives of the Fejee, except such as have been taught by the missionaries, and they are but few indeed.

THE SEIZURE OF AN AMERICAN VESSEL. Our readers will recollect that Lieut. Matson of the British Navy, seized and sent to the United States, the American vessel Tigris, on the charge of her having been concerned in the slave trade. She was sent into Salem, Mass. We learn from the Boston Post, that Judge Davis has delivered the opinion of the Court, which, in substance is that "The British officer had captured the Tigris, even without any order from his own government, and in violation of the National rights of the United States. Such a proceeding was not to be regarded with favor, and might be sufficient reason why the United States would not proceed in the matter of forfeiture."

A GOOD CHANCE FOR A SPECULATION. The following advertisement under the head of "Wife Wanted," is in the Batesville, (Ark.) News.

"Any gal what's got a bed, calico dress, Coffee pot and skillet, knows how to cut out briches, can make a hunting shirt, and knows how to take care of children, can have my services till death parts both on us."

LADY AGRICULTURALIST.—The successful competitor for the primiums offered for the best crops of Wheat and Indian Corn by the Agricultural Society of Kennebec Co., Me., was Mrs. Content W. Hames, of Winthrop. Her wheat crop was 29 bushels to the acre, of Tea wheat. Her corn crop consisted of 132 bushel of ears to the acre.

INSOLVENT LAW.—A petition is before the Legislature of Massachusetts for a repeal or modification of the Insolvent law. The complaint is that the officers and lawyers get all, and that the fees are high, the poorer and honester the debtor is, the less chance he has of relief, and unless he runs in debt $500, he cannot be benefitted by the act.

SLAVERY IN KENTUCKY.—The Louisville Public Advertiser quotes the Lexington Observer and Reporter as saying that "Kentucky would this day abolish slavery, if a Convention were called to re-model the Constitution," and "concurs" in the opinion. The two papers represent, in part, the two political parties in that State.

The greatest man living is said to be a modern Goliah, named Charles Freeman, now at Boston. He is a native of the State of New York, but nineteen years old, measures seven feet three inches in height, and weighs three hundred pounds. He is double jointed, a very Sampson in strength, is well proportioned, and formed with the most perfect symmetry.

SUSPENSION IN DELAWARE.—The Philadelphia U. S. Gazette of Saturday says: "We understand that the Directors of the several Banks in Wilmington, (Del.) held a meeting yesterday and resolved to suspend specie payments in consequence of information received from this city.

IS THE HUSBAND TO PAY HIS WIFE'S DEBTS?—In the Court of Common Pleas in New York, a case was tried, in which a husband was sued for articles furnished his wife, after she had quitted "his bed and board." His Honor, Judge Inglis, charged the jury that if a wife leave her husband of her own free will, he is not liable even for her necessaries. But if he drive her out, he is, in effect, giving her a bill of credit upon the world, and she binds him for all the necessary contracts she makes. The jury rendered a verdict for the defendant—the husband.

THE SLAVE TRADE AT RIO JANEIRO.—An officer of the United States ship Potomac, writing to the editor of the Delaware "Free Press," gives the following picture of the Slave Trade at Rio:

The slave trade has never been prosecuted with more vigor and success in Brazil, than during the past five years. Angola is the port in Africa which chiefly supplies this market. The difference in price between a negro in Angola and Rio, is but one hundred dollars—selling for one hundred and fifty dollars in Angola, and two hundred and fifty dollars in this place. Indeed, it is said to be common for vessels to bring slaves, as passengers, from one port to the other for one hundred dollars per head. This shippers can afford to do, as insurance can be effected on a cargo, for ten per cent., ad valorem. Some years since government took measures to suppress the trade, but they have not been or are not now very sincere in their profession, or more might have been done towards effecting it. In 1836 there was a Colonization Society founded here, by the charitable donations of individuals, for the purpose of returning all freed negroes to Africa, (I think Liberia,) but I do not know that any good whatever has resulted from it. One cargo, I am informed, was despatched, but was never heard from, and it is supposed the whole number (four hundred) were captured by a slaver and taken to Cuba. It is however, most probable the agents betrayed the confidence reposed in them and instead of taking them to Africa, shipped them to a slave-trading country and sold them.

VESSEL OF WAR SUNK.—A letter from J. L. McNamee & Co., dated Rio Janeiro, Dec. 17, informs us that the U. S. Sloop of War Marion, while the workmen were engaged in heaving her down for repairs, was sunk. It is said that every thing went on well until it was discovered that the vessel was taking water, but such was the leak (after it was discovered that the ship was sinking,) that it was impossible to right her, by making proper use of the pumps, which she had in addition to her own, to save her from going down. She finally sunk in about six fathoms water, still fastened to the Arsenal hulk by which she was being hove down; a part of her stern floated about two or three feet above water, and the remaining part of the hull, including bow-spirit and jib-boom were out of sight.

NEW INVENTIONS.—We learn from the London Standard that a Mr. Hill, a gentleman of great scientific ability, has ascertained that a woollen band or belt, if passed over two plain rollers, one fixed at the top of a shaft or a well, and the other below the surface of the water, by turning the upper roller at the rate of 1000 feet per minute, the adhesion of the water overcomes its gravity, and a much larger quantity, as in the case of the common pump, is raised and discharged in a uniform and continuous stream. The inventor at once secured a patent for so valuable and important a discovery, and it is now in use in various noblemen and gentlemen's estates throughout England. It is likewise applied to the drainage of waste lands, mines and coal pits.

THE INAUGURATION CAKE.—A most ingenious and beautiful piece of confectionary has been prepared at Georgetown, D. C., as an appropriate ornament to the festal board at the approaching national festival.

It is a correct model of the Capitol; its length is nine feet, breadth eight feet and a half, height to the top of the dome six feet.

The workmanship throughout is excellent: the statues of War and Peace, the figures on the tympanum, and even the smaller architectural ornaments, are executed in a style which does great credit to the artist.

The interior is filled with poundcake of superior quality—the weight about 800 pounds.

MCLEOD INDICTED.—On Saturdry, the 6th inst., the Grand Jury found a true bill for murder, against McLeod. The regular term of the Court of Oyer and Terminor will not be held till the 4th Monday of March, until which time unless a special commission shall be issued by the Governor and Senate, he must remain in jail.

UNITED SRATES BANK.—We understand, says the United States Gazette, that the Directors of the Bank of the United States have prepared a memorial to the Legislature, and sent it forward, setting forth the causes which have operated to defeat their unparralleled exertions to maintain specie payments, according to the requsition of the act of Febuary, 1840. They have referred to the unholy combination in New York to break down the banking interests in Philadelphia, and have pointed to the direct advantages which the commonwealth has derived from the funds of the United States Bank. The memorial is said to be written with remarkable vigor, and contains facts which cannot fail to give full force to the arguments of its author. The bank asks for itself what is asked for the other banks and no more.

GENEROUS.—The editor of the Boston Atlas, after being confined at home for a long time with a severe illness found, upon entering his printing office, a new press valued at $2000, that had been placed there by some of his warm-hearted and kind friends.

BANK SUSPENSIONS.—This is the all-prevailing ic of conversation at present, and to what gth it may extend, one wiser than ourself st foretel—it is beyond our ken. As noticed our last, the United States Bank was the t to close her doors against the drains that e constantly made upon her for specie.—lat every effort on her part to meet the de- nds which were made, after the suspension, have not much doubt,—but the tide was re- tless,—public confidence was impaired, if not olly lost.

The consequences of the course pursued by United States Bank were severely felt by all other banks of Philadelphia and the neigh- ring cities—and rumor and excitement became order of the day—no two individuals think- ; alike upon the subject matter brought so kingly home to all, yet each willing to relieve public mind by some suggestion of his own; low poor are they that have not patience! hat wound did ever heal but by degrees?"

The Philadelphia banks continue to cash their e and ten dollar notes. All are looking with tense anxiety to the Pennsylvania Legislature relief—for, from that quarter alone, relief ust come. If the law forfeiting their charters rigidly enforced, for all the banks have violated provisions, an incalculable amount of misery ust ensue. When they commence collecting their debts then will privation stare many an nest man in the face.

An order has been introduced into the Legis- ture to have an investigation into the affairs the United States Bank.

Public meetings have been held, and advise fferent courses to be pursued. One calls upon e Commonwealth to enforce the law against nks refusing to pay their liabilities in specie, d that an immediate law be passed by the Le- slature to prevent the circulation of notes of less denomination than five dollars.

At a meeting which had been called "without istinction of parties," at which Geo. M. Dallas esided, and Joseph R. Chandler officiated as ecretary, after much discussion, resolutions ere adopted, the substance of which was: that he Legislature ought to render prompt relief to is community in its present financial difficul- es, by suspending the penalties for the omis- ion of the banks named in the following reso- ution to pay their obligations in specie. This esolution includes the bank of North Amer- a, the Farmers' and Mechanics', the Girard, he Commercial, the Mechanics', the Western, he Northern Liberty, the Moyamensing, the Manufacturers' and Mechanics', the Southwark, he Kensington, the Penn Township and the Germantown. The resolution says the above anks are believed to be in a condition which ill enable them beneficially to receive and to ender available to the people the contemplated elief and assistance.

The resolution to include the United States Bank was lost.

The meeting also appointed a committee of even to proceed to Harrisburgh and urge upon he Legislature the adoption of "such measures f relief and assistance as are called for by the resent emergency." J. W. W.

BANK OF GALLIPOLIS.

As stated in our last, the present Cashier of this Institution, Mr. J. J. Coombs, has given to the public through the columns of the Gallipolis Journal, a narrative of this distressing calamity which has so suddenly fallen upon the community, through the instrumentality of this institution. This, the gentleman thinks, requires at the hands of its officers, an account of its origin, progress, and present condition, together with the causes which has led to its total failure.

The extreme length of the article renders it necessary for us to abridge in order to lay the subject before our readers, and in doing so we shall endeavor to present all the leading points, without descending to the minutiæ, which would be of but little interest to those at a distance from the scene of transaction.

Mr. C. informs us he had no connection with the Institution whatever prior to the 22d of January, 1841, and then only accepted the Cashiership at the earnest solicitation of the Directors and others, who thought his services might prove in some degree beneficial to the interest of the Institution and the public. No personal interest induces him to misrepresent or withhold facts in regard to the management of the Bank.

In the spring of 1837 some one in the village, in examining the act incorporating the Bank of Gallipolis, passed in 1817, came to the conclusion that said act was still in force. This led to a meeting of the Commissioners named in the act of incorporation, and on the 17th April, 1837, five of said commissioners met, and took measures to obtain the legal opinions of able counsel upon this subject. A legal opinion of high authority was obtained, that said act of incorporation was still in force, and that nothing hindered the commissioners named from opening books for the subscription of stock, and putting the Bank of Gallipolis into operation. The attempt was made, and the 5th day of the next June was fixed upon for the opening of books for the subscription of stock. Before the day, however, arrived, the general suspension took place, and the project for the time being was given up. This was the only attempt made by the citizens alone to establish the bank.

In the spring of 1839, a stranger by the name of Sherwood, from the State of New York, visited the village, representing himself as agent of some capitalists in Buffalo, N. Y., who had examined the act incorporating the Bank of Gallipolis, and who were desirous of subscribing a part or the whole of the stock, and putting the Bank into operation The citizens, generally, were highly gratified with the prospect of a Bank located in their village; and it was supposed by many that, in consequence of its bringing a large amount of capital amongst them it would be much better that the stock should be subscribed abroad than by the citizens. The commissioners were again got together by Sherwood, on the 3d day of June, 1839, and books were immediately opened, when Sherwood subscribed one thousand sbares in the name of Edmund F. Smith, and one thousand in the name of George N. Kinney, both of Buffalo, and paid in ten per cent. of the stock subscribed, being ten dollars on each share, and $20,000 in the aggregate. On the 8th of July following books were again opened, and twelve citizens of the place subscribed one share each, and paid in ten per cent. on each share, for the purpose of making themselves eligible as Directors, it being necessary to have some resident stockholders in the county, to constitute a Board of Directors, before the Bank could go into operation. This is all the stock ever subscribed, or owned, by any citizen of this State. An election of Directors was then held, and E. F. Smith, Lewis B. Menager, Augustin Loclercq, Lewis Newsom, Augustus H. Scoville, F. Carel, C. Creuzet, E. Naret, H. Cushing, Peter Menager, John Cating, Simeon Nash and Nathl. Gates elected; all citizens of the place except Smith and Scoville, who were from Buffalo, and who, it had been previously agreed with Sherwood, should be made President and Cashier, and who were accordingly elected to those offices; the former to that of President, and the latter to that of Cashier.

Notice of the election of a board of Directors was given to Gov. Shannon. After the reception of the report of Gen. House, who was appointed to examine and count the funds, the Governor issued the necessary proclamation, and on the 9th of Augnst, 1839, the Bank commenced business. The Bank at first, received but little credit abroad, and the officers and Stockholders being strangers, was regarded with some suspicions at home. The gentlemanly conduct of the President and Cashier won upon the citizens, and their apparent honesty and ability soon gained for the Bank unlimited confidence. In fact, its notes were preferred to that of any other Institution in the State.

Up to October, 1839, the business was conducted principally by the President and Cashier, but chiefly by the latter. About this time a young man from Buffalo by the name of Frederick E. Whiting came on and was employed as clerk and travelling agent, and continued as such up to the time of the late catastrophe.—Some sime last summer, another young man from Buffalo, by the name of James E. Eaton, came into the Bank as a clerk, and remained here until the change of officers, which took place on the 4th inst.

During the past summer and fall, occasional rumors reached them, of the bad credit of the paper of the Bank abroad, but at home the confidence of the public remained unshaken.

It August last, Mr. Smith left Gallipolis for the East, and had been absent but a short time before news came of his dangerous illness at Lowell, Mass. He partially recovered, but took a relapse and died in Buffalo, in November last. Scoville was elected President, and Whiting Cashier.

Early in last November, an unusually large number of gentlemanly looking strangers were observed about the hotels in the village, some of whom remained a day or two, and others a week or more; and the curiosity of the citizens was somewhat excited to know their business. Among these strangers were A. C. Farrington and E. N. Stratton, the late President and Cashier of this Bank. Stratton was there a week or ten days, and disappeared. Farrington, however, remained. He had no apparent business, but amused himself in drawing maps, and represented himself as having been a civil engineer. A few days before the late annual election of Directors of this Bank, Stratton again made his appearance; and it was soon rumored about town that Farrington had become the purchaser of a principal part of the capital stock of the Bank, and was to be elected President, and Stratton Cashier. On the day of the election (the 4th inst.,) these rumors were confirmed.—Scoville communicated to the Directors and stockholders, that Farrington had become the purchaser of the one thousand shares originally subscribed in the name of E. F. Smith, and that he, (Scoville,) together with Whiting and Eaton, were about to leave the institution and the place. This sudden change in the affairs of the Bank, excited some surprise in the minds of our citizens generally, and, we suppose in the minds of the Directors too. From representations made by Scoville, and the strangers about the place, suspicions of the citizens were lulled and no one doubted for a moment that the transfer was not a fair business transaction, or that the affairs of the Bank would not be conducted with the former supposed ability.

Farrington and Stratton were elected Directors in the place of Smith and Scoville, and Darius Maxon and Julus Regnier were elected in the place of John Cating and Augustin Leclercq. Farrington was then elected President, and Stratton Cashier. A committee of three of the Directors was appointed to examine the condition of the Bank, who, after a thorough examination of its affairs, were induced from their confidence in the honesty of Scoville to publish their report along with his last monthly statement, assuring the public that the same was strictly correct. The committee were all honest men, but unacquainted with practical banking. They were deceived; the rascality of those with whom they were unwittingly associated, proved an over-match for their honesty. Mr. Hatch, one of the Bank Commissioners, and an old Cashier, during the last summer, spent several days in examining the affairs of the Bank; and expressed not only his entire satisfaction with the result of his investigation, but commended the officers, in terms of the highest praise, to some of the Directors.

Immediately after the change of officers an unusual run upon the Bank commenced. All paper which came was redeemed in specie, currency and eastern drafts, until the currency was exhausted, and the specie to less than $15,000. Eastern drafts were still offered, but bill holders refused to accept them without an endorsement; and the firm of P. & E. S. Menager & Co. endorsed drafts to the amount of some 13 or $14,000, on a pledge of so much specie as security. During all this run, no apprehension as to the soundness of the Bank was felt by the citizens, and depositors not only suffered their deposits to remain, but actually continued making them up to the time of the failure, and the bills continued to pass currently in town till the last moment before the final explosion. For some time before Farrington came into office, the former officers had been selling, and giving in redemption of their circulation, a large amount of time drafts upon the Phenix Bank of N. Y. Farrington had drawn upon the City Bank of New York to the amount of $25,000. Just before the explosion, some of the Directors ascertained that Scoville's drafts came back protested. This was represented by Farrington as being the result of mistake as to the time of presentment, and insisted that they would still be paid. The large amount of protested drafts returned led to the suspicion that there was more paper in circulation than shown by the statement of the Cashier. On the 23d January the Directors met at the Banking House and demanded of the officers the register of notes issued, for the purpose of comparing the numbers on the bills redeemed, with a view of ascertaining whether a false statement had been made. This register could not be found. They then demanded the bill of Rawdon, Wright & Hatch, the engravers, to ascertain how many impressions had been furnished by them; and that was missing also. Farrington and Stratton were then removed from office, and Mr. L. B. Menager elected President, and Mr. J. J. Coombs Cashier. These events becoming known, the depositors and bill holders became alarmed, made a rush upon the Bank. The new officers found the currency all gone, the specie in pledge, and although nothing certain was known as to an over issue of circulation, yet the alarm was such, that depositors and bill holders offered to take the discounted notes of the Bank in satisfaction of their claims. This was done until all the paper supposed to be of any value, was disposed of in redemption of their notes, and in satisfaction of claims of depositors; and still large amounts of paper in circulation are heard from in almost every direction. There can be no doubt that a large over issue of circulation has been made, but to what extent is yet unknown. Some of the mysterious strangers have been traced, and it is certain they were all agents for putting the paper of the Bank in circulation, although they transacted no regular business with the Bank.

Investigations satisfy all that a conspiracy has existed between Scoville, Whiting, Sherwood, Farrington, and a host of others, to carry out one of the most stupendous swindling operations through the instrumentality of this Bank, which has ever been practiced by any set of scoundrels upon any community. The home business of the Bank was conducted prudently and honestly; still there can be but little doubt but that secret agents were admitted into the Bank at the hour of midnight, to freight themselves with its paper, for the purpose of distribution in different parts of the country. Hill, Andrews, Weed, Evans, Walbridge, Murry and Strider, are known to have been engaged as such agents. Stratton, the late Cashier, and Eaton, former agent, are also suspected of being concerned in the conspiracy. Examinations have been had before magistrates, in which the fact of such a conspiracy was proven to the satisfaction of all present. It was proved by a drayman, that during the last fall, he hauled to the river, for Scoville, at three several times, in the dead of night, specie amounting in all to twenty-one boxes, supposed to contain 1000 dollars each. A bag containing 5000 dollars in gold, which was examined and counted as part of the assets of the Bank, was afterwards carried away by Scoville, who showed Farrington a certificate that said gold was a special deposit, made by one Sykes, of Buffalo.

Farrington is now in jail, for the want of bail in the sum of one hundred thousand dollars.

While Farrington was drawing upon the City Bank of New York, he was asked by some of the Directors, what assurance he had that his drafts would be honored? He answered, that from the character of one man, John Murphy, who was upon paper falling due in said bank, he had the most perfect confidence that his drafts would be paid; and, that he had funds of his own in said bank, upon which he was drawing. After Farrington had been removed, upon examining the discount book, it appeared that two bills of Exchange, drawn by Maurice Sullivan, and accepted by John Murphy, of N. Y., and two promissory notes, drawn by John Murphy, and endorsed by John O. Batley, had been discounted in this bank, amounting to $59,900—and in the letter book was found a copy of a letter written by Farrington, since he came into office, enclosing said bills and notes to the City Bank, N. York, for collection. Afterwards a small package was found in the vault, neatly sealed up, and endorsed in pencil mark, "for Indiana and Ill., notes and acceptances." On opening this package it was found to contain notes and acceptances of the said Maurice Sullivan, John Murphy, and John O. Batley, payable at the United States Bank, Philadelphia, and at the City Bank, New York, amounting to near 400,000 dollars. Mr Smith's name is believed to be forged on a large amount of the bills in circulation. Mr. Smith's connection with the swindlers is the only evidence we have that he participated in this nefarious scheme.

Notwithstanding Farrington positively denied being, in any way, connected with the fraudulent transactions of the Bank of Millington, there was, on examining his baggage, a package discovered containing twenty thousand dollars in Millington notes.

"Frauds of the character of those which have been practiced in this Bank, must strike every one as crimes of the deepest dye. Yet, strange to say, the Legislature of Ohio has provided no penalty for such crimes, except a paltry fine, and thirty days imprisonment in the county jail. It is to be hoped the present Legislature will not adjourn, without passing a law to punish such scoundrels according to their deserts. Farrington is in jail, it is true, on a charge which, if he is found guilty, will send him to the Penitentiary. It is a crime, however, not necessarily connected with frauds of this character, and if he should get into the Penitentiary, it will be in consequence of stumbling into a crime, not at all necessary to the accomplishment of such frauds." J. W. W.

☞We propose to any company who may unite and will forward FIFTEEN DOLLARS cash, they shall have the paper sent to TEN names for one year, provided they receive their papers at the same office. But the cash must be sent in advance.

The Pekin, (Ill.) Reporter say—"The number of hogs packed in Pekin, this year will vary but little from 14,000 head. The average prices for the entire purchases were about $3, per cwt. altho' in consequence of an unexpectedly large quantity brought to this market, & the difficulty in procuring barrels and kegs, it declined towards the close of the operations to an average of about two dollars per cwt. We feel confident that 25,000, or more will be packed here in the ensuing season, and that no point west of Cincinnati will in a few years, do a larger business with the country in Pork and other produce business than Pekin.

THE CANADAS.—The Montreal Herald of the 16th inst. contains the proclamation of the Union of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, which took effect on the 10th. His excellency, Lord Sydenham, was to be sworn in as Governor General of the Province of Canada on that day. The 10th of February is by no means an unremarked day in the history of Canada. On that day, in the year 1763, the treaty of peace between France and England was signed, which ceded over Canada in full sovereignty from the crown of France to the crown of England.

MORE CITATIONS.—Two writs of citation, returnable in ten days, the time specified by law were awarded yesterday by the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, against the Bank of the United States, one at the instanee of Andrew Miller, for refusing to pay $1,350, and the other at the instance of George Alberti, for refusing to pay ten dollars. It is thought that applications will be made to the Court of Common Pleas now, daily, by persons holding the notes of the Bank.

THE NAZARETH CHURCH DISTURBANCE. The person who called the Rev. Mr. Sparry a liar at the Nazareth church on Sunday afternoon, was arrested and taken into the committee room of the Church, where he was shortly afterwards delivered into the custody of officers Miller and Wonderly. While being carried to the watchhouse he escaped from the officers.

BREACH IN THE CANAL.—The collector at the Cincinnati Office, states that the west embankment of the Miama Canal gave way on the 9th inst., about three miles from that city. The breach is large and will require something like a couple of weeks for its repair. This breach is particularly to be regretted just now, as large quantities of produce, which had been ice-bound in the interior, were daily making their way into the city.

PAID UP.—The United States Bank, yesterday, paid to Andrew Miller, who, it will be remembered, took out a citation against the institution, the full amount of the notes presented at their counter.—The money was paid over in gold.

CHEROKEE MISSION.—The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate states that all the schools in the Cherokee nation supported by the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, are discontinued on account of the Treasury being in debt.

DONATIONS.—Mrs. Christain Baker, of Boston, has bequeathed to the American Board of Foreign Missions and the American Education Society, equally, an estate worth probably forty or fifty thousand dollars; to the American Bible Society two thousand dollars; and to the American tract society one thousand dollars.

BURNING OF THE CAROLINE.—In the House of Representatives on Saturday, Mr. Pickens from the Committee on Foreign Affairs made a Report on the correspondence with the British Minister in relation to the burning of the steamboat Caroline, and the demand for the liberation of McLeod. The Report in the first place recapitulates all the principal facts connected with the burning alluded to, and then proceeds to analyse the correspondence between the British and American Ministers. Towards the conclusion, our other points of difference with Great Britain are alluded to, such as the Boundary Question and the Right of Search; and the Report concludes with this language:

All these subjects make every question between us, at this peculiar juncture, of the deepest interest.

Besides this, we are both permanently destined to have, perhaps, the most extensive commerce of modern nations.—Our flags float side by side over every sea, and bay, and inlet of the known globe.

She moves steadily upon her objects with an ambition that knowns no bounds. And wherever she has had a conflict of interest, she has rarely yielded to any power.

At this moment she presents to the civilized world the spectacle of the greatest military and commercial power in combination ever known.

From her vast possessions in every quarter of the globe, and her peculiar commercial system, she has been made the reservoir of the wealth of nations.

Her internal resources, skill, labor and machinery, with her capital, are beyond calculation. Her natural position, being about midway the coast of Europe, gives her great control over the outlets and currents of commerce.

Her military occupation of Gibraltar, Malta, the Ionia islands, and recently of St. Jean d'Acre, give her ascendancy on the Mediterranean and the Levant, while St. Helena and the Cape of Good Hope give her possession over the currents of trade along those extensive coasts. Then Bombay, Calcutta, and her immense possessions in the East Indies, together with her recent movements in the China seas and islands, enable her to extend her power over those vast regions that have slumbered for ages in solitary and enervated magnificence. She possesses Falkland island but to control the commerce that passes around Cape Horn—while Trinidad gives her all she desires in the Carribbean sea. Halifax at one point, and Bermuda at another, stand out in great force over our own coast from one extremity to the other.

Her positions all over the world are at this moment in a military point of view, equal to a million of men under arms Her continued conflicts in the mighty regions of the east, only enable her officers to become skilful and to improve in the art of war, while her great armies and extensive fleets draw their support from the immense countries seized and occupied. In the present juncture of affairs, no statesman can overlook these things. Steam power has recently brought us so near each other, that in the event of any future conflict, war with its effects, will be precipitated upon with much more rapidity than formerly.

Avarice and ambition are the ruling passions of modern times, and it is vain to shut our eyes to the state of things around us. It remains to be seen what effect steam power is to have upon changing and modifying the whole art of defence and war. It may be a great engine for again levelling mankind, and reducing everything to a contest of mere physical force. In that event it might be difficult to conjecture what system of national defence will stand the test of time and experience.

We have a deep stake in peace, and fondly hope the repose of the world will not be disturbed. We have certainly not the least desire for any rupture. Firmness and a wise preparation, will long preserve us from such. But while no temptation should ever prompt us to do injustice on the one hand, so no consideration, on the other hand, should ever induce us to submit to permanent wrong from any power on earth, no matter what the consequences may be.

Your committee would conclude by expressing a firm belief that all our points of difficulty may be honorably and amicably adjusted, and that harmony may long be preserved by both Governments pursuing a liberal and generous policy, congenial to the interests and feelings of both people, and compatible with the spirit and genius of an enlightened age.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Flour 3,00; wheat 50 cents.

PHILADELPHIA, February 16.—Flour—3 a 4000 bbls have been sold for exportation on the Delaware at $4,75 per bbl. In Broad street it is held at $4,62 a $4,75, choice brands in small lots sell at a trifle above these rates.

Grain—Pennsylvania, Wheat is worth 93 a 95 cents, and southern 84 a 90 cts per bushel.

Cattle Market—Beef Cattle—540 in market; 106 from Virginia—sales from 6¼ to 8c; Cows and Calves—140 in market, sales from $27 to $35; Springers sold from $18 to $27. Dry Cows, sold from $10 to $17. Hogs—480 in market, sales from $5½ a $6. Sheep—1600 in market, sales from $2,25 to $3,50.

CINCINNATI, February 9.—Hogs per cwt, 3,25 a 3,75; Flour from City Mills, 3,31; do wagons, 3,18; Bacon, hog round, 6; Shoulders, 4½; Sides, 6¼ a 6½; Hams, 8 a 9; Duffield's & Davis' sug. cu'd 11; Joles, 3 a 3½; Pork, in bulk, hog round, 5; Sides, 5; Shoulders 3½ Hams, 6½.

BALTIMORE, February 13.—Flour. There was a slight improvement in the price of Howard street Flour early in the week, induced probably in part by the sudden re-suspension of specie payments by the Banks, and sales of a few hundred bbls. of uniform brands were made from store, at 4,53a$4,56 per bbl. On Thursday, some holders were contending for these improved prices and even for something further, but without realizing, while others were operating at $4,50. Good brands were taken freely at his latter price yesterday, but the demand has fallen off, and the market closed with the article rather dull. In some instances, early in the week, as high as $4,50 had been paid from wagons, but generally, both from wagons and cars, the rates were $4,37½ and so remain. City Mills Flour continues firm at $4,62½, with a moderate demand.

THE HOME MARKET.—There were between 220 and 250 head of Beef Cattle in market this week, not exceeding 120 sold; the inferior qualities, which were few, at $5,50 and the others at 6a7,50, chiefly at $7 per 100 lbs. From 20 to 30 head were taken to Washington, and the remainder laid over. Live Hogs are more plenty, and have sold at 5,75a$6, the latter price it is now difficult to comand.—Lyford.

MASSILLON, February 11.—Wheat, per bushel 56; Corn, 20; Oats, 15; Potatoes, 18¾; Corn meal, 37½; Butter, per lb. 7c; Eggs, per doz. 8c; Lard per lb. 6¼; Cheese, 6c; Flour, per bbl. $2,75; Pork, $12; Pork, per cwt, $3; Salt, bbl. $2,75 White Fish, $8; Pickerel, $6; Mackerel, $20; Coffee, best per bag, 15; Bacon, per cwt. 5a$6; Sole Leather per lb. 22a25.—Gazette.

PITTSBURGH, February 12.—Owing to the cold weather, and the difficulties in the money market, business is very dull. The stocks of Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Shoes, Iron, Nails and Pittsburgh manufactures generally, are good for the season, and the stock of Dry Goods are daily improving. As our merchants very cheerfully take all kinds of good bank notes in payment, country merchants, and our citizens generally, can visit our market to good advantage.

Flour—is dull. Sales at $2,87½a2,94 from wagons, and $3 to 3,25 per bbl from stores.

Cloverseed—From wagons $4, and from stores 4,25, at which about 100 bushels were sold in two lots. Timothy seed, $1,62½a1,75 per bush.

Sugar—Is firm. Sales of about 12 hhds at 6¾ cts per lb. currency.—Harris.

Our thanks to Br. Gardiner, of Illinois, we have credited him with 1st, 2d, and half of 3d volume. Do what you can for us.

Br. Barnes, the paper shall come free to the family of Br. J. Haughton. I recently sent a list of dues in your place to Br. M. Lyon; if he has mislaid it let me know, and I will send again.

The post master at Summerford, Madison, O., says, W. Rowen does not take his paper from the office. He owes us four dollars and fifty cents. Will some of our agents see to this matter?

Br. E. K. Martie, of St. Marys, Mercer, Ohio, has written to us to know why the obituary of U. McKinnon was not published; he will find it in our 61st No., a copy of which we have forwarded to him.

We have received of C. Woodruff $1,25 for the Christian World, to be directed, "Rev. G. W. Warren, Canal Dover, Tuscarawas county, Ohio." As this subscriber is a Baptist clergyman, Br. Stockton will be so good as to send the numbers from the beginning, promptly.

Br. J. Clarke, if you will refer to the 17th No. of the Recorder, you will see the names of Collier, Eubank, Harris, Murry, G. Smith, W. Smith and T. Smith, which we acknowledge to have received the pay for by you, though, in reality, we have received but ten dollars, (eight by Br. Johnson, and two per 43d No. Recorder,) leaving a balance in our favor, in your hands, of four dollars; you now acknowledge to have received two dollars from I. Wright, which we have credited to him and charged to you; so you now owe us six dollar for dues collected in advance for 1st vol. Western Recorder, from the above names.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SPEAK NOT TO HIM A BITTER WORD.

Would'st thou a wanderer reclaim,
A wild and restless spirit tame,—
Check the warm flow of youthful blood,
And lead A LOST ONE back to God?
Pause, if thy spirit's wrath be stirred,
Speak not to him a bitter word.
Speak not—that bitter word may be
The stamp that seals his destiny.

If widely he hath gone astray,
And dark excess has marked his way,
'Tis pitiful—but yet beware,
Reform must come from kindly care.
Forbid thy parting lips to move,
But in the gentle tones of love.
Though sadly his young heart hath err'd,
Speak not to him a bitter word.

The lowering frown he will not bear,
The venom'd chidings will not hear.
The ardent spirit will not brook
The stinging tooth of sharp rebuke.
Thou would'st not GOAD the restless steed
To CALM his fire or check his speed,—
Then let no angry tones be heard,—
Speak not to him a bitter word.

Go kindly to him,—make him feel
Your heart yearns deeply for his weal:
Tell him the dangers thick-that lay
Around his "wildly devious way"—
So shalt thou win him, call him back
From pleasure's smooth seductive track,
And warnings thou hast mildly given,
May guide the wanderer up to Heaven.

NOT MARRIED YET.

Not married yet! ah, let me think—
How horrid is the thought,
That eighteen summers have escaped,
And still am not caught;
And still—and still—'tis like to be,
If thoughts don't alter soon—
No matter—I'll live on in hope,
At least another moon.

No offer yet!—ah, what a thought,
For a maiden past eighteen,
With face and form as faultless too,
As any ever seen;
Ah, wherefore do they keep me back,
Ah, why this long delay?
No man need ask this maid but once
To name the wedding day.

MR. BAIRD IN RUSSIA.

St. Petersburgh, Oct. 17, 1840.

It was with no little anxiety that I came to this city six weeks ago. On a former visit, made three years ago, I made arrangements to have my History of the Temperance Society translated into the Russ and published. This task was undertaken by Dr. Haus, of Moscow, and the sum of $400 was sent, about two years ago, for the accomplishment of that object. But as I had not been able to learn that the work had been published, and as I had heard that the formation of temperance societies, which had been commenced in the Baltic provinces a year or two since had been discouraged and forbidden by the Minister of Finance, I had many fears lest nothing could be done for the promotion of this great cause in this vast empire. It was with such feelings that I came hither, as I have remarked, a few weeks ago.

Upon my arrival, I found that the Temperance History had not been published. This led me to go to Moscow as soon as possible, to ascertain what were the reasons which had caused the delay of its appearance in the Russ. I there learned from Dr. Haus, that various difficulties had prevented an earlier publication of the work; but that it was now finished, and only awaited a revision, in order to be submitted to the Censors. I therefore sat down and wrote a continuation of the work from the year 1835, until the present time, which was at once translated into Russ, and added to the original work. Having done this, and having met with the friends of the cause in several meetings, both here and at Moscow, I prepared to leave the country. This I was anxious to do, both because I dreaded a longer stay in this climate, in my infirm, or rather delicate state of health, and also, because I thought there was no possibility of having an interview with the Emperor, who had just returned from a long absence in Germany, and was, as might be expected, greatly occupied by the accumulated cares of the State. My stay, had, however, made me acquainted with several distinguished men here, who were induced to take an interest in the object of my visit. Among these were Prince Alexander Gallitzin, and the Ministers of the Interior, and of the Domains of the Crown. All of these gentlemen were extremely desirous that I should remain two or three weeks longer, and see if I could not have an audience from His Majesty. The last named of these gentlemen, in particular, was deeply interested in the subject. As Minister of the Domains of the Crown—a new and very important department of the government—he has charge of the serfs or peasants of the Crown, who are twenty-one millions in number.—Over these it is his duty to watch, and he has long been desirous of arresting among them the habit of excessive drinking. And he had even taken some measures to effect this most important object. Of course he was greatly interested in my visit; and it was through him that the subject was brought before the attention of the Emperor. The consequence was that I was invited by his Majesty to attend to the service of the chapel, in the Palace Tsarkoe Zelo, one of the Imperial summer residences, at the distance of about sixteen miles from St. Petersburg,) last Sabbath morning, with the view of being presented to his Majesty immediately after the services. I accordingly repaired thither at the appointed time, and was presented to the Emperor, the Empress, and the Grand Dutchesses, their daughters. The Emperor, in a long interview, in which I was allowed to present the subject fully to him, alone received me in the kindest manner, and acceded at once to the proposal to have the History of the Temperance Societies published in the Russ. He even went further, and expressed a desire that it should be translated into the Finnish language, and be published in that language, and widely circulated in the part of the Empire in which that language is spoken. This I of course rejoiced to promise him should be done. And as I expressed some fear of the censors, his Majesty was good enough to say that he would see to it that no hindrance should be experienced from that quarter. Nor was this all. At the dinner which succeeded the audience his Majesty alluded again to the subject, as did the Empress, and the Hereditary Grand Duke, and assured me of his interest in the subject, and that he would not lose sight of it.—On that occasion I was also presented to many distinguished Russians whom I there met, some of whom I trust, feel not a little interest in the cause, although it is to most of them a new one.

Since my interview with the Emperor I have arranged with the Count Strogonoff, the Minister of the Interior, for the publication of the Temperance History, in Russ and Finnish, as the Emperor desired me to do. And as it is desirable that large editions should be published (at least 10,000 copies in the former, and 5.000 in the latter,) the sum of $600, at least in addition to the $400 already sent to accomplish the object. This sum the friends of temperance in our country must furnish. Without doubt, the Russian Government will one day greatly aid this good work; but I did not think it prudent to ask this favor of the Emperor at this time.

During my stay in this city, and before I saw his imperial majesty, I met in little groups of twenty to one hundred persons who had become interested in the temperance cause, and endeavored to strengthen their hands. It was in answer to the prayers of these people, without doubt, that God has so wonderfully ordered this matter. Many of them are living proofs of the blessedness which flow from the adoption of the temperance principles having been rescued themselves from the destroyer. Nor are these the only persons in Russia who have adopted the principles of total abstinence. There are many in the southern Baltic provinces.—By the way, I have just heard a most interesting anecdote in relation to a distinguished Russian Nobleman in Courland who was so convinced by reading the temperance history in German, of the evils of drinking ardent spirits that he agreed to pay the government the sum which the retailers had undertaken to pay for their licences, in order to have no brandy sold on his extensive estates. This fact is worthy of the best times of temperance efforts in any country.

REMARKS

On the 1 Cor. 13: 13, by the Rev. THOS. HUGHES, Welsh Missionary; translated from the Welsh by D. E. THOMAS, Newark, Ohio.

"And now abideth Faith, Hope, Charity, these three; but the greatest of these is Charity"—in Welsh, LOVE.

In this chapter the Apostle designs to teach the Corinthians, to value things according to their intrinsic worth, and not admire all that glitters, whether gold or tinsel. Like many others, the church at Corinth overvalued spiritual blessings, or gifts, and sought their own credit in the use of them; but the Apostle declares that the most valuable of these—the gifts of miracles and prophecy—is comparatively nothing. Love, the image of God, the bond of perfection and the fulfilling of the law, would flourish abundantly, when the gift of miracles and prophecy, human science—splendid abilities—admired eloquence would vanish away.

1. Faith is a firm belief, or credit on the declarations and promises of God.—It views God through his word as characterized by veracity, and recognizes the Almighty as the source and author of truth. When the inquiry is made, Has God promised, and will he not fulfil? Has he threatened, and will he not execute? Faith answers without hesitation: What God said he will perform. Being convinced, merely, is not faith. The Spirit of God shall convince the world of sin, &c., while but a part of it shall place that implicit reliance upon God and his word, which constitutes Faith. Men, who are without Faith, place God in an attitude which they would not wish to occupy. How often is it said "what is a man without his word?" Can an unbeliever speak thus of depraved humanity, and yet disbelieve the Deity in his declarations?

2. The object of Faith is the Holy scriptures or the word of God. It is impossible to exercise Faith towards God or man while no declarations are made.—Hence, without Divine Revelation there could be no Faith. The evidence of this revelation is unquestionable; therefore it must be the greatest sin on the part of man in the land of bibles, to be without faith.—The unbeliever charges God with lying. No sin can be greater. They who commit it are called by the Apostle to decide the greatness of their own punishment when he inquires, "What shall the end be of them who do not obey (Welsh disbelieve) the Gospel of God."

3. The effects of Faith is a disposition to glorify God—to trust in him and place entire dependence upon him for every promised blessing. Good works are also the effects of Faith. Faith without works is dead, like a body without a soul, clouds without rain, or a house without inhabitants. Faith to man, is known by good works. Your neighbors have no evidence that you have Faith, if you do not abound in good works.—Let your Faith be as the Faith of Abraham.

II. The second grace mentioned in the text is Hope. This grace, in its nature, is a patient expectation of some good to come. It disclaims all relation with every thing that is not good. Like the magnet turning to the north, Hope turns to the future. Hope that is seen is no hope; for what a man sees why does he hope for it? The object of Hope is the unalloyed and endless happiness of the saints in heaven, and the constant expectation of being delivered from corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Our hope should have a good foundation, for many will be disappointed. Every Christian should place his hope upon the foundation of Moses and the Apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. Hope well founded is an anchor to the soul. The effect of Hope is joy and gladness. Although Hope penetrates futurity, yet the joy arising from it is present. "We," said the Apostle, "rejoice in the hope of the Glory of God." Rom. 5: 2.

III. The third grace in the order of the text is Love. This term is intended by the Apostle to show the affections being made holy, or when the affections are placed upon holy and spiritual things. From this definition it will be seen, that the impenitent do not possess it; hence they are destitute of the first principles of the gospel, which requires Love to God and man. Were any one to possess Faith and Hope it would lead to the possion of Love. Every one of the three mentioned, grow together as different members of one body. Love to God is a sign of our acquaintance with him; and the want of it shows that we are strangers to him. The object of Love is Jehovah himself, in particular, and his Word, his people, his house, & his work in general. Christians love God because he is what he is; and that he is their portion, their inheritance and their all.—Because of his infinite goodness towards them—his intimate relation to them as a Father and Saviour, and in a word, because he first loved them. The effect of Love to God is the keeping of his commandments. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." 1 John, 2: 3, 4.

After noticing thus every grace mentioned in the text, we will notice particularly the declaration, "the greatest of these is charity."

1. They abide now, or (according to Welsh) this hour. Faith, Hope, and Love are not like visitors, come and depart, but they abide with us. Many may have an imperfect profile or likeness of these. You may always know the genuine by their abiding with you. There is a difficulty in getting a profile of these blessings. A profile is designed to show likeness at a particular period, such as youth, middle age or old age; but in no instance can it show the exact likeness at all of these periods. Faith, Hope, and Charity, or Love, are always on the march of improvement, becoming stronger and brighter. Therefore you cannot receive a form of them to any advantage. The likeness is stationary, but the genuine is progressive. Again: They abide now. It is in vain to dream of heaven, if you have nothing now. Now we must have everlasting life, or be without it forever. Here is the faith and patience of the saints. These three abide in conjunction together—like Ruth and Naomi they love to dwell together. They abide visibly—like strong fire, love burns up every thing designed to cover it from the sight of others. They abide for the good of the possessor. Riches are often bestowed as punishment upon the possessor, but those for good.

2. "The greatest of these is love."—This does not imply that Faith and Hope are insignificant. All may be great, but Love is the greatest. Faith is much admired in Hebrews, 9th chapter, and Hope in the 6th chapter of the same epistle.

1. Love is greater in its nature. The law requires this, and the blessed lawgiver decided that "On these hang all the law and the prophets."

2. Love is the greatest in its object.—It is no small thing to trample under foot the object of Faith—the Holy Scriptures: How much more the Author and giver of them. The object of Hope—the happiness of the saints—is far above the comprehension of the best of men. But he that prepareth the feast is greater than the feast itself, as the builder of the house is greater than the building. God is above all.

3. Love is the greatest in its effects—keeping the commandments. We are taught by the wise man, Eccl. 12: 13, 14, that this is the conclusion of the whole matter. "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty, or happiness, of man." The effect of faith was trusting in God, &c., and of hope joy and gladness. These seem to be directed to increase the comfort of man, but love to promote the cause of God.—The effect of faith and hope is best known to the possessor, but of Love, known to all, hence the Saviour exhorted men to let their light shine that God may be glorified.

4. There is more of the image of God in love than in faith and hope. We do not read at any time that God believes or hopes, but how often is it said that God loves and gives evidence of that love, and last of all we are told that God is love.

5. Love does more good to others, than faith and hope. While the two latter comfort and cherish the hearts of christians, the former opens the door of liberality and bestows her bounty upon the poor, the fatherless and the widow. The heathen are witnesses of these things. Love made a Judson to leave a home, undergo the perils of a long journey and the privations of a barbarous land.

6. Love, in point of existence, is prior to Faith and Hope. Man in his primitive state had no particular need of Faith and Hope. He could not have believed the promise before it was made, or hope for a better condition when he had the image of his Creator.

7. Love is the greatest in point of duration. "Love never faileth." We believe that which we do not see, and hope for that which we do not enjoy. We love what we see and enjoy. Faith will soon be turned into vision, and Hope into enjoyment; but Love will continue forever, and increase through eternal ages.—The promises of God are so many drafts upon the Bank of Heaven made payable to Faith. Faith presents the drafts, God pays the demand, and the draft is put in the vault of Heaven. The possessor is perfectly satisfied with the honesty and the ability of the Heavenly Bank.

THEY MET BUT ONCE.

BY THOS. MOORE.

They met but once in youth's sweet hour,
And never since that day
Hath absence, time, or grief, had power
To chase that dream away.

They've seen the suns of other skies,
On other shores have sought delight;
But never more to bless their eyes
Can come a dream so bright.

They met but once,—a day was all,—
Of love's young hopes they knew,
And still their hearts that day recall
As fresh as then it flew.

Sweet dream of youth!—oh, ne'er again,
Let either meet the brow
They left so smooth and smiling then,
Or see what it is now.

For, youth, the spell was only thine,
From thee alone th' enchantment flows
That makes the world around thee shine
With light thyself bestows.

They met but once—oh, ne'er again,
Let either meet the brow
They left so smooth and smiling then,
Or see what it is now.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

The country is flooded with political news pers in great abundance; but these, genera are so devoted to political controversy as to ford little else, and many of them are so bit in spirit and so violent in language as to ren them unfit, and even unsafe visitors of the fan circle. There are also a number of papers o religious cast, under the special patronage, devoted to the inculcation of the peculiar vi of the different religious sects, but these are quite suited to the general reader and do serve the purposes of a miscellaneous fan newspaper. A few literary papers there are in the west—some light, some heavy—chi published but monthly. All these are w enough in their way, and we have nothing say in opposition to them. But there is among them what can be properly called a Fa ily Newspaper. Several attempts have be made to get up weekly papers to supply t deficiency in the periodical literature of t west, but they have not been adequately s tained; and in consequence, the entire west supplied with family newspapers from the ea so far as there is a supply at all. And our gre western valley drained of thousands of doll to pay for eastern papers, which come to us n so fresh as we could have papers of our own, a burdened with a heavier tax of postage.

We have now undertaken to supply the desi eratum, by presenting the western public wi a western family weekly, containing a larg quantity of select reading matter than any we tern paper of any description we have ever see and at a lower price. This we are enabled to d by publishing our weekly in connection with family daily paper, as we can thereby use t choice reading matter of six daily papers (b sides other matter) in making up each numb of the weekly paper. Feeling ourselves prepare to furnish our patrons as good and as cheap paper, at least, as they can get by sending the money away from among us, we may confident expect a liberal support; and our liberal encou agement thus far, assures us of this result.

Local Agents will be appointed at all th principal points in the west and south-wes which will save subscribers the expense of orde ing paper by mail and of making remittances.

The "Western World" is printed on good typ and fine paper, on a mammoth sheet of the larges size, each paper containing about thirty column of select reading matter, at the very low pric of two dollars a year, or—still lower—six copie for ten dollars—payable in advance in all cases All letters to the editors or publishers must b post paid.

Editors in the west and south, with whom w exchange, will confer a favor—which, on occa sion, will be reciprocated—by inserting ou prospectus and noticing the paper.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians o the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.—Price 25 cents.

OREGON TERRITORY.

Concluded.

e third and last natural division of Ore-is the high country, between the Blue and y Mountains. The southern part of this n is a desert, of steep rocky mountains, deep w valleys, called holes by the fur traders, wide plains, covered with sand or gravel, gen-y volcanic, which can never be reduced cae of supporting more than a very small numof inhabitants. The distinguished features is portion of Oregon, are its extreme dry-, and the great difference in temperature ben the day and night. It seldom rains, ex-during a few days in the spring; there is snow in the valley in winter, though a t deal falls occasionally on the mountain
; and no moisture is deposited in dews.— thermometer, says Capt. Wyeth, stood at teen degrees of fahrenheit at sunrise, on the s of Snake river, in August, 1832, and at ty-two degrees at noon of the same day; that a difference of forty degrees between ise and noon is not uncommon. Such cir-stances are alone sufficient to render any mpt at cultivation, in this region, entirely less; and a great portion of the surface is over so strongly impregnated with salts of ous kinds, that plants could not flourish in ven if a sufficiency of heat and moisture regularly supplied.

he two branches of the Columbia river rise his region, the northernmost of which rises the fifty-fourth, and the southernmost in forty-second degree of latitude. Lakes also nd in this region of the Oregon.

he northern part of the third division of region, about the Clarke river, is less barren n that which has just been described; the ys are wider, the rains more frequent, and soil is freed from salt by the numerous streams h traverse it.

The country east of the Rocky Mountains, for more than two hundred miles, is about as dry and barren as that immediately on the western side; offering no means of support for a population, except in the vicinity of the rivers, which flow through it from the great chain into the Mississippi. The interposition of this wide desert tract between the productive regions of the Mississippi and those of the Columbia, must retard the settlement of the latter countries and exercise a powerful influence over their political destinies.

Columbia is the principal river in Oregon.—There are, however, many others of considerable magnitude, all abounding in fish, particularly the salmon, which ascend the Columbia and its branches to the Blue Mountains, forming the principal means of subsistence for the natives of the first and second, or middle regions of the Oregon, which are supposed to number about twenty thousand.

In the Oregon Territory, near the Columbia, on the Wallamet, the Hudson Bay Company have formed a settlement for its retiring servants; and another has been formed by American citizens, under the direction of Methodist missionaries, which is said to be in a prosperous condition. A large body of emigrants to this place sailed from New York in the latter part of 1839, previous to which there were employed on the Oregon mission upwards of twenty persons.

"Astoria, the first settlement made on the Columbia river by the Americans in 1811, is on the south side of the river, eight miles from its mouth. It consists at present of only one house, occupied by the Hudson Bay Company, and called Fort George."

Capt. Gray, of Boston, of the ship Columbia, entered the mouth of the Columbia river, which he named after his ship, on the 11th of May, 1792. He was, in all probability, the first to ascend that stream in a ship. He ascended about twenty miles, where he anchored and remained trading with the natives a number of days, and then again returned into the Ocean. If, therefore, priority of discovery, furnishes a claim to a country, the American title to the regions watered by the Columbia, is undoubtedly the best that can be furnished.

Julius Rodman and a party of citizens of the United States made an expedition from the mouth of the Missouri across the continent to the Pacific, between the years 1791 and 1794.

In 1804, Capts. Lewis and Clarke began their expedition across the continent, and on the 15th of November, 1805, they arrived at the mouth of the Columbia river. They returned to St. Louis on the 23d of September, 1806.

A trading post was established on the head waters of the Columbia river, in 1810, by the Missouri Fur Company; at its head was an enterprising Spaniard, named Manuel Lisa. The post was established on the Lewis branch of the Columbia, and was the first ever established by white men in the country drained by the Columbia.

The Pacific Fur Company was formed at New York in 1810, by John J. Astor, a very rich German merchant, and a few other gentlemen.—The company fitted out the ship Tonquin, for the purpose of establishing trading posts on the north west coast of America. The Tonquin sailed from New York in September, 1810, and arrived at the mouth of the Columbia in March, 1811. Her goods and passengers were landed at a spot eight miles from the Ocean, which, in compliment to the founder, was called Astoria. The company, during this year, also established a trading post on the Columbia, four hundred miles from its mouth. Meanwhile, a party of the Pacific Company's men proceeded from St. Louis, under the direction of Mr. Hunt, up the Missouri, to the country of the Arickara Indians, thence across the Rocky Mountains, and down one of the branches of the Lewis in the Columbia, and down to Astoria, near its mouth, where they arrived in the spring of 1812, having undergone innumerable difficulties from cold, fatigue and want of food.

During the year 1811, a detachment of persons in the service of the North West Company arrived at the mouth of the Columbia. They had left Montreal the year previous, with the object of anticipating the Astor company in occupying the mouth of the Columbia. After crossing the Rocky Mountains, on their way down the Columbia, they built huts and hoisted flags, and bestowed names on various spots, by way of taking possession, as they considered it, of the Territory for their sovereign. But they were too late. The most important point was occupied.

Thus, if priority of occupancy, strengthens a title to a country, ours has that advantage.—America, therefore, presents her claim to the Oregon Territory, on the ground of priority of discovery, if indeed her claim to it needed any additional force or validity.

In 1823, General Ashley crossed the Rocky Mountains with a company of one hundred men. In 1832, Capt. Bonnerill, of the United States Army, led a company of men into the Oregon Territory, for trading purposes.

Capt. Wyeth has made two expeditions into the regions watered by the Columbia.

The southern boundary of the United States, according to the Florida treaty, concluded on the 22d of February, 1819, commences at the Sabine, from thence to the sources of the Arkansas, and from thence to the 42d degree of latitude, and thence along that parallel westward to the Pacific. According to this treaty, a small portion of the Oregon Territory belongs to Spain; that is, from Cape Mendocius near the 40th degree of latitude, to the 42d degree.

Our northern boundary, according to the convention between the United States of America and Great Britain, signed at London, October 20th, 1818, commences at the north western point of the Lake of the Woods, along the 49th parallel of north latitude, to the Stony Mountains. That is the most northwesterly point to which our boundary on the north west is defined by treaty or contract. By the 3d article of our treaty with Russia, dated February, 1824, it is agreed that the citizens of the United States shall form no establishments on the north west coast of America to the north of 54 degrees and 40 minutes of north latitude; and that there shall be none formed by Russian subjects, or under the authority of Russia, south of the same parallel.

It cannot, therefore, be denied, that the titles of the United States, to the possession of the regions drained by the Columbia river, derived from treaty, negociations, priority of discovery, and priority of occupation, are, as yet, stronger and more consistent with the principles of national right, than those of any other Power—from whatsoever source derived. That those regions must eventually be possessed by the people of the United States only, no one acquainted with the progress of settlement in the Mississippi valley, during the last fifteen years, will be inclined to question; but that Great Britain will, by every means in her power, evade the recognition of the American claim, and oppose the establishment of an American population on the shores of the Pacific, may be confidently expected, from the dispositions evinced by her Government in all its recent discussions with the United States.

Permanent settlements are now made and making in the Oregon Territory, and I doubt not the population will in a few years, very rapidly increase; with proper encouragement and protection on the part of our government, it will soon contain a population entitling a territory to admission into the great family of American States!

Civil war at Tonga--An Encounter of the British with the Savages—They were beaten off.

A London paper gives a sad account of the British sloop of war, the Favorite, Capt. Croker. She was beaten off by the savages of the Tonga, one of the South Sea Islands. It seems that a civil war was raging at Tonga, when the vessel arrived, and Capt. Croker took part with the Missionaries against the people of Tonga. The inhabitants and their chiefs, with the sovereign, determined to have nothing to do with the Missionaries, and retired to a fort. At this juncture Capt. Croker endeavored to effect a reconciliation; the natives treated the Captain with the utmost deference, and in a conference they listened with patience to the most insolent terms to surrender. The terms were:—"That the fortress then occupied by the heathens, with two other small and less formidable garrisons, should be surrendered and immediately demolished—all furniture, stores, &c., to be removed—that the fortifiers of the garrison should resume their former avocation and intercourse with the Missionaries and their converts on the same terms as before the dispute, the Missionaries being at liberty to preach without restraint in their endeavors to make proselytes to the Christian faith, and that an immediate meeting should take place to ratify the condition, if accepted."

While negociations were in progress, Captain Croker ordered three carronades to be brought from on board his ship, and dragged to an eminence commanding the heathen garrison, being distant about 500 yards. These guns he had mounted, and brought a supply of ammunition to enable him to drive the natives from the fort, should they attempt to resist, or refuse to comply with the condition offered them.

The Captain entered the fort, and said that unless the natives should yield in an hour, he would storm the fort. They refused to yield, and the quarrel now assumed a more aggravated character.

"Scaling ladders, &c., were hastily constructed, and a large party of seamen, marines, and converted natives, to the No. of 1,700 or 1,800, were assembled on the eminence, ready to open a fire on the fort. The garrison, ere the time allowed had expired, sent to the European camp to state that they were willing to concede all things demanded of them, save humiliation to which they imagined they would subject themselves in at once meeting and holding intercourse with their foes; they would rather not meet them face to face for some time to come. Captain Croker's reply was, that the terms proposed must be complied with, and, no further communication arriving at the appointed time, the Favorite's gunner opened fire upon the fort; but this playing at long balls not according with the ardent temperament of the commander, he ordered his men to follow him, and proceeded to within one hundred and fifty yards of the fort."

"Captain Croker ordered all hands up to the wall, manning the scaling ladders or bridges, himself leading the way, to endeavor to scale the wall; we accordingly formed, the marines and tars giving three cheers, and charging forward, following their gallant and impetuous leader, till within pistol-shot of the fort; our poor fellows now began to fall fast on every side; our commander was struck in the thigh by a bullet, the First Lieutenant seriously wounded, and at last a dozen of our hands hit. The Captain, despite his wound, pressed forward to the gate of the fort, and, thrusting his sword against it and through the jamb of the gate, made frantic efforts singly to enter. From violent exertions, high excitement, and the loss of blood, the Captain was seen to retire fainting from the gate, and to lean for support against a tree, where he had leaned but for a few seconds when a rifle ball struck him in the left breast, penetrated the heart, and passing through the back."

THERE IS A GOD.—Go out beneath the arched heaven in night's profound gloom, and say if you can, "There is no God!" Pronounce that dread blasphemy, and each star above will reprove you for your unbroken darkness of intellect—every voice that floats upon the night winds will bewail your utter hopelessness and dispair. Is there no God? Who, then, unrolled that blue scroll, and threw upon its high frontispiece the legible gleamings of immortality? Who fashioned this green earth—with its perpetual rolling waters and its expanse of islands and main? Who settled the foundation of the mountains?—Who paved the heavens with clouds, and attuned, amid banners of storms, the voice of thunders, and unchained the lightnings that linger, and lurk, and flash in their gloom? Who gave to the eagle a safe eyrie where the tempests dwell and beat strongest, and to the dove a tranquil abode amid the forests that ever echo to the minstrelsy of her moan? Who made thee, oh Man, with thy perfect elegance of intellect and form? Who made light pleasant to thee, and darkness a covering and a herald to the first beautiful flashes of the morning? Who gave thee matchless symmetry of sinews and limb? The regular flowing of blood? The irrepressible and daring passions of ambition and of love? And yet the thunders of heaven and the waters of earth are calmed? Are there no floods, that man is not swept under a deluge? They remain, but the bow of reconciliation hangs out above and beneath them. And it were better that the limitless waters and the strong mountains were convulsed and commingled together—it were better that the very stars were conflagrated by fire or shrouded in eternal gloom than that one soul be lost, while Mercy kneels and pleads for it beneath the Altar of intercession.

MRS. GENERAL HARRISON.—As this lady is soon expected to occupy "the White House" at Washington, any thing relating to her history will be gratifying to the public.

After the severe and desperate struggle of the Miami, in 1794, Gen. Wayne went to the Atlantic States, leaving Capt. Harrison in command of Fort Washington, now Cincinnati. The next year Capt. Harrison married the daughter of Judge John Cleve Symmes—who was born at Riverhead, Long Island, and removed in early life to New Jersey, where he married the daughter of Gov. William Livingston, and was soon after one of the Associate Judges of the Supreme Court of that State. In 1787, he became the proprietor of "the Miami purchase" of near a million of acres, and removed to that country.

Mrs. Harrison was educated at East Hampton, Long Island, and when young was esteemed a lady of great personal and mental accomplishments. A writer for the National Portrait Gallery, for 1836, thus speaks of her: "She is distinguished for her benevolence and piety; and all who know her, view her with esteem and affection. Her whole course through life, in all its relations, has been characterized by those qualifications that complete the character of an accomplished matron."

MECHANICS WIVES.—Speaking of the middle ranks of life, a good writer observes:—"There we behold woman in all her glory, not a doll to carry silks and jewels, not a puppet to be flattered by profane adoration, reverenced to-day, discarded to-morrow; always jostled out of the place which nature and society would assign her, by sensuality or by contempt; admired, but not respected; desired, but not esteemed; ruling by passion, not affection; imparting her weakness, not her constancy, to the sex she would exalt; the source and mirror of vanity; we see her as a wife partaking the cares and cheering the anxiety of a husband, dividing his toils by her domestic diligence, spreading cheerfulness around her for his sake, sharing the decent refinements of the world, without being vain of them, placing all her joys and her happiness in the man she loves. As a mother, we find her the affectionate, the ardent instructress of the children whom she has tended from their infancy, training them up to thought and virtue, to piety and benevolence; addressing them as rational beings, and preparing them to become men and women in their turn. Mechanics' daughters make the best wives in the world."

A petition has been presented to the Mississippi Legislature to dispose in a summary way with defaulters in that State. It prays the Legislature to "hang all public agents who abuse their trusts, and to banish all swindlers."

PLEASANT INCIDENT.—"I love you as purely as ever."—The Baltimore Clipper relates an incident of a very agreeable nature, of a very beautiful young lady of that city, who not long since signed her name to a temperance pledge, one article of which prohibited her receiving the affectionate attention of any young gentleman who was in any way given to intemperance. It happened that the tender-hearted damsel had at the very time she put her name to the paper, a beau with whom she was well pleased, but who unfortunately, (according to report) took occasionally "a leetle too much." The maiden was therefore under the painful necessity of addressing her "fondly loved one" a polite note, stating her situation, the nature of the pledge she had taken, and the utter impossibility of her ever after receiving his attention as a lover. "I love you as purely as ever," was the language of the note, "but my word has gone forth, and honor bids me respond to your kindness only in the light of a friend."—The young man found himself completely subdued. The words, "I love you as purely as ever," were too potent. Determined not to forfeit such devoted affection, he sought the earliest opportunity to become a temperance advocate himself, signed the pledge, and is now a member of the Washington Temperance Society. Young love's dream with them, had already brightened into engagement, and is, we understand, shortly to be consummated in matrimony. Powerful and beautiful is thy influence, oh woman!

THE INEBRIATE—THE DEAD MOTHER.—The Lowell (Mass.) Courier prints the account that follows, which is indeed most painful. "On Thursday Dr. Huntington was called to Mrs. Arven, a miserable inebriate, living in Belvidere. He left medicine for her, and she was again visited on Friday and Saturday, and each time was found to have been drinking, notwithstanding the remonstrance of the physician to the contrary. She, her husband, who had just returned from the House of Correction, and two little boys, aged seven and nine, all slept in the same room. Sunday morning one of the boys got up and went into another tenement in the same house, and told a woman whom he found there, that his mother was dead.

"Some of the neighbors were immediately summoned, and upon entering the room, they found the words of the boy were true, and that his mother was dead. She had died some time during the night, in the trundle bed with the two boys. On another bed in the same room, lay the beastly husband, sound asleep, and entirely ignorant of his wife's death. The woman had drank a pint of brandy, which she sent for by one of the boys on Saturday; the husband had drank, according to his own confession, a pint of rum, which he had procured in the same way, and under the head of his wife's corpse lay a half emptied rum bottle. The boy, to protect himself from the cold, had again crawled into the bed, beside his mother's dead body, where his brother was also lying."

PAYING SPECIE.—An amusing account is given of the resumption day at Macon, Georgia. A run being apprehended on the Rail Road bank, the teller gravely went to work, weighing the specie for demand upon it, and succeeded during the day in paying out $30, and some odd cents the first day. A correspondent of the Chronicle says:—"Could you but see the teller with a gravity on his countenance, as if the fate of nations depended on the correctness and decorum with which he weighed out dollar after dollar—each one I saw composed of a half and other small coins—taking out one and replacing it by another, till the just and accurate weight was ascertained—it would have cured you of the yellow fever or any other ill that flesh is heir to."

FEARS OF UNBELIEVERS.—"There is one thing," said Mr. S., a professed infidel, to one of his companions in sin, "which mars all the pleasures of my life."

"Ah," replied his companion, "what is that?"

"Why, I am afraid the Bible is true.—If I could know for certain that death is an eternal sleep, I should be happy; my joy would be complete. But here is the thorn that stings me!—This is what pierces my very soul! If the Bible is true I am lost forever! Every prospect is gone, and I am lost forever!"

This unhappy man soon undertook a voyage, was shipwrecked and drowned, and most probably sunk into the mighty deep in all the horrors of absolute despair.

BAGGAGE NOT AT THE OWNER'S RISK.—An important Court in Ohio, have decided that proprietors of stage coaches are common carriers—that as such, they are responsible for the safe conveyance of passengers and baggage—that their giving notice to the contrary cannot relieve them from liability—that a watch is a customary article of baggage, and the trunk of a traveller the proper place for its deposite—that the stage proprietor will be charged if it be lost, notwithstanding the usual cautionary notice of "All baggage at the risk of the owners."

A SHOCKING AFFAIR.—About 1 o'clock, last Saturday night, the house of Mr. Welch, four miles west of Paris, Illinois, was attacked by a party of five persons with their faces blacked, and otherwise disfigured to avoid detection. Mr. Welch received the contents of a rifle (supposed to have been fired through the window) while laying in bed; and when the door was broken open, the defence of the family entirely devolved upon his wife and his son, (a lad of sixteen,) the balance of his household consisting of children under eight years of age.

As soon as the party obtained entrance, a person, who proved to be Geo. Redman, a near neighbor, rushed upon the elder Mr. Welch with a butcher knife; but before he could accomplish his diabolical purpose, young Welch knocked him down with a stick of wood, and followed up his blows until he broke the assassin's skull in several places. Redman lingered until Sunday evening, when he died of his wounds. While the boy was thus successfully defending the life of his father, Greenup James, one of Redman's accomplices, attacked Mrs. Welch, first by firing at her in bed, and subsequently, with a large hickory club, prepared for the purpose. Mrs. Welch, with more then Spartan bravery, seized the tongs, knocked down her assailant, and, finally, succeeded in disabling him so as to prevent his flight, and render his efforts at mischief impotent and harmless.

During the progress of the affray, three of the party (two of whom are supposed to be the son and brother of George Redman) fled; and young Welch, (leaving his mother to take care of G. James, and prevent his flight,) went to Paris and procured medical aid for his father, who was nearly exhausted from the loss of blood caused by his wounds. Mrs. Welch in the mean time, attended well to the safety of her charge, paralyzing his efforts at flight by applications of her trusty weapon.

Though badly wounded, it is believed the elder Welch will recover, as the ball has been carefully extracted. Mrs. Welch and her son (through a singular interposition of Providence) are entirely free from injury. A younger son (a boy of 7 or 8) was wounded in the head during the affray, by one of the assassins, altho' not dangerously. This shocking attempt to murder a whole family, originated, it is supposed, in a misunderstanding or family quarrel of some months standing.

G. James is secured in the Paris jail; and the officers of justice are in pursuit of the other accomplices of Redman, but by the last accounts nothing had been heard of them.—Terre Haute Courier.

WAR MOVEMENT IN MAINE.—On the 3d ultimo, resolutions on the subject of repelling British aggressions, were offered in the House of Representatives, and referred to the Committee on the North Eastern Boundary. We learn from the Portland Argus of the 15th ultimo, that these resolutions were taken up by the Senate on the 13th, and after being amended by inserting one million of dollars instead of four hundred thousand dollars, for the defence of the State, were referred to the same committee.

Mr. Davies then offered the following resolve, which was also referred to the committee on the N. E. Boundary:

"Resolve for repelling Foreign Invasion, and providing for the protection of the State.

"Be it Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested and urged to cause the immediate removal of the foreign armed force, by which our State is invaded, stationed upon the valley of the St. Johns, and that the government of the United States be earnestly invoked to relieve this State from the present heavy, needless burthen of its own defence."

GEORGE III.—This monarch's reign will be ever celebrated, but posterity will judge it severely. On his accession to the throne the debt of England was one hundred and twenty millions of pounds, but at his death it had swelled to eight hundred and twenty millions of pounds. Thirty-three of the fifty-nine years he sat upon the throne, were passed in war; war, to be sure, in which the genius of English statesmen and generals shone with sun-like brightness, but war, too, which fearfully increased the burdens of the English people, and the effects of which still hang like a mill-stone around the neck of English labor. During his reign, the taxes were increased from £6,000,000 a year to £60,000,000. So much for national glory. Fortunate for him will it be, if posterity assents to the maxim of the English constitution, that the king can do no wrong.

"CAUGHT IN THE SUDS."—A few nights since a thief, in attempting to rob the dwelling of Mr. J. Connor, in Shippen st., fell into a tub of soap suds, left sitting on the floor, and was discovered by the floundering noise he made, and was arrested.—Phil. paper.

During the rush for specie at the Philadelphia Bank, on Friday last, a lad named Derrick, was pressed against the counter by the surrounding crowd, till his breast bone was broken.—ib.

☞Our Visit to Mt. Vernon.—We got on the stage at Zanesville, about 10 o'clock at night, on Thursday the 18th ultimo,—the seats within being all pre-occupied we had to take our station on the top, out side. In side and out side there were seventeen passengers in all, and a heavy baggage also. Add to these, the team had run the rout to bring down an extra, once before, the same day. Thus situated, the horses could go little out of a walk, so that we were the principal part of the night getting to Jacktown. As our system was, just at that juncture, pre-disposed to take cold, and our lungs being slightly affected, riding all night in the chilly air, confirmed the disorder, so that we have not been more afflicted in this way for several years. This was the only draw back on the pleasures of our visit.

We found the society in Mt. Vernon, in a much better condition than we had inferred from the published reports of its recent prosperity. The late recruits are principally a lot of interesting young people, who seem to take much pleasure in waiting together in the house of the Lord, and have great delight in His service.—They received the word with that attention and readiness which made the dispensing of it a very agreeable task. Indeed we could have spent a month, or more, among them, with great delight. The revival has proceeded with but little extravagance.

We will here relate a fact, for the encouragement of others similarly situated, with a view to induce them to trust in the Lord. Our old friend Benjamin McCracken, was the principal male member of the society in town. Its spiritual condition remained so discouraging for years that he had determined to leave the place and seek a church were he could enjoy better privileges, and accordingly visited Lancaster and Zanesville, and tried to purchase property in both these places, but failed. So that he had to content himself to remain in Vernon. He is now, by the goodness of God, better situated in reference to society, in all probability, than he would be in either of the other places, and in thus saying, we mean nothing invidiuous.

The Mt. Vernon circuit has a considerable portion of very valuable members. A number of these were in attendance at the quarterly meeting and seemed to enjoy the occasion.

We have forgotten the number who have recently joined the church in Mt. Vernon, but it is some where about fifty, more or less, ten or twelve of whom are from the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mt. Vernon.—This is the county seat of Knox, which is situated in a fertile region of country, and is a pleasant, thriving village of 3000 or more inhabitants. As wood is the principal fuel, the buildings appear remarkably clean and bright, and form a fine contrast with our coal-smoked towns. It contains a number of houses of worship and its inhabitants generally appear to be a church-going people. But an occurrence happened, at the time of our late visit, which did not give us a very favorable opinion of its moral character. Passing up Main street, on Saturday evening, the 20th ultimo, we witnessed a very revolting sight. A drunken man, who acted as tho' he might have been one of the tragical furies from hell, uttering, in a very passionate and stormy manner, the most profane language we ever heard from man, swaggered round in the centre of the street, and about him was a collection of some fifty, or more, men and boys, provoking and agging him on, who seemed to be greatly amused with his exhibitions. As we passed, some of the company called the attention of the drunken fury to the fact that a preacher was passing. Civil treatment this to a stranger.

Now, what we complain of is, that the police would permit such profane exhibitions as this on the public streets. It is satisfactory evidence to us that the moral tone of the place must be rather low. If these profane drunken debauchees were lodged in jail until they sobered off, and parents were to learn their children to let such loathsome objects pass without molestation, it would have, without doubt, a fine influence upon the moral character of the place.

Better Late than Never.—Br. Leavitt, of the Emancipator, has, at last, referred to his treatment towards Br. Stockton, of the Christian World. The following are his remarks:

"The Christian World.—Our brother Bailey thinks we are quite unreasonably severe in some remarks made a few weeks since on a paper with the above title, published in Philadelphia, by the Rev. Thomas H. Stockton. We have reconsidered the article referred to, and we cannot see how we could have taken Mr. Stockton's paragraph otherwise than we did, as allowing the use of broad and unqualified phraseology of freedom and equal rights of ALL MEN, with reference to the institutions of our country, calculated to deceive foreigners and blind our own consciences, while at the same time we mean to have the language understood among ourselves only as applying to white citizens. We could not know the editor's thoughts, but from his words and actions, and when he spoke and acted precisely like the great mass of temporising clergy who have drugged and stupified the national conscience, we could not but suppose he stood on the same ground with them. And so we spoke our mind without mincing, as we are wont to do. We had no unkind or disrespectful feelings towards Mr. Stockton, for whom, both personally and in his religious connections, we had long cherished a high respect. But we set him for a class of men. Mr. Stockton, it seems, has replied to our remarks, and in his reply has set forth his own views on the subject, and his purposes with regard to his paper, with a manly independence and vigor of style that we should look in vain to find in his earlier numbers.—That we did him injustice, both in regard to his talents and his position on the subject of slavery, is sufficiently apparent. We, therefore, cheerfully retract every word of disparagement in these respects, and cordially ask him to overlook an error, which arose solely from our ignorance of his past history, and our zeal for the cause in which we are engaged."

Mr. Webster has resigned his seat in the Senate of the United States, probably to take his seat in the new Cabinet.

We have been in the reception, every few weeks, of a little 7 by 9 sheet, dubbed, "The Aurora," from New Lisbon, Ohio, poorly edited and worse printed, from which we give the following:

"The Western Recorder, a religious paper, thus refers to the transaction, and this is all it says about the outrage:

"'An abolition riot is said to have taken place in Dayton, in which one or two whites lost their lives.'

"How comes it that our Rev'd. friend denominates this an 'Abolition Riot?' He certainly cannot mean that those who were killed were Abolitionists, or that Abolitionists participated in attacking them, and yet his language—or the language of the item—would lead to this conclusion, for it will admit of no other construction. This will convey an incorrect impression on the minds of those who may see no other account of the affair; hence, I conceive it would be but an act of justice to correct it. The mob organ at Dayton—the heart of whose editor is far blacker than the Ethiopian's skin—attributes the difficulty to Abolitionists. This is his vocation; but that a religious editor should walk in such footsteps, is not quite the thing.

"If Abolitionists must be made the scape-goat for the doings of the mob, why the latter may go on with impunity while the former, though innocent, must suffer the disgrace. Is this fair? On the same principle the early Christians must be considered responsible for the persecutions and murders committed by their enemies. When the Jews crucified the Saviour, on this principle it ought to be charged to the Christians—call it a Christian act. No Christian will say this: and yet it would be just as near the truth as to call the Dayton Mob an 'Abolition Riot.'"

This editor, it is highly probable, imagines, in point of wisdom, he was born at least a century before Solomon, and as it respects philanthophy, that he inherits the mantle of Howard himself. He represents the heart of the Dayton editor as "blacker than the skin of the Ethiopian," and we as walking in his "footsteps." Very courteous this, but none but a Philanthropist would have been capable of such liberal sentiments.

The editor wishes to know how we come to call the Dayton affair an "Abolition Riot."—Did this erudite gentleman never know that "custom was the arbiter of language;"—that, in this democratic country, the people claimed the right to call things by whatever appellation they think proper. And has he never been apprised of the fact that all parties have agreed to call such frays, where ablitionism was made the occasion, "Abolition Riots," without intending by such expression to give any opinion as to who was in fault? If he had attended to this matter a little he might have been saved his hypercriticism upon us.

As for the article he quoted from us being all we "said on the subject:" when we closed the paper which contained that article, we had seen but a bare allusion to the Dayton mob, and that so expressed as to leave some doubt whether there had ever been such an occurrence or not. So soon as we came in possession of the facts of the case we gave them, and thought we had expressed ourself sufficiently severe against these mobocrats, to suit the morbid appetite of even an ultra-abolitionist.

Br. Ragan, in the communication which we published from him in our last paper, "respectfully suggest that the editor of the Recorder suspend his judgment of the executive operations of the District, until he is in possession of all the circumstances." Now, we know not what our worthy friend alludes to; for we have not, to the best of our recollection, intentionally made any disrespectful allusions to his administration either directly or indirectly. We really hope that the old adage, "a guilty conscience needs no accuser," is not applicable to him on this occasion.

Gospel Publisher.—We are in the weekly receipt of this paper from Harrisburgh, Pa. It is the organ of the "Church of God," commonly called "Winebrenners" after the founder of the sect. The paper seems to be intelligently conducted, and to breathe the spirit of Christ. It records many revivals of religion among that people.

To Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes the following lines are respectfully dedicated, as a token of sympathy on account of the loss of a very promising child.

Oh, let me weep—they'r tears of grief—
Nought save the balm that Calvary gave
Can sooth one sigh, or bring relief,
Or gild the gloom that shrouds the grave.

My child of hope, of promise bright!
The first, the last, affection's pledge,
A star that glimmered on the brow of night,—
Now rests in slumbers with the dead;
And shall no more that dimpled cheek
With mine on earth be warmly pressed?
Ah! no a Saviour's smile that cheek shall greet,
A Seraph's robe that form possess.

Then hush my heart, be calm, be still;
In patience wait the joyful hour,
When Elsea's tomb on Auburn's hill.
Shall yield to resurrection's power.

So shall we meet at Jesus' feet,
Tranquil and bright, as rays at 'even
And all our tears and bitter griefs,
Exchanged for symphonies of Hearen.

Steubenville, Ohio, Feb. 18, 1841.

Br. Springer: We held a protracted meeting in this station, which commenced on New Year's Eve, and continued nearly three weeks, during which, fifteen joined the church on probation, all of whom, so far as I know, promise fair to become ornaments to the church. The meeting was valuable, also, in reviving the members of the church in general.

We were favored with the labors of Brs. Ragan, Hughes, Burns, Matthews and R. Richardson, all of whom preached with the zeal and fervor becoming their high and glorious calling.

As a church, we are all in peace and harmony among ourselves. And I think I may safely say, that I know of no station or circuit in the bounds of our work, where christian love and mutual affection abound to a greater extent than in this. We are now engaged in erecting a parsonage. The money is subscribed—lot purchased—much of the materials procured—and workmen at work. It will be completed as early in the season as circumstances will allow. Will not many of the circuits and stations do likewise, the present year? Much of the difficulty endured by itinerant ministers arises from a want of this convenience.

Zanesville, March 1, 1841.

Br. Springer: We commenced our quarterly meeting in this place on the 14th ult. We had no prospect of ministerial aid, but our reliance was on the Lord. Several other denominations in this town were holding protracted meetings at the same time, who were able to afford the public the attractions of strange and talented preachers. Br. Marshall came to our assistance. The members went to work in aid of the ministry, and the Lord poured out his spirit in a most powerful manner. Upwards of thirty professed religion, and thirty-nine have attached themselves to the church. Our meeting is still continued. Some who have stood in the front ranks of wickedness are the subjects of this work.

One incident which happened, in the progress of the meeting, was rather remarkable. Some irreligious young men came to the altar, when the mourners were called for, and united with an air of unconcern in the singing exercises. But such was the powerful demonstrations of the spirit, that as the poet sings,

"They melted like wax at the glance of the Lord."

Yea, if the infidel world had been present, their hearts, for the time being, at least, would have been subdued by the conquering influence of grace.

Yours, &c., A Member.

Our Relations with Great Britain—The Affair of the Steam Boat "Caroline."—Great interest must necessarily be felt among all classes to understand correctly the facts which bear upon the various controverted questions, which unfortunately exist between this country and Great Britain. The most exciting one now before the public, is the affair in regard to the Steamboat Caroline. On this subject a very long and decided report was made in Congress on Saturday, by Mr. Pickens, from the committee on Foreign affairs. We will state the positions of this report as briefly as possible.

"It appears that the steamboat Caroline was seized and destroyed in the month of December, 1837. The committee are induced to believe that the facts of the case are as follows: The boat was owned by, and in possession of, a citizen of New York. She was cleared from the city of Buffalo, and on the morning of the 28th of December, 1837, she left the port at Schlosser, upon the American side of the Niagara river, and within the territory of the United States.—The original intention seemed to be, to run between Buffalo and Schlosser, or perhaps, from Black Rock dam to Schlosser and, should it seem profitable, it was intended to run her also to Navy Island and touch at Grand Island, and Tonawanda. Her owner was Mr. Wells, said to be a respectable citizen of Buffalo, and it is obvious his intention in putting up the boat was one of speculation and profit entirely. The excitement upon that portion the frontier, at this period had collected a great many in the neighborhood—some from curiosity—some from idleness—and others from taking an interest in the unusual and extraordinary collection of adventurous men gathered together at that time on Navy Island. Navy Island was nominally in the British territory. The Caroline was merely used for one day as a ferry boat, and on the night of the day she commenced running, she was seized while moored at the wharf in Schlosser, and burnt. Several men were assassinated; certainly one, who fell dead upon the deck.

"The British Minister is pleased to call the Caroline a 'piratical steamboat.' The loose epithets of any one, no matter how high in place, cannot make that piracy which the law of nations does not recognise as such. Pirates are freebooters, enemies of the human race; and eminent jurists describe them as ravaging every sea and coast, with no flag and no home. Piracy comes under the concurrent jurisdiction of all nations. Even in the worst point of view that it can be considered, those connected with the steamboat Caroline were but aiders and abettors of others engaged in rebellion. And the committee are totally at a loss to know upon what authority rebellion is recognised as piracy. Such confounding of terms is resting the cause upon epithets, instead of sound law or facts. But even supposing it to be a 'piratical boat,' as the Minister asserts it to be; yet the moment it touches our soil it fell under our sovereignty, and no power on earth could rightfully invade it.

"There is no doctrine more consecrated in English history, than that every human being who touches the soil of Great Britain is immediately covered by British law. Suppose one of her vessels were cut from the banks of the Thames and burnt by Frenchmen, and British citizens were assassinated at night, and the French minister were to avow that they acted under the orders of his Government, and that the vessel was 'piratical,' and the citizens murdered were out-laws—then there is not an Englishman whose heart would not beat high to avenge the wrong, and vindicate the rights of his country. And there is no international law consistent with the separate independence of nations, that sanctions the pursuits of even pirates to murder and arson over the soil and jurisdiction of one of the States of this confederacy. No greater wrong can be done to a country than invasion of soil. If it can be done with impunity at one point, and on one occasion, it can be done at another, and the nation that submits to it, finally sinks down into drivelling imbecility. If a representation of the state of things at Schlosser, and the conduct of those who had control of the Caroline, had first been made to the proper authorities of New York, or the United States, then there would have been some show at least of respect for our sovereignty and independence, and a disposition to treat us as an equal. But in this case, as if to treat our authorities with contempt, there was no preliminary demand or representation made.

"It was hoped that the outrage was perpetrated by a party in sudden heat and excitement, upon their own responsibility. But the British Minister now avows that 'the act was the public act of persons obeying the constituted authorities of her Majesty's Province,' and again affirms that 'it was a public act of person in her Majesty's service, obeying the orders of their superior authorities.'"

McLeod was arrested in the territory of New York. On the first arrest he was discharged, but on a second arrest he was imprisoned for trial. As the arrest was made in a time of profound peace, without an invasion of the territory of Great Britain, McLeod, so far as he is concerned, is alone answerable to the criminal jurisdiction of the State of New York; and the Committee deem any interference on the part of the Federal Executive, an exercise of power not conferred by "law or by treaty."

The report produced a very warm debate in the House of Representatives, in which Messrs. Adams, Granger, Fillmore, Everett and Pickens took part. A motion to print it was lost, 110 to 77,—when the report was laid on the table. There appeared to be a feeling in the minds of many members that Great Britain would regard the report, if it should be accepted, as equal to a declaration of war.

Fanaticism.—A man laboring under religious frenzy in New York, refused the Coroner admittance to his house to view the body of one of his children, just deceased. From the statements of Doct. Perry, No. 282 Third avenue, it appeared that the mother of the child had been delivered of twins on Monday last, and that the other infant is alive. He also stated that the fanatic had repeatedly asserted that he would restore the child to life, and that it was while engaged in his vain attempt that he refused the Coroner admission. The poor fanatic, it seems, kept an exchange office some years ago, but subsequently had undergone various reverses of fortune, and becoming connected with the Mormons, had suffered latterly under partial aberration of mind.

U. S. Supreme Court.—A letter from Washington says: "The Supreme Court has been thronged through the day to hear the argument of Henry Clay, in the Mississippi slave case. I heard the opening of the argument; and it was equal to almost any thing I have heard from the eloquent Kentuckian—as eloquent at the bar as in the Senate—unequalled any where as an advocate. Mr. Webster will reply. With such men for counsel, the case would excite intense interest every where; but in the case before the court, millions of dollars are involved."

Canadian News.—The Detroit Advertiser states that there are 20,000 regulars in Canada, and that in addition, each regiment of militia is required to have two flank companies in constant readiness.—As there 113 regiments in the Upper Province, this will give 16,000 men. A force of 36,000 would thus be called into the field at a moment's notice.

More Writs vs. U. S. Bank.—In the Court of Common Pleas, on Saturday, there were two more writs of citation awarded against the U. S. Bank, for refusing specie to the holders of her notes.—Isaac Abrahams cited the institution for the amount of $660, and Fisher J. Snow for $160—Chron. 22d ult.

Religious Scruples.—The Orthodox Society of Friends, in the State of New York, have petitioned the Legislature to be relieved from the payment of fines for non-performance of militia duty. The Friends are conscientiously scrupulous against bearing arms.

Another Citation.—Yesterday in the Common Pleas, another writ of citation, on application of Alexander Brown, was awarded against the U. S. Bank, for refusing to pay specie for notes to the amount of some twelve or thirteen hundred dollars.

The President Elect.—General Harrison arrived at Richmond on Wednesday evening. A great concourse of citizens assembled to greet him at the depot, and thence escorted him to the Powhattan House.—Chro. 22d ult.

General Harrison.—The President elect has visited the two Houses of Congress, and was received with marked attention. He was expected to leave the city this day for Virginia.

The Banks and the Legislature.—The intelligence from Harrisburg, with regard to the Banks is not favorable. Mr. Spackman's resolution, authorising that the penalties for suspension be postponed and suspended for forty days, has passed the Senate, but it is not likely that it will pass the House for some days, and even then the Governor may veto it. The probability is, however, that he will permit it to become a law without his signature—but even with this law we fear that little relief will be experienced. The Banks will be afraid to act, and the community will continue to labor under the difficulties and apprehensions by which they are now afflicted. The Governor, as we understand, is adverse both to small bills and any act legalizing the suspension for another year—and it is the general impression, that should the Legislature pass any such bill, he will veto it.—It is merely possible that he will change his views after the adjournment of the 4th of March Convention, especially should the members of that convention be in favor of mild measures as regards the Banks. Should they urge harsh measures the influence upon the mind of the Executive will of course be unfavorable. On the whole, therefore, the intelligence from Harrisburg is rather adverse to any measure of permanent relief to the Banks, so far at least as the Governor is concerned.—Bicknell.

Quite a Discovery.—During a debate in the House of Representatives on the 15th ult., on a motion to strike out the allowance of $1500 a year for a clerk to sign land patent deeds, Mr. Lincoln announced a very astounding fact, viz: that every patent signed by this clerk for the last four years, was invalid by means of a clerkical blunder! The fact seemed not to be contradicted, and Mr. Lincoln stated that the only way to remedy this evil was to pass a special act to legalise those 300,000 deeds.

A Hint to Chambermaids.—Nothing is more injurious to health than warming a bed with coals, the carbonic acid gas that escapes is almost suffocating, particularly if there be no fire-place in the room. The remedy is easy and cheap; get a piece of chain about a yard long, make it red hot, and put it in the pan, instead of pursuing the dangerous and unhealthy plan that is now better honored in the breach than the observance.

On Thursday morning last, a row of four frame buildings in Seneca street, Buffalo, were destroyed by fire. The sufferers were, Dyer Green, building and contents, Benjamin Willey, building and much furniture, Joel Ray, the same, and Wm. Trontine, considerable furniture.

The British Colonist (official paper) of February 3d, says that Gov. Arthur has forwarded despatches to the Governor General, and also to Mr. Fox, British Minister at Washington, in reference to the recent proceedings which took place at Lockport in relation to McLeod.

The Christian religion is admirably adapted to the wants of our natures. At no period of life—in no situation—shall we find it unwelcome to our souls. It will cheer our drooping spirits, animate our hopes, and give us an assurance of a rest in heaven.

The commissioners who are to run a boundary line between Texas and the United States, left Opelousas on the 21st ultimo, for the Sabine. The line, it is said, will probably be finished in about three months.

Fire.—Three buildings were burned down on Thursday last at Buffalo, N. Y. Several other houses took fire, but were saved by the prompt arrival and efficient exertions of the fire companies.

From Port au Prince.—An arrival at Edgartown, from Port au Prince, 23d ult., reports that it was very sickly at that place; several vessels had lost part of their officers and crews.

Alfred H. Davis.—The examination of this man, which was to have taken place before the Recorder yesterday afternoon, was postponed till Monday afternoon next, at 4 o'clock.

Dr. Eldridge.—The time for the trial of this individual was on Saturday, in the Court of General Session, fixed by the Attorney General for Monday, the 29th ult.

Mrs. Davis.—The counsel for this prisoner will commence their argument on the motion for a new trial, and in arrest of judgment in her case, to-morrow morning.

A. H. Davis.—The examination of this man takes place before the Recorder this afternoon, at 4 o'clock.

Governor McNutt has vetoed the bill passed by both branches of the Legislature of Mississippi, pledging the State to redeem its bonds.

A heavy failure occurred in this city on Saturday last. Messrs. Pope & Aspinwall have 'stopped' for upwards of $400,000.—Philadelphia paper.

Discharged.—William H. Stokes, recently arrested for the Brooklyn murder, has been honorably discharged.

The Banks.—The Suspension Bill is progressing in the Pennsylvania House.

More Indian Troubles.—The Rock Gazette states, on the authori a gentleman recently from the I country, that great excitement has created among the Cherokees, by th ecution of an Indian named Achilla S one of the treaty signers, who had tried and convicted of murder. Pre to his execution he had asked and ob ed leave to have a personal inter with the chief, John Ross, with a vie obtain a reprieve. Berkshire Swine.—This breed app to be the aristocracy of the hog-yard a present time. They are a large, well hog, possessing length, breadth, and de with a fine bone, small ears, and ver tle offal compared with other hogs o same size. Their color seems to b objection in the eyes of many, it bein a shining black, or a bronze black, white feet. Establishment for the Construct of Steam-Ships of War in Massac setts.—It is proposed to establish a tional Foundry, and a Yard for the struction of Steam Engines and St Ships of War, in Boston Harbor. The tensive and valuable lands, now and since owned by the United States Gove ment, in Chelsea, have been pointed as the most suitable site for the purp in the county of Suffold. These la consist of from seventy to ninety ac exclusive of flats; and for a long distan border on the water—their shores be constantly washed by the waves of Upper Harbor and those of the My River. They are nearly opposite Navy Yard in Charlestown, and for present contain only two or three bu ings—one of which is occupied as Naval Hospital—the Marine Hospita Chelsea being situated in another p of the town.

Horrid Tragedy.—The last Illino states that a certain individual nan Williams, was committed to the Pike C jail and a short time since for having s at and killed another man, having s for his wife and children under prete of wishing to see them, on Friday of l week, cut the throat of the former, s after her entrance into the jail, and th his own, so that they survived only a f minutes. It is supposed that he inten to murder his children also, had not l cries of the woman, by alarming the j or, induced him to despatch himself, fore he had carried his plan into full fect.

Revival of Religion.—There is a p tracted meeting now being held at t Rev. Mr. Brettle's church, Baptist, Eeast Chesnut street, Lancaster, in t State. During the last week, we und stand, many members were added to t church, and on Monday last, ten membe were formally baptised in the Conesto river, before a large number of perso who had assembled to witness the ce mony. THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

WEDNESDAY, ... MARCH 3, 1841.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.—We did not return to the post until the outer form of this paper was made. As this is the portion of our paper we devote to original communications, such as came in our absence will have to lay over until our next.

Mr. Fox, the British Minister, made a demand of Mr. Forsyth, that, the President release the negroes of the Amistad, and placed his demand upon treaty stipulations of Great Britain, both with Spain and with the United States. Mr. Forsyth refuses the request on the ground that these negroes are in the hands of the law, and that the Executive has no control over the subject. This correspondence was made the 20th of January, and has been recently published.

It is indicated that the houses of the colored people, which were burned in Dayton, Ohio, a few weeks since, were set on fire at the instigation of some unprincipled speculators who wanted to get their property under value. The devil himself would be disgraced in a comparison with such heartless scoundrels. The Herald of that place has the following:

BASE OUTRAGE.—On Wednesday night, some infamous scoundrels set fire to three houses belonging to and occupied by negroes, in that part of the town east of Seely's basin, called 'Africa,' which were entirely consumed, the inmates having barely time to escape with their effects. The perpetrators of this infamous deed are unknown, and will probably remain so. We have heard it surmised, however, that they were instigated by some unprincipled speculators, who wish to alarm the blacks and compel them to sell their property, which from its location is becoming valuable, for less than half its value and leave the place.—It is difficult to what particular 'excitement' to attach the blame, and a dangerous experiment to express an opinion, so completely have the mob usurped the reins of government in our town.

The Abolitionists are still divided and disputing about independent nominations. The Philanthropist and Xenia Free Press have came in collision with each other on this subject.—We have no objection to making the question of the abolition of slavery a political one, provided the church be not called on to act on the subject in her official organs, as we are of opinion she should not thus take part in any political campaign whatever.

The State Temperance Convention held in Harrisburgh, Pa., on the 13th and 14th January, adopted the following form of a petition to the Legislature, of which they had one thousand copies struck:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania—

"The subscribers, citizens of the county of—— beg leave respectfully to represent, that, in their judgment, the evils which the prevailing use of intoxicating drinks inflicts upon the people whom you represent, are, both in kind and degree, highly deserving your enlightened attention and official interposition; and are persuaded that the facts upon which the Temperance Reformation is based, if they were ascertained with the utmost possible precision, and spread before the public, so avouched as might command the attention which they deserve, would arouse the virtue and intelligence of the people to the immediate adoption of an adequate remedy for the enormous evils which such an investigation would disclose.

Your petitioners therefore pray that committees of your honorable bodies may be raised, with power to send for persons and papers, to institute a thorough inquiry into the many and grievous crimes, suffering and losses, which are produced by the use of intoxicating drinks: and that the results of your inquiries be as widely circulated throughout the Commonwealth, as, in your wisdom, the importance of the subject may seem to demand.

Your memorialists being, persuaded after long and thorough consideration, that the traffic in distilled and fermented liquors, which now exists under our present license laws, is the principal remaining obstacle to a reformation, promising blessings infinite in value, extending to every rank in life, and embracing every interest in humanity, most earnestly pray, that the laws be so altered or amended, as to give to the electors in each ward, borough or township in the State, the right of determining by vote, whether licenses shall be granted for retailing intoxicating liquors, within their respective limits.

Believing that legislative action on this most important subject is required, and required now; and that the mode of action here suggested, is perfectly accordant with the principles of republican government, and at the same time acceptable to public opinion, which in our beloved country is the source and support of law, we earnestly ask the early attention of your honorable bodies to the subject of our prayer.

BICKNELL'S REPORTER, &c.—We have been a regular peruser of the Reporter for something like one year, and there is not a paper which comes to our office of which we make more use. It is a mammoth sheet; its first page is filled with judicious selections from the current literature; the last page is confined principally to the exchanges, and the inner form gives the prices current, the state of the money market, and an abstract of the news of the day, domestic and foreign. What we particularly appreciate in this journal, is, the tact of its editor in abstracting from the great mass of passing events those which are of interest and importance to the reader. The foreign news has usually come to us in the Reporter in advance of all its weekly cotemporaries. Indeed such a paper could not be issued weekly without immense labor and attention.—We are told by those who were acquainted with this paper under its former management, that it is conducted with more ability, if possible, by Mr. Miller, its present proprietor, than it was by Mr. Bicknell himself.

The Reporter is three dollars per annum, in advance: five dollars will pay for one subscriber two years, and each subscriber to the Reporter will get the Counterfeit Detecter for July and January. Every business man in the west should have this work.

The Counterfeit Detecter and Bank Note List is published by the same person, monthly, at $1,50: two copies two years $5.

Address Matthew T. Miller, post paid, No. 76 south third street, Philadelphia.

THE WEATHER.—We have had for some time past, a considerable amount of clear, pleasant weather. The frost is not yet out of the ground, but from appearances it will have to depart shortly.

Our worthy Br. Cooke, of the Pittsburgh Advocate, seems to be much distressed about the continuation of the "war." Don't be alarmed brother, while nothing but ink and paper is consumed, it is not probable any lives will be lost. The following article, from his last paper, shows that he is in considerable agony on the subject:

"The Olive Branch.—We do not get this paper but learn, through the Methodist Protestant, that it holds the following language:

" 'We will not contend with the organs of our own church, where we differ in small matters; but we mean to handle the giant Hierarchy we have abjured, with a rough hand. We may be wrong, but conscience and judgment say no. If life is spared, we have only begun with that truly iron hoof of despotism. Brethren, in this, take your own way—we shall ours.' O mercy! what next? Instead of the war being ended, it has 'only begun.' Then we suppose 'reformation or extermination,' must be regarded as the watchword. Look out friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and prepare for more than a Pelloponesian war; but let the weapons of your warfare, 'be not carnal,' and they will be 'mighty through God.' 'The Lord is with you while ye be with Him.' "

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

The bill to incorporate the State Bank of Ohio passed the House on the 18th ult., by a vote of 41 to 21. The Senate has not yet had any definite action on this bill.

The Senate has had considerable spouting on the House bill for the protection of religious worship; some members warmly oppose its passage. It was recommitted on the 18th ult. to Messrs. Henderson, Scott and Utter, with instructions to conform it to the law of Pennsylvania. This is exactly what we want so far as we are concerned. We are much better pleased with the Pennsylvania law than we were with the provisions of this bill. Up to the 26th ultimo, which is our latest dates from Columbus, this bill was still in the hands of the committee.

There are four bank bills before the Senate, which have all been referred to the committee on the currency, with instructions to report a single bill. It is among the possibilities that something may be done this session on the subject of regulating the banking system of the State.

Dr. Glover has favored us with a copy of his Report against the House bill, No. 88, for the "protection of Religious Meetings." He makes this bill violate some eight or ten provisions of the constitution. When a man is disposed, from any cause whatever, not to do a thing, he can always find abundance of reasons to excuse himself from acting.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, March 3.—Flour $3; wheat 50 cents.

PITTSBURGH, February 19, 1841.—Notwithstanding the stocks of almost all kinds of goods are large and excellent, and daily improving by fresh arrivals, business has become extremely dull and flat during the past week, and we are free to confess we scarcely have ever seen less doing and our city so completely at a stand for a currency, and unless something is immediately done by our Legislature, the Banks and the people, whose interests are all one and indivisible, we will have sorry times in all departments of trade, for our merchants, manufacturers, farmers and mechanics, and indeed all classes seem now at a stand, and much of the best produce of the country brought to our city is stored for want of money to purchase, for bartering or storing is now the order of the day.

Flour—Is dull out of wagons at 2,87½ to 3, for choice brands and from stores, 3 a 3,25 per barrel.

Bacon—Plenty and dull. Sales from wagons at 5¾ a 6c, and 3000 lbs. from stores at 6½ cents per pound.

Sugar—New Orleans stock moderate, and prices for good firm at 6¾ a 7c; sales 9 hhds. inferior at 6½ cts. per lb.

Cheese—Plenty and very dull at 4½ a 5¼ cts. per pound.

BALTIMORE, February 20.—Flour—There is a small decline in the price of flour since our last report. The demand for Howard street has been very limited; not exceeding probably 1000 barrels from store were sold early in the week at 4,50 per bbl.; subsequently, 400 a 500 bbls. sold at 4,44, cash; and on Thursday and yesterday, 4,37½ were the best offers that the few purchasers were disposed to make. The wagon and car price continues as yet at 4,37½. Sales of City Mills, standard brands, have been made at 4,50 cash; and other parcels at 4,62½, sixty days without interest, and in some instances interest was added; at this price, also, extra quality has been sold for cash. The stocks, in general, are light.

Provisions.—The market has been rather quiet during the week for all descriptions, and prices generally remain without any material variation. Our quotations for Beef are 12,50 a 13 per bbl. cash and 4 months, for Mess; 10,50 for No. 1; and 8,50 for Prime. The prices of Pork have declined a fraction, new Mess being offered at 14,50, and Prime at 12, cash. A lot of 100 bbls. old Mess has sold at 12,25, six months. We note a transaction early in the week of 900 pieces prime Baltimore assorted Bacon, the Hams especially selected for their small or desirable sizes, at 8¼ cts. per lb.; other smaller lots, less select, but not inferior in quality, at about 8c., and prime Western assorted in lots of 5 to 7000 lbs. at 7¼ cts., all cash. Moderate sales of Hams, 10 a 10¼ cts.; sides, 8; and Shoulders, 7. We are not informed of any operations in Lard; but prime No. 1. in kegs is generally held at 8 cts per lb., four months, or 2 per cent. off for cash; and bbls. at 7c. A lot of about 60 kegs Nos. 2 and 3, western Butter has been sold at 8c. cash, which is an improvement. Nothing doing in Glades. Fair Roll in bbls. is offered at 12 a 14 cts. per lb.

Western Transportation.—Wagon Freights remain as quoted last week, 1,25 to Pittsburgh, and 1,50 to Wheeling, per 100 lbs.; but with a tendency to advance.—Lyford.

NEW YORK, February 18.—Flour—The decline in Genesee Flour may now be considered as established. Two hundred barrels, common brand Genesee and fiat hoop Ohio having been purchased for export to England at 4,75; smaller parcels of the same descriptions at the same price. The supply of Western is still abundant and the market again closes inactive. The demand for Southern is quite limited, with increasing supplies, and we have only to notice a sale of two hundred and fifty barrels Georgetown at five dollars. Rye Flour and Corn Meal are without change; 150 puncheons Brandywine sold at thirteen dollars cash. Exportation 1st to 10th February; Wheat Flour, eight thousand five hundred and sixty-three barrels.

Provisions.—Mess and Prime Beef is in limited demand, without change in prices. Of Ohio Pork small sales have been made of Mess at 11,75, and Prime at 9,75; lower country is held firmly at 12,25 for the former, and 10,25 for the latter. One thousand kegs Ohio Lard embracing nearly all of this description in first hands, have been disposed of at 7 cents. Hams, Smoked Beef, &c., are in a fair request at former rates.

New York Cattle Market, Feb'y. 15.—Beeves—At market, 750 beeves, including 300 left last week; 175 was from the South, 200 from the East, and the balance from this State—775 were sold at 6½ to 9¼c, average 7,75 per cwt. Market well attended and sales brisk.

Cows and Calves—There were 110 offered, all taken 25, 33 and 42 dollars, each.

Sheep & Lambs—1600 at market, all of which were taken at 2 to 8 dollars. Good demand.—New World.

PHILADELPHIA, February 22.—REMARKS. Within the last few days a better feeling seems to be abroad among business men; inspired by the belief that the Legislature of our State will extend to us a helping hand in this our hour of need; besides which the indications of a fair inland business are being developed by the arrival of a goodly number of remote Western Merchants among us, with funds in hand—although a dull period of the year for shipping, several vessels are now loading for the Mediterranean and other foreign ports, with our agricultural products, and home manufactures.

FLOUR.—Flour has declined. Early in the week, a sale was made of 6000 bbls. of Flour for the Liverpool markets, at 4,56¼, which is about the rate to-day.

SEEDS—Cloverseed has improved since last week, and is in demand for the New York market at 4,87½ a 5,00 per bushel. Flaxseed has advanced to 1,35 per bushel.

CATTLE MARKET.—The market has been scantily supplied this week, there being no arrivals from the South or West. Only about 200 fat Cattle offered, which sold at 7,00 a 8,00—extra 8,50.—Bicknell.

STRABISMUS OR SQUINTING.—Within the last three months, Dr. Crossman has cured forty-two persons of squinting.—With four the eye turned outwards—with thirty-eight the obliquity was inwards from infancy. We have seen a number of these cases. The position of the eyes now appear to be perfect—no one could possibly tell that there had existed a previous deformity. Several had been operated on once or twice before by persons incompetent; this had made the operation exceedingly difficult on account of abnormal adhesions, consequently great caution should be used in the choice of surgeons in the first attempt, if persons are anxious to be relieved. Dr. Crossman's success in curing, as a matter of course, proves his skill. So far, he has had no equal in this country, and perhaps in no other. Certainly, no one has pretended to perform the operation without assistance. But this he had done with the greatest facility in upwards of twenty instances, in the presence of some of the most respectable physicians and gentlemen in Philadelphia, by a most ingenious apparatus of his own invention. The operation was consummated on a highly respectable young gentleman not far from our office, a few days ago, in fifteen seconds. It must certainly be gratifying to those laboring under the misfortune and disagreeable deformity, to learn that they can be so speedily and easily relieved.—Phil. Ledger.

THE SUGAR CROP IN LOUISIANA.—The New Orleans True American says,—"From information we have obtained from various sources, upon which we can place reliance, we have come to the conclusion, that the sugar crop of this year will not exceed 80,000 or 85,000 hogsheads, against 125,000 last year. In the Attakapas the falling off will be fully one-fourth; in Lafourche one-third, and although as regards the river our information is not so exact, yet it may be stated at one-fourth. The aggregate diminution in the whole State will be rising one-fourth."

CATHOLIC BISHOPS.—The Catholic Herald says:—"We have heard from a source entitled to credit that the Papal Bulls have been received, appointing the Rev. Mr. Richard Whelan, to be Bishop of Richmond, Virginia, and the Rev. Dr. John J. Chance, President of St. Mary's College, Baltimore, to be first Bishop of the newly created See, of Natchez, Mississippi."

McLEOD.—It is feared in Lockport that McLeod will escape. The inhabitants of that place held a meeting in consequence on the 15th ult. After sundry speeches they came to the conclusion that the Niagara county jail was not safe enough—and McLeod is to be removed to a more secure prison.

An actor named Clausel, while playing on the New Orleans stage, a few days since, was attacked with apoplexy.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, FEB. 17, 1841.

The correspondence between the British minister and the Secretary of State, in relation to the negroes of the Amistad, has attracted great attention here. Mr. Presten alluded to it incidentally in the Senate to-day, and characterised the conduct of the British Government in the matter as an authorised interference with the concerns of this country, which he hoped no department of the Government would favor or sanction in the slightest degree. His course of remarks on the subject, arose upon the presentation of a memorial by Mr. Norvel, of Michigan, from citizens of New York, urging the interposition of the Government in behalf of certain "patriots," who were taken in arms during the Canadian insurrection, and condemned to death, but whose sentence has been commuted to banishment. Mr. Preston expressed the strongest objections to any interference with the domestic concerns of a foreign nation; and after adverting to the proceedings which have taken place on the Canadian Frontier, and declaring that the Government had taken no part in any of the proceedings which deserved censure, he hoped that no color of apology would be given for the interposition of Great Britain in the case of the Amistad negroes, by this Government committing any act of interference. He thought the Senate ought to mark with its rebuke, the very proposition to interfere in favor of the persons described in the memorial, With what face can we censure or complain of the course of the British Government in the case, if the proposition of the memorialists is entertained? He was decidedly opposed to entertain the opinion even so far as to suggest the idea that the President would consider the propriety of interfering.

The Senate manifested their concurrence in Mr. Preston's views against the memorial, by quietly laying it on the table whence it will never rise again.

The Washington Correspondent of the Star, under date of Feb. 20, says:—A proposal is now before the government from a highly respectable member of your mercantile community, to build four splendid steamers, of 2,500 tons each, to run between New York and Liverpool. The proposition is, to carry the mails for a given sum, to be paid him by the government, the latter, of course, receiving all the benefit arising from postages, the contract to be for ten years. In the interim, if war takes place with England, or any other power, the government to buy the steamers at a valuation agreed upon by both parties. The vessels to be built in all respects as men of war, and also to carry 1,500 to 2,000 tons freight, with 200 passengers. It is intended to burn anthracite coal, and it is expected that ten days will make the run from New York to Liverpool.

The capital to be employed is two millions of dollars. If the government accede to his proposition, two of the steamers will be ready in May, 1841—the other two the following year; the two first to run monthly, and, when the others are complete, to run twice a month, except three months in winter, when they will run only once. Although he has said ten days for the run to Liverpool from New York, he feels confident that he will accomplish it in nine days. Each vessel will have engines of about 1600 horse power.

THE MONEY MARKET.—We regret our inability to announce any favorable change in money matters. Every thing is still in confusion, nothing definite has been done by our Legislature, and nothing we fear, is likely to be done till after the 4th of March. In our last, we gave the proceedings of two public meetings that had been held in Philadelphia, both in reference to the then existing condition of affairs. A third meeting has since been held, at which Mr. Frederic Stoever presided. The principal speakers were young lawyers, and resolutions were adopted denouncing the banking system generally, the United States Bank in particular, and also advocating that the present law enforcing penalties against the banks for non-payment in specie, and also a forfeiture of their charters, should be rigidly enforced. The meeting was quite large, but it was, nevertheless, not composed of the material likely to have much effect upon the Legislature. Our advices from Harrisburgh are, that the Legislature will pass a bill legalizing suspension for a time, and probably one authorizing the issue of small notes.—What the Governor will do—yet remains to be seen.—Bicknell.

PHILADELPHIA AND NEW YORK.—Under this head the Cincinnati Gazette, of Monday has the following remark: "In times past, the former of these two cities has freely stepped forward, and rendered her assistance to the latter in periods of pecuniary difficulty. In 1835, we believe Philadelphia loaned New York five millions of dollars, to relieve her of the distress consequent upon her great fires of that year. How she has reciprocated the favor, her recent run upon her benefactor will show."

When Gen. Harrison visited the Senate Chamber, in the Capitol on his arrival at Washington, the Vice-President, Mr. Benton, Mr. Calhoun, and other Van Buren members of the Senate crowded around him, to tender him their respects and give him a cordial shake of the hand.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP BRITANNIA.

TWENTY-EIGHT DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Important news from Europe—arrival of the Levant Mail with despatches from Turkey, Egypt, Syria, &c., &c.

The Boston Royal Mail steamer reached that city on Monday morning at seven o'clock. We received our files by her this morning at nine o'clock. She brings London dates to February 3d, and Liverpool to Feb. 4th, inclusive.

The news by the arrival is not interesting; the most important is the settlement of the Eastern question. There is nothing later from China, than that bro't by the North America, and the news in relation to the settlement of the difficulties between England and China is neither confirmed nor contradicted.

American Stocks in London.—The latest quotations that we find are those of the London Colonial Gazette, of Feb. 3d, viz: Alabama (sterling) 5 per ct. 78; Indiana (sterling) 5, 75; Illinois 6, 75; Kentucky 6, 86; Louisiana (sterling) 5, 87; Maryland 6, 85; Massachusetts (sterling) 5, 100; New York (1855) 5, 85½; Ohio 6, 91, ex d.; Pennsylvania 5, 74; South Carolina 5, 90; Tennessee 6, 82; United States Bank 11½. In the London Speculator of January 30th, United States Bank stock is quoted at £13½.

The London Money Market was rather heavy.

In the markets there was not much doing. Cotton was dull; tea was heavy, and very little doing in wheat. Money was scarce, and stocks heavy.

Parliament was opened on the 26th of January, when the Queen delivered a speech, in propia persona, the substance of which is that a friendly disposition is manifested by all foreign powers; a convention formed by England, Austria, Prussia, Russia, and the Sultan of Constantinople, to effect a permanent pacification of the Levant, and maintain the independence and interests of the Ottoman Empire; a negociation is being made with the Chinese, which is expected to terminate favorably, and treaties have been concluded with Hayti and the Argentine Republic for the suppression of the slave trade.

Earl Cardigan is to be tried by the House of Lords for fighting a duel with Mr. Tuckett.

The young Princess of England was to be christened on the 10th ultimo. The King of the Belgians, the Duke of Saxe Coburg, and the Duke of Sussex were to be the god-fathers, and the Duchess of Kent and Gloucester god-mothers.

Scott, the American diver, killed himself accidentally.

There was a report in London on the 3d that Chusan had been re-taken by the Chinese, and that two British ships had been burnt. It gained but few believers.

Garry and Curtis, a leading firm in the Riga trade, have stopped payment. Mr. Curtis was Governor of the Bank of England in 1838—9.

Several very large meetings have been held at Leeds and other towns by the Chartists and Farther Reformers, but they do not require any farther notice, as they were of the same character as many former ones, breaking up without any serious trouble.

London Agency of the United States Bank.—It is understood in London, that Mr. James Morrison, of the firm of Morrisen, Cryder & Co., has accepted the agency in London of the U. S. Bank, formerly held by Messrs. Baring, and of late years since the stoppage by Mr. Jaudon, the cashier of that institution, who had an office in London for the transaction of that business. The European holders of stock in this bank exceed, in fact, the American, being estimated at £4,000,000,000 out of the $8,000,000,000, which constitutes its capital. The new agent has, therefore, a most difficult and responsible part to play, Death of the American Consul in France. Died on Sunday evening, Jan. 31, in Paris in the 68th year of his age, of typhoid exhaustion after gout, Daniel Brent, Esq. Consul of the United States of America for Paris, and agent of American claims.

The Eastern question is settled. The most important intelligence was received in London on the 1st instant is despatches from Admiral Stanford. Affairs seem to have been so successfully arranged by Com. Napier, that on the 14th January, the Pacha made his complete submission to the Sultan, and gave up the whole of the Turkish fleet. Mehemet engaged to send Egyptian officers and men to navigate the fleet to Marmorice Bay.

The news from France is not important.

The report of M. Theirs on the fortifications of Paris occupies a great space in the French journals, but it does not appear to have produced much effect upon the people, who regard the subject with little interest.

The whole subject of the war expenditures, was, at the last dates, occupying the attention of the French Chambers.

The French Funds declined in consequence of the unfavorable impressions produced by the speech of the Queen of England, in which there was no allusion to France.

Letters from Paris state that the accounts received from Poland, representing the situation of that kingdom as becoming hourly more deplorable.

It is asserted in the French papers, upon the best authority, that English agents had been endeavoring to excite the Circassians to revolt. It is also stated, that three vessels laden with ammunition, which were forwarded from Bir at the expense of the British Consul at Erzeroum, were lately captured by the Russian flotilla.

It is announced in the Madrid papers, that the Regency had accepted the mediation of Great Britain in the Douro affair. The war fever had for the most part subsided, and there was every prospect of a satisfactory and peaceful termination of the dispute.

There has been another revolt in several towns in Switzerland, whose people recently adopted new constitutions, proposed by the government of each. The aristocratic party and the Catholics resisted the government troops for three days, and the result was the utter rout of the insurgents.

In consequence of much publicity having been given by the English and Continental newspapers, to the recent horrible acts of torture and cruelty practised by the police of Athens, sanctioned, as it would appear, by the King, some attempt at explanation has been put forth by an Athenian journal in the interest of the Court, but not one of the charges has been refuted.

The military preparations now being made with several German States are for the sole purpose of restoring the corps of the army to the peace establishment. The corps of the army of the German Confederation, together with the reserve, are to be to the amount fixed in the act of the Confederation, which is 300,000 men.

Copenhagen, Jan. 9.—The official account of the finances for 1839 is extremely satisfactory. It shows a surplus of 2,136,958. The public debt has been reduced from the year 1835 to 1839, by 5,850,000 rix dollars. The saving in the interest is 230,000 rix dollars.

The King of Hanover intends soon, it is said, to institute a law suit against Queen Victoria, to recover a portion of the jewels of the English crown.

The Persian State Gazette of the 18th ult., contains a detailed account of the ceremonies at the coronation of the King of Prussia. Only a few orders were conferred by his Majesty on this occasion.—The festival was closed with a superb banquet.

The horrid murder of the venerable Bishop of Ermeland, Dr. Von Hatten, on the 3d ult., by a journeyman tailor, has caused the greatest excitement in the principal towns of Prussia. The murderer had been arrested.

M'LEOD.—A letter from Angus M'Leod, brother of Alexander, dated at Kingston, U. C., February 11, in which Angus alleges that at the time of the Caroline affair—for a participation in which Alexander is now capitally indicted—the accused was four miles from the scene of the tragedy, and consequently could have had neither lot nor part in it. He appears to think, however, that had he been present, he would have gone into the outrage heart and hand.

The Senate of Pennsylvania have adopted a resolution to suspend the penalties of the existing law against banks for the period of forty days. The House will concur, and in the meantime some measure to meet the exigencies of the times will be brought forward and matured.

The Pittsburgh American states that Mr. William Hogg, of Brownsville (Pa.) died at his residence, on Friday last, leaving an estate of one million one hundred thousand dollars to collateral heirs.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On Sunday, the 14th ult. by the Rev. Daniel Kinney, Mr. HENRY B. INEMAN to Miss MARY ANN BAKER, both of Fairfield county, Ohio.

Business Department.

Br. W. Turner, superintendent of Mahonan circuit, informs Br. Stockton that his post office address is Salem, Columbiana, Ohio.

Will our subscribers and agents be so accommodating as to send us good money and not the notes of suspicious banks. We have been bored rather severely in this way latterly. You recollect, no doubt, what we said would be likely to be the result of this practice, a month or two since.

We again request our friends, in forwarding money, to always give the name of the post office where the subscriber receives his paper, otherwise there will be no certainty about the credit being correctly given; beside it often takes a two hours to find the name on our books where the office is not given.

Some person forwarded us the name of J. McCarroll, Greenfield, Hancock, Ia.: after we had sent him the paper some over half a year the P. M. informs us for the first time that he could find no such man. This is the way we are constantly bored by carelessness in forwarding subscribers, and then the negligence of post masters.

Br. Springer: I have not seen the paper, but a friend informed me that the request for Br. Ragan is "17th of June or 1st Sabbath of August;" if so, it is an error, and I expect of my making. Our request is, that Br. R. should visit Sandusky circuit on the last Sabbath of June or the first Sabbath of July, if convenient, as it is contemplated holding a camp-meeting thereon. Br. Bassett is also requested to make arrangements to meet us on that occasion.

Yours, in the gospel,

JOHN GUEST.

PITTSBURGH CIRCUIT—ACTION ON SLAVERY.

Whereas, about three millions of human beings, who are equally interested in the death and mediation of the great Redeemer, and the hopes of a future state of being, are held in the United States in slavery; and whereas, slavery is an assault upon all the rights and interests and relations which belong to humanity, and is, therefore, a violation of each and every precept of the law of God: And whereas, the practice of slave-holding has intruded itself within the precincts of the church, claiming the sanction of the Holy Scriptures, the defence of the pulpit, and the fellowship of the communion table: And whereas, the last General Conference, after much discussion of the subject, referred it back to the church in her primary assemblies; it, hence, becomes a legitimate subject of church action: And whereas, while we take no action, under existing circumstances, against this enormous evil, we indirectly, at least, give it our sanction and become accessary to its continuance and its crimes; and inasmuch as the church is the light of the world—an exemplification of the morality, religion and benevolence of the gospel—is set for the defence of all that is morally wrong; and yet the discipline of our church, in the distinction which it makes between white and colored members in respect to the right of suffrage, &c., deprives a portion of our brethren of their rights as christians and their attributes as men, simply because God has gave them a skin differing in color from their own. Therefore,

1. Resolved, That we regard slavery as a moral evil of the greatest magnitude—a henious sin against God, that ought immediately to be repented of and abandoned.

2. Resolved, That prejudice against color, so inveterately cherished by so many professing christians in this country, is most offensive to God, wickedly pours contempt on His work and quarrels with the allotments of His providence—is cruel to the colored man, and is a main support of the system of slavery.

3. Resolved, That the apparent sanction put upon slavery, in the discipline of our church, by making a distinction of rights on account of color, and by admitting those guilty of the practice to the ministry and to the fellowship of the church, ought to be entirely withdrawn.

4. Resolved, That slavery, being contrary to the morality of the Holy Scriptures, is a proper subject of church discipline, and members who persist in the crime, or in aiding and abetting in it may and ought to be expelled, as for other immoralities, but the same patience, and meekness, and persevering effort to enlighten and reclaim, as are requisite in reference to evil customs, which have been long suffered to prevail, and in relation to which the public mind is not fully enlightened.

5. Resolved, That we respectfully recommend that there be an anti-slavery convention of the ministers and members of the church, belonging to the Pittsburgh district, held at the place of the meeting of the next Annual Conference, on the Monday first preceding its session.

6. Resolved, That the above proceedings be signed by the Chairman and Secretary of this Quarterly Conference and forwarded for publication in the Western Recorder.

THOMAS C. LEWIS, Chairman.
THOMAS GARDINER, Secretary.

The foregoing preamble and resolutions were adopted with great unanimity by a full meeting of the Quarterly Conference of Pittsburgh Circuit, held at Sharpsburgh February 8th, 1841. T. G.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Springer: I feel it my duty to contribute my mite in the furtherance of the gospel of Christ. In doing which I will cast a few reflections on the following text: 2 Cor. v. 20. Now we are embassadors for Christ. Some confound embassador with apostles, but we conceive that a man may be an embassador without being an apostle; an embassador is a person sent, an apostle is not only sent, but he had power to work miracles—who sends them? God and the Church; a man whose duty it is to preach the gospel it will take God and the church to get him at it; one called by the devil it takes God and the Church to keep him from it.—Therefore, an embassador must be called of God as was Aaron. Romans x. 25.—How shall they preach except they be sent? as it is written, how beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace. "We pray you in Christ's stead," 20. They must pray, not only for kings and those in authority but for sinners too. We call the reader's attention to Acts viii. 18.

1. Peter directs Simon to pray God, if, perhaps, the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. 2. Simon requested Peter, pray ye to the Lord for me,—but Simon was baptized. What of that? the bond of iniquity was not broken. Therefore, if he got pardon, it was through prayer. This was an Apostle: grant it. Did he do right? Yes, because he was inspired. If we do as did the Apostle, will we not do right? Certainly, if there is any truth in the Bible. We enjoy all that an Apostle enjoyed, except the power to work miracles. For the truth of this let us look back at the promise, John xiv. 13—16: this comforter may abide with you forever, that is all christians, to the end of the gospel age. If asking or praying closed with the Apostles, so did the spirit, and if the spirit, so did discipleship, for Christ informs us, Romans viii. 9: now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His. But again, James v. 16: confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another that ye may be healed. Healing embraces the doctrine of the remission of sins. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. A DISCIPLE.

DEATH OF VOLTAIRE.—If, during his life time, you had been asked to point out the man who would have been most likely to confront the king of terrors, with insolent defiance; to rail, in his last agonies, at the terrors of the Lord; and to make e'en "the scaffold echo with a jest," you would have pointed to Voltaire, and said "thou art the man!" Voltaire! who inoculated France with the soul destroying virus of infidelity; who maddened her with the insanity of atheism; who deluged half Europe with blood; who sowed the poisonous seeds of that universal anarchy and insubordination, whether to God or man, for which the world is now reaping the bitter harvest. Voltaire! the watchword of whom and his party, in blasphemous mockery of the humiliations and sufferings of the Son of God, was "Crucify the wretch!" as if, unsated by the groans and agonies of that meek and patient sufferer, they would "crucify unto themselves afresh the Son of God and put Him to open shame." But Voltaire, too, the Apostle of Infidelity, must die. And did he, like the great Apostle of Christianity whom he derided and despised, when standing upon the brink of the two worlds, look forward with unblanched countenance into the future; look back without regret upon the past, and, in calm triumph, exclaim, "The time of departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness?"—Did he like that Apostle "know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, an house not made with hands eternal in the heavens?" Were his groanings that he "might be clothed upon with his house which is from heaven?" Did he "desire to depart and to be"—I will not say "with Christ," but with the idol which he had enshrined for the adoration of his country, the goddess of Reason? Did he know whom he had believed, and that she was able to keep that which he had committed to her unto that day? No. The infidel confederacy indeed studiously endeavored to veil with the shroud of oblivion their dying leader; but in spite of all their efforts, fearful sounds and gleams of horrid light issued from that chamber of death indeed, to tell the secrets of the prison and scare the guilty soul. The martyr of infidelity was tortured on the rock of a guilty conscience—with all the agonies of a spiritual crucifixion; no ray of hope cheering him; no "angel from heaven strengthening him." In the wild horror of despair, he offered his physician an enormous sum, if he could protract for but a few months the wretched existence which had already run its course of eighty-five years, and this not with any defined hope but in the spirit of those who cried, "Art thou come to torment us before the time?" He asked that a priest whom he named might be sent for. But the demons in human form who hovered round that death bed, fearful lest these strange misgivings and womanish weakness of the hitherto daring leader in the apostacy might dispirit the host which he had raised, and damage their bad cause, refused to him the broken reed of superstition on which the hardened infidel could cast himself in despair, when the arrows of the Almighty drank up his spirit, and the iron entered into his soul. They compelled him shivering and reluctant, to take what a brother infidel termed "a leap in the dark," and to plunge from his solid footing on the cliffs of time into shoreless, fathomless, gloomy eternity. Beneath those closing waves, we look not. "To his own maker he standeth or falleth!" But surely, we have seen enough even on this side of the great gulf fixed to make the sinner tremble. Surely we have awful materials, in the death-bed of the infidel philosopher, for strong and impressive contrast with what every minister of the Gospel must have often witnessed, as he sat beside the death bed of the timid female, the unlettered peasant, the humble Christian.—Lon. Chris. Adv.

HARD UPON THE BACHELORS.—A Mr. Olds, during the late session of the Illinois Legislature, introduced a bill to levy a tax on "Old Bachelors," or single men over 25 years of age, one half of the proceeds of which was to be appropriated to the purchase of flannel for indigent ladies who have arrived at that period of life when they are "as old as they ever will be." The other moiety of the tax, to be applied to the liquidation of the interest on the State debt.

BOZ, AUTHOR OF THE OLD CLOCK.—The London correspondence of the Signal says that Mr. Dickens is in receipt of about $3500 a year for the labors of his pen; his first publishers, Chapman & Hall, whom he has never deserted, not even while he lent his name and Oliver Twist to Bently, have realised a fortune out of the sale of his works. Master Humphrey's Clock is purchased weekly by forty thousand people.

"How dreadful short the days are," as the woman said when she let her breakfast dishes stand till she had read a novel.

From the Norfolk Herald.

WONDERS OF VENTRILOQUISM.

AN AMUSING ANECDOTE.

A few years ago, towards the dusk of evening, a stranger in a travelling sulkey was leisurely pursuing his way towards a little tavern, situated near the foot of a mountain in one of the Western States. A little in advance of him, a negro, returning from the plough, was singing the favorite melody of

"Gwyne down to shin-bone alley
Long time ago."

The stranger hailed him with—"Hallo—uncle!—you snow ball!"

"Sah?" said blackey holding up his horses.

"Is that the Half-Way House ahead yonder?"

"No sah, dat Massa Lemon's Otel."

"Hotel, eh?—Billy Lemon?"

"Yes sah,—you know Massa Billy?—he used to lib at de mouth o' Cedar creek—he done move now do—keep monsous nice tavern now, I tell you."

"Indeed."

"Yes sah, you stop dar dis ebenin I spec, all spectable gentleman put up dah. You chaw backah, massa?"

"Yes, Sambo; here's some real Cavendish for you."

"Tankee, massa, tankee sah; Quash my name."

"Quash, eh?"

"Yes sah, at your service. Och, grunted the debtor, "tankee sah; tankee."

"Well Quash, what kind of a gentleman is Mr. Lemon!"

"Oh, he nice man, monsous nice man, empertain genplemen in the fus stile, and I take care of de hauses. I'longs to him, and do I say it, Massa Billy mighty clebber man; he funny too—tell heap o'stories 'bout ghosses, an spirits, notwithstandin he fraid on'em he self to, my pinion."

"Afraid of ghosts, eh?" said the traveller musing. "Well go ahead, Mr. Quash—as it's getting late I'll tarry with Mr. Lemon to-night."

"Yes sah; gee up hoa! Dobbin: go along lively;" and setting off at a brisk trot, followed by the traveller, the musical Quash again broke out in

"Gwyne down to shin-bone alley,——

The burthen "Long time ago" was taken up by some one apparently in a adjoining corn-field, which occasioned Quash to prick up his ears with some surprise; he continued, however, with

"Dah I met old Johnny Gladden."

And the same voice again responded from the field, "Long time ago."

"Who dat?" said the astonished negro, checking suddenly his horses, and looking around on every side for the cause of his surprise.

"Oh, never mind; drive ahead, snow ball, its some of your master's spirits I suppose."

Quash in a very thoughtful mood, led the way to the tavern without uttering another word. Halting before the door, the stranger was very soon waited upon by the obliging Mr. Lemon, a bustling, talkative gentleman who greeted his customers with, "Light sir, light—here, John take out that chair box, come, sir—and carry this horse to the stable—do you prefer him to stand on a dirt floor, sir."

"If you please, sir, he's rather particular about his lodgings."

"Carry him to the lower stable, Quash, and tend him well—I always like to see a horse well tended, and this is a noble critter, too," continued the landlord, slapping him on the back.

"Take care, will you!" said the horse.

"What the d——l!" exclaimed the landlord, starting back.

"None of your familiarity!" said the horse, looking spitefully round at the astonished tavern keeper.

"Silence, Belzebub," said the traveller, caressing the animal; and turning to the landlord, he observed—"you must excuse him, sir, he's an aristocratic horse—the effects of education, sir."

"He's the devil, sir."

"Wo-hoa, Belzebub! loose the traces, Quash, what are you starting at? he won't eat you."

"Come, landlord," said Belzebub, "I want my oats."

Quash scattered; the landlord backed up into the porch, and the traveller was fain to jump into the vehicle and drive round in search of the stable himself.—Having succeeded to his satisfaction in disposed of his horse, he returned to the tavern.

Anon supper came on; the eggs had all apparently young chickens in them; the landlord was in confusion at such a mortifying circumstance, promised the traveller amends from a cold pig—which as he inserted the carving knife into it, uttered a squeal, which was responded to by a louder one from the landlady.—Down went the knife and fork, and the cold perspiration began to grow into large beads upon the forehead of the poor host as he looked fearfully at the grunter—his attention was soon taken, however, by voices from without calling——

"Hilloa! house! Landlord!"

"Aye, coming gentleman, more travellers, do help yourself, sir."

"Landlord!"

"Coming gentlemen; here John, a light bring a light to the door, Sally, wait on the gentleman," and out the landlord bounced, followed by John with lights, but soon returned with a look of disappointment; he declared there was no living being without. The voices called again—and the landlord after going returned a second time, declared his belief that the whole plantation was haunted by evil spirits.

The stranger presently rose from the table and drew his chair to the fire, having made a pretty hearty supper from the eggs and young porker, their cries to the contrary notwithstanding.

That night, rumor saith, Mr. Billy Lemon slept with the Bible under his head, and kept a candle burning in his chamber till morning, and those who pass there to this day, may, upon close examination, discover the heels of old horse shoes, peering over the casement, as a bulwark against witches, hobgoblins and all other evil spirits.

EFFECTS OF TEMPERANCE IN IRELAND.—In Mrs. Hall's book on Ireland, occurs the following beautiful passage, which a person will hardly be able to read without emotion:

"We entered one day a cottage in the suburbs of Cork; a woman was knitting stockings at the door. It was as neat and comfortable as any in the most prosperous district of England. We will tell her brief story in her own words, as nearly as we can recall them.

"My husband is a wheelright, and always earned his guinea a week; he was a good work man, and neither a bad man nor a bad husband, but the love for drink was strong in him, and it wasn't often he brought me more than five shillings out of the pound on a Saturday night; and it broke my heart to see the poor children too ragged to send to school, to say nothing of the starved look they had out of the little I could give them. Well, God be praised, he took the pledge; and the next Saturday he laid twenty-one shillings upon the chair you sit upon. O! didn't I give thanks on my bended knees that night? Still, I was fearful it wouldn't last, and I spent no more than the five shillings I was used to, saying to myself, may be the money will be more wanted than it is now. Well, the next week he brought the same, and the next, and the next, until eight weeks passed; and, glory be to God! there was no change for the bad in my husband; and the while he never asked me why there was nothing better for him out of his hard earnings, so I felt there was no fear for him; and the ninth week when he came home to me, I had this table bought and these six chairs, one for myself, four for the children, and one for himself. And I was dressed in a new gown, and shoes and stockings, and upon his own chair I put a bran-new suit, and upon his plate I put the bill and restate for them all—just the eight sixteen shillings they cost that I'd saved out of his wages, not knowing what might happen, and that always before went for drink. And he cried good lady and good gentleman, he cried like a baby but 'twas with thanks to God; and now whereas the healthier man than my husband in the country of Cork, or a happier wife than myself, or dacenter or better fed children than our own four?"

It is most unlikely that such a family will again sink into poverty and wretchedness.

UNITED STATES NAVY.—The Navy of the United States consists of eleven ships of the line, four of which is on the stocks—one razee of 54 guns; twelve frigates of the first class, vated at 44 guns each, six of which are on the stocks, and two of the second class, rated at 36 guns each—twenty-one sloops of war, of from 16 to 20 guns each—four brigs of 10 guns, and schooners of 10, 8, and 4 guns each. In addition to the above, two steam frigates are now building at New York and Philadelphia. The oldest ships in the Navy, are frigates Constitution, built at Boston, the United States, built at Philadelphia, and the Constellation, built at Baltimore, all in the year 1797. The oldest ship of the line is the Franklin, built in Philadelphia in 1815.

The number of Post Captains in the Navy, is 55, the oldest in rank being Jas. Barron. The number of Master Commandants is also 55; of lieutenants 290; of passed midshipmen 191; of midshipmen 231; of surgeons 61; of passed assistant surgeons 17; of assistant surgeons 51; of pursers 51; of chaplins 13; and of sailing masters 29.

The pay of a senior captain on sea service, is $4,500 per annum; of do. on leave, 3500; captains of squadron, 4000; do. on other duty, 3500; do. off duty, 2500; master commandant on sea services 2500; do. on leave of absence, 1800; lieutenants commanding, 1800; do. on other duty, 1500; do. on leave, 1200; surgeons, from 1000 to 2700, according to their terms of service; assistant surgeons, from 650 to 1200; chaplins at sea, 1200; do. on leave, 800; passed midshipmen at sea, 750; do. waiting orders, 600; midshipmen at sea, 400; do. on other duty, 350; sailing master of a ship of the line at sea, 1100; do. on other duty, 1000; professor of mathematics, 1200; teachers of naval school, 480.

THE STANDING ARMY.—By a late report of the Adjutant General of the Army, it appears that there are in the United States Militia, 685 general officers, 2,864 general staff officers, 15,941 field officers, &c., 52,413 company officers; total commissioned officers, 75,050; non-commissioned officers, musicians, artificers and privates, 1,431,902. Aggregate. 1,503,952.

COAL IN ARKANSAS.—A vein of coal has been discovered and worked in Arkansas, which is described by the Little Rock Advocate as possessing superior qualities, and as fully equal to Anthracite. This is the first mine opened in Arkansas, and is called the Spadra Mine.

THANKSGIVING DAY.—A day when men get boozy by Proclamation.

EFFECTS OF THE WEATHER.—They have had the heaviest kind of rain in Alabama, and one of its editors is complaining bitterly. He says that the powder horn is choked by the adhesion of its contents; the sand in the hour glass is still; the beautiful ringlets of the girls are all wet, and hang as straight as if life to them had no twist; whilst the ripe beauties were pouting and wasting their sweetness in a vain effort to produce a curl with heated tongs and gum water. Even the "little pigs" who erst

"Slept with their tails curled up" now enjoy the delights of repose, with that graceful ornament

"Stuck out a feet."

AN EXCELLENT HIT.—We find the following good one in a New Orleans paper:—"A talking match lately 'came off' in this place for five hundred dollars a side. It continued for thirteen hours—the rivals being a Frenchman and a Kentuckian. The bystanders and judges were all talked to sleep, and when they waked up in the morning, they found the Frenchman dead and the Kentuckian whispering in his ear!"

FOR THE FARMERS.—The New York Sun states "that the largest hog that paper ever heard of, passed through Peekskill, on its way to the City of Washington, intended as a present to William Henry Harrison, the President elect.—This animal stands four feet high, is eight feet long, and weighs twelve hundred and fifty-five pounds. It was raised by Peabody Mosely, of Madison county, town of Lebanon, in that State, and his swineship is two and a half years old.

CURIOUS!—At the parish church in this town, on Sunday last, a man of about forty years of age attended the morning service, and among the bans of marriage published he listened to those of his own father and his own son! Probably such an occurrence is not in the memory of that traditionary person, the "oldest inhabitant."—Blackburn (Eng.) Standard.

THOMSONIANISM.—The select Committee of the Assembly on the petitions of numerous citizens of the State praying for the passage of a law authorizing Thomsonian Physicians to collect pay for their services, have come to an unanimous conclusion in favor of the prayer of the petitioners, and directed their Chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill.—N. Y. Cour.

TWO GREAT VIRTUES.—Delaware can boast of two virtues which no other State in the Union can claim. The one is an overflowing Treasury, free of debt, and the other that there is not a single Distillery upon her soil. May not the former be the consequence of the latter?

A HAPPY CHANGE.—The report of our friend Noland's assassination, at Little Rock is contradicted. Instead of his being killed, he was merely—married. Instead of its being true that he is no more, he bids fair to be a dozen more.—Louisville Jour.

TRIAL BY JURY IN TURKEY.—The new code of law recently promulgated in Turkey, provides that every Turk, Musselman, or Christian within the territory of the Sultan, is entitled to trial by jury. If he be a christian, he is allowed to have one half of the jurors of the same creed.

A GOOD ONE.—The Mercantile says: A farmer's boy was told to give the cows some cabbages, and to give the one that yielded the most milk the largest share. He literally obeyed the order, and laid the largest share on the pump!!

LARGE FAMILY.—A single Hotel in New Orleans called St. Charles, has a population of 700—inhabitants enough, says the Picayune, to stock a good sized country village, and make considerable of a show at that.

WORTHY OF NOTICE.—The Indianapolis correspondent of the Louisville Journal, speaking of social parties in Indianapolis, says: "They are generally closed with prayer."

SUICIDE.—Saml. Innes, editor of the Easton Pa. Argus, committed suicide on Monday last by cutting his throat. This unfortunate act is another warning to the living to beware of the intoxicating draught.

BAPTISING.—On Thursday the Rev. Mr. Shadrack, of the New Market street Church, baptised in the river Delaware, opposite Kensington on the Jersey shore, thirty-one persons.

The Newark (N. J.) Daily Advertiser says that there is not a distillery to be found in that State.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

THE FAMILY BIBLE.

AIR—OLD OAKEN BUCKET.

ow painfully pleasing the fond recollection, uthful connections and innocent joy;
n blessed with parental advice and affection;
ounded with mercies and peace from on high,
I view the chairs of my father and mother, seats of their offspring as ranged on each hand, richest of books that excelled every other,
Family Bible that lay on the stand.

CHORUS.

old fashion'd Bible, the dear blessed Bible;
family Bible that lay on the stand.

he Bible the volume of God's inspiration, morning and evening could yield us delight;
the prayer of our sire was a sweet invocation, mercies by day and for safety by night.
hymns of thanksgiving with harmony swelling, warm from the hearts of the family band;
raised us from earth to that rapturous dwelling, crib'd in the Bible that lay on the stand.

e scenes of tranquility long have we parted;
hopes almost gone and my parents no more,
orrow and sadness I live broken hearted, wander unknown on a far distant shore;
how can I doubt a dear Saviour's protection, getful of gifts from his bountiful hand,
tet me with patience receive his correction, think of the Bible that lay on the stand.

Bless'd Bible, the light and the guide of the stranger.
th thee I seem circl'd by parents and friends, kind admonition shall guide me, from danger;
thee my last lingering hope then depends;
e wakens to vigor and rises to glory,
hasten and flee to the bright promis'd land;
d for refuge lay hold on the hope set before me veal'd in the Bible that lay on the stand.

Hail thou the brightest and best of the morning,
r that hath guided my parents safe home;
e beams of thy glory my pathway adorning, ll scatter the darkness and brighten my gloom;
wandering sages to worship the stranger, hasten with rapture to Canaan's fair land;
bow to adore him, but not in a manger,
's seen in the Bible that lay on the stand.

Though age and misfortune press hard on my feelings, flee to the Bible and trust in the Lord,
ough darkness should cover his merciful dealings,
y soul is still cheer'd by the heavenly word;
t now from things earthly my soul is removing,
oon shall shout glory with heaven's bright band;
nd in rapture of joy be forever adoring
e God of the Bible that lay on the stand.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WITHAMSVILLE, OHIO, FEB. 16, 1841.

Br. Springer: The Lord is yet good to us in reserving our unprofitable lives, in favoring us with health and confering upon us many blessings, especially the blessings of the gospel—the gospel of peace—the gospel of glad tidings—the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth—and the gospel which brings life and immortality to light. This gospel must be considered an unspeakable and indescribable scheme of mercy and goodness to the human family. To preach this gospel should be the chief business and principal delight of all those who take upon them the ministerial office.

So far as our information extends, in every age of the world, the Deity in His providence, has designed one class of mankind to instruct another, and for this purpose a set of men, generally to some considerable extent, have been separated or set apart from the secular concerns of life, in order to be more eminently devoted to the service of God, and to promote the happiness of the human family. God, under former dispensations, raised up patriarchs, prophets, priests, &c., to be the leaders and instructors of the people; but since the coming of the Messiah these have mostly been superseded by others,—such as apostles, or persons sent by Christ to preach the gospel, those that saw the Saviour and were favored with a high degree of inspiration. Evangelists, who also were enabled to preach the gospel with the Holy Ghost, sent down from heaven, and to write the things which were bro't to their remembrance. But they are more generally called ambassadors, ministers, or preachers. I have no recollection of any minister of the gospel being called a PRIEST in the New Testament. Be this as it may, these ambassadors, or ministers, or preachers, have a great work to do, a work which calls for all the grace, wisdom, love, learning and divine or spiritual power, that they can possibly acquire, and for this purpose, it is their indispensable duty to pray, read and meditate on divine truth, that their minds may be richly stored with sacred, useful, and substantial knowledge.

We have taken our stand among the different denominations of christians in these United States; it is, undoubtedly, our duty to maintain this position, so far as scripture, truth and righteousness, will sustain us. And I know of no better plan, by which we can succeed, than to improve ourselves as ministers and preachers of the gospel, and raise up a pure, talented and energetic ministry. Certainly, we can aim at improvement, without despising the day of small things, or forgetting the rock from whence we were hewn. Our grand and ultimate object of raising up a holy people should not be lost sight of for a moment. God is respresented as holy—as the Holy One of Israel,—heaven is holy—angels are holy—the spirits of the just made perfect are holy—and, according to St. Peter, as He which hath called you is holy, be ye also holy in all manner of conversation. If the gospel be not designed to make us holy, what real benefit is it to the world? Should not Christ's ministers insist on the doctrine of entire sanctification; that the blood of Christ is efficacious to cleanse the soul from all sin, or unrighteousness. It is the doctrine of the Bible—of the Church—of the Wesleys,—do we desire to do good and witness great revivals of pure and undefiled religion, and to see the gates of Zion thronged with happy converts to christianity? Let then, the ministry and membership of the Methodist Protestant Church live holy lives—let the ministry proclaim, that without holiness no man shall witness the approbation and smiles of God in eternity.

Our second quarterly meeting is past. We had but little ministerial help, but the Lord was our helper. I trust the word and spirit of God made deep and lasting impressions on many.—Two individuals attached themselves to the visible body of Christ. About four hundree dollars have been subscribed to erect a house of worship in this place. It is thought it will take eight hundred to build the house, but the brethren are determined to "go a-head."

I attended Br. Euans' quarterly meeting on Eagle circuit—the Lord was with us. It lasted from Saturday morning until Tuesday morning; four attached themselves as members, and there is good prospect for more.

Yours, affectionately,

R. T. BOYD.

MIDDLEBURGH, O., FEB. 19, 1841.

Br. Springer: Since my last we have had several protracted meetings, at which the Lord was pleased to meet with us.

We held one on the 16th ult. on Bogg's creek, at which several professed purifying grace. We had no society here, but we formed one, on this occasion, of thirteen members. Our Episcopal Methodist brethren of the neighborhood united with us in the meeting as christians should.—Our cause is gaining upon the confidence of the people of this vicinity. They talk of building a meeting house at this place.

Our second quarterly meeting commenced on the 23d ult. and lasted seven days. We had to our assistance Br. Bassett, our President, Brs. Young, Crall and Devore, whose labors were all profitable. Some four our five professed conversion, and three united with the church. The membership were much refreshed.

The day before yesterday Br. Devore met me at my regular appointment, where we have recently raised a class of fifteen members, five of whom joined at this meeting.

The revival intelligence which reaches us weekly through your columns, is cheering to the hearts of God's people. My prayer is that God may give us a humble and faithful ministry, and yet more and more enlarge the borders of our Zion.—72 have united with us on this circuit, since conference. Yours, &c.

ISAAC C. HUNT.

We have received an anonymous communication from some person in Bridgeport, Pa. This gives a description of a meeting held at that place, under the pastoral management of Br. J. Clarke, Sr., which is stated to be very profitable. A number of backsliders were reclaimed,—also of conversions. Nine were added to the church.

It is our general rule not to publish communications, especially those which involve statements of facts, unless accompanied by the proper name of the writer. But as we do not doubt the statements above, we think proper to make this reference to the letter. EDITOR.

UNION CIRCUIT.

On motion, resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to draft a memorial to the next General Conference on the subject of slavery—And, that the superintendent present the same to the members of each class on the circuit. Whereupon, Brs. Isaac C. Hunt, John Inskeep, Sr., and James L. Smith were appointed said committee.

Resolved, That the secretary forward the same to the Recorder for publication.

Mt. Zion M. H., Jan. 23, 1841.

Criticism is a system of rules whereby authors are tried on a general charge of writing worthless books. For Krites, the original word, was a criminal judge, who in the nature of law, should try only those who were indicted; charged with some delinquency—and it was his office to determine by evidence whether the accused were guilty or not guilty. Thus the presumption is always, legitimately, that an author has committed an offence in publishing, and presumption stands in the place of the indictment in criminal law. Hence it is suggested, that the reason why Job exclaimed—"O, that mine enemy had written a book!" had something of malice in it—covering this implied consequence—"for then I might have him tried and hanged, and so get rid of him." But we doubt this latter. It seems to us that Job only meant to express his disgust at the everlasting succession of harangues that his visiters were dinning into his ears, and at last in thorough impatience, shouted out—"I wish you would write down your accusations in order, and deliver me forever from your intolerable jabber."—Charleston Mercury.

CATHOLIC CONTROVERSY.—Some excitement has recently been manifested in Philadelphia, in relation to a controversy which was going on between the Protestants and Catholics. We give the following report, relating to the subject, from the Daily Chronicle.—ED.

THE SUBSTANCE of a lecture delivered by the Rev. Mr. Sparry, on the doctrines and Practices of Romanism, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Fifth below Green street, on Tuesday afternoon February, 23, 1841.

Mr. Sparry, after some preparatory remarks, said, that the abomination and usurpation of the Papal throne is a work of man's invention, and against the desire of God. The authority of the Pope must be obeyed in all things, and his infallibility and supremacy must be acknowledged even if it be against the dictates of virtue and morality. Pope Boniface says, "That the belief of this is necessary to salvation," and quotes Daniel, 7th chap. 14th verse, and 13th Revelation, 5th v. as proof that this doctrine is inculcated in Scripture, not one word of which applies to Popery. Pope Innocent III. blasphemously asserts, that he is in the place of God; another Pope styles himself God, Lord God, Priest of the world, Heaven's Vice-quesent, God's Vicar on earth. It is the custom of the Pope to ride out in a carriage drawn by six horses, and the Cardinals also ride on white horses, which is entirely anti-christian, and not compatable with the doctrines of the meek and lowly Jesus.

INFALLIBILITY.—The most eminent writers in the Romish church differ as to what part of the Church is to be vested with this power. Some asserting it to be with the Pope; others, in the General Council, some in the Pope and Council; and others in the whole of the Church combined; they derive this power from Peter, who they say, was infallible; and consequently his successors are likewise so. Now, if Peter was infallible, the rest of the Apostles must have been so, but we deny the infallibility of Peter, and no passage of scripture can be shown to prove such doctrine. One Romish writer asserts that the conduct of some of the Popes was too bad for Devils.

The Popes have ever been inimical to the progress of knowledge; one of the Pope's condemned Galileo for asserting the motion of the earth.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION.—It was remarked by a heathen, "that the Romish religion was a most ridiculous absurdity, for they not only made their God but eat him afterwards." No part of the worship of Pagans, says Mr. Sparry, are equal to such abominations. What must be the indignation of God, at the blasphemous adoration paid to a small portion of flour and water,—little wafer Gods. MASS.—Mr. Sparry mentioned the fact of some thieves breaking into the Cathedral at Baltimore, and, says Mr. Sparry, they stole away their Gods, and masses were said on the occasion, and sermons preached, and the text was, "They have taken away our Gods." The Priests in Europe are merchants, and it is customary there for a Priest when he has more masses than he can attend to himself, to bargain with some supernumerary priest for 20 or 30 cents, or as cheap as he can, to perform them for him; and, said Mr. Sparry, I have known Priests stand at the altar and make such a contract.

PURGATORY was then considered, of which, said Mr. Sparry, no traces can be found in Scripture, and to show how absurd such doctrine is, I will ask, how can the Almighty forgive sin, if, after we are forgiven, we are to suffer the pains and penalties of purgatory. If, says Mr. Sparry, I owe a note and pay it, I cannot be said to be forgiven it, because I pay the debt. God forgives the sinner, and the debt is paid.

Palermon says, that a lady of his acquaintance saw a man, that came from Purgatory covered with flame, and when she asked him whom he saw there he replied Pope Innocent, who told him he was to be there a number of years, and that a great many Cardinals and Bishops were also there, and while he was there he saw a d——l catch up a burning soul and throw at him, and it burnt his face and clothes; he also stated an anecdote of a sick widow lady, whose husband was in Purgatory, and the Priest informed her that he would suffer the torments of the damned, and unless an immense sum was given to the church to obtain his release: which she was not willing to give at the first, but on being told that his sufferings were increasing, she came and threw the money at the feet of the Priest and exclaimed "pray him out! pray him out!!"

AURICULAR CONFESSION was next considered, which, said Mr. Sparry, is the worst feature in this system of abomination; the vice and wickedness in Europe and America, in the confessional, is appalling; if, said Mr. Sparry, the citizens of Philadelphia knew half the abominations that took place through the women confessing to the priests, they would be indicted to the Grand Jury. He then related an anecdote that occurred at the last lecture. A gentleman, a friend of his was walking behind two Irishmen (Catholics) who had been to the lecture. "Well what do you think of it," says one. "Well I don't know," he replied, "but I'm afraid, there is too much truth in it; I shall take care to look after my wife the next time she goes to confess."

THE WORSHIP OF IMAGES was commanded by the Council of Trent, as also the paying of adoration to the Relics of Martyrs, and Saints, and in a note of the Rheims Testament, the wood of the Holy Cross was worthy of being worshipped, and, said Mr. Sparry, there are pieces of the Crosses enough to make ten thousand crosses. The Rev. Gentleman here exhibited a scapular which, he said, was worn nearest the heart to keep away Devils, and to prevent persons from going to the bottom crossing the Atlantic; he then described what it consisted of. It was a dirty piece of muslin, sowed in the form of a bag, and it contained a scrap of Latin, and something else, but we could not distinctly say what; this, said Mr. Sparry, was sometimes called the Gospel, and no Romanist would go to bed, or on a journey without having this gospel with him. He then concluded by saying, that if the gentlemen that offered them the use of the Musical Fund Hall would now come forward and make the same offer, he would present such a mass of facts, as would astonish the people of this city, and lay bare the horrors of Popery.

FOREIGN.

FARTHER NEWS BY THE BRITANNIA.

The Britannia sailed from Liverpool on the evening of the 4th, and arrived in Boston harbor on the 22d, at 7 o'clock—bringing 28 days later news from England On the day after leaving England she broached to, stove her bulwarks, and broke her iron tiller short off. She has had a very rough passage, the weather having been boisterous in the extreme. She has made the passage in 17¼ days.

Lord Brougham, Melbourne, John Russel, Palmerston, Sir Robert Peel, and the Duke of Wellington, all made long speeches, either for or against the Royal Speech, on account of its having omitted any allusion to France; and in the course of their remarks entered fully into the merits of the Turco-Egyptain question and affairs of the Past.

Repeal, Chartism, the Revenue, the Boundary Question, Canada, and the war in India, not having been noticed in the speech, as well as only a mere allusion to the China war, a lengthened discussion took place in consequence.

The Journals from all parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland, notice the unusual severity of the winter and its lamentable effects upon the poor, who are in a state of extreme suffering.—Many persons have died from cold and famine in London, and verdicts have been rendered, "died from the want of the common necessaries of life!"

By the dreadful shipwreck of the Thames steamer, on her voyage from Dublin to London, on the 3d ult., it is ascertained that out of sixty-five passengers only four were saved.

Scott, the American diver, has met with an awful death. He had, for a long time, been in the habit of diving from the mast heads of ships into the Thames, and from the different London bridges. On the 12th ult. he announced an exhibition, and had a staging erected on Waterloo bridge.

To the top pole he fastened a rope, at one end of which he made a noose, in which he placed his head, as was his usual custom, to go through a mock execution. He performed the trick three times; but the third time the noose slipped, and the wretched man was hanged in earnest. Upwards of 10,000 persons were present at this exhibition.

The Paris papers have made a great noise about the dramatic censorship having stopped the representation of a melo-drama, reflecting on or ridiculing the Queen of England.

An unfortunate accident occurred at Boulogne on the 15th ultimo. The French steamer from London to Boulogne, not being able to enter the harbor on account of its being low tide, several persons undertook to go ashore in a boat with the mail bags, and among the rest an American named Webster, of Virginia; unfortunately the boat swamped, and Mr. Webster was drowned.

HOLLAND.—The terms of the treaty between France and Holland are now known. France receives colonial produce from Holland by the Rhine, which is favorable to the manufacturers of Alsace, as well as to the consumers of coffee and sugar, but very disastrous to Havre. The duties on Dutch cheese are also diminished. Holland, in turn, diminishes, by one half, her duties on French porcelain, paper-hangings, cutlery, lace, and silks. The duties on French wines and brandies are taken off. This is the most important concession.

RUSSIA.—A letter from Moscow states, that the British expedition against China had given a very unfavorable turn to the trade between China and Russia. The quantity of tea sent to Moscow diminished from 100,000 chests, the amount of the last year, to 40,000, as the Chinese can now only send their goods by land.—The export of Russian goods to China, chiefly cloth, had also greatly diminished.

LAWYERS.—We find in Dicken's last work, the "Old Curiosity Shop," the following sly hit at the lawyers.—"As doctors seldom take their own prescriptions, and divines do not always practice what they preach, so lawyer are shy of meddling with the law on their own account, knowing it to be an edged tool of uncertain application, very expensive in the working, and rather remarkable for its properties of close shaving, than for its always shaving the right person."

RAIL ROADS.—There are 3319 miles of rail-road in use in the United States, constructed at a cost of 6,000,000 dollars, and yielding an average of about 5¼ per cent; 1802 miles more are in progress of completion; and the whole number of miles projected, including finished, unfinished, and routs examined, is nearly 10,000.

THE AUTHOR.—It has been announced positively that the author of "Ten Thousand a Year," is Mr. Murray, son of Sir James Murray, of Dublin. He is said to write for fame, not money.

LAW OF DIVORCE IN NEW HAMPSHIRE. If a man becomes an habitual drunkard, and have a wife, she may leave him in three years, and marry again.

MAHOMET, THE IMPOSTER.

The tribe of the Koraschites held the first rank in Mecca. Mahomet, descended from a younger branch of this family, was born in the year 571, of the Christain æra. His parents dying almost as soon as he was born, Aboutaleb, his uncle on the father's side, brought him up. From his uncle he went to live with a shopkeeper in Mecca, and soon gained the confidence of his master. He having failed, Mahomet was sold to an Ishmælitish merchant, who sent him on his employ into Syria. There, while Mahomet was attending to the affairs of his employer, he had an opportunity to see, to study, and to compare the manner in which the Romans lived; their legislation government, manners, and chiefly their religion. In the country where Mahomet then was, the law and the gospel, or Judaism and Christianity, were blended together. He compared the two religions, and, struck with the great reputation of Moses and Jesus Christ, forms the project of becoming the author of a new religion, which might enlighten and polish his countrymen. He soon emancipates himself from slavery, enters into the employ of Cadigah, a rich widow, and marries her. His circumstances changed from poverty to opulence, he the more eagerly pursues his scheme, his marriage furnishes him with the necessary assistance, and he becomes the head of a new sect. To bring this to bear, he affects a solitary life, performs many acts of charity, retires sometimes into the desert, and returns with an air of astonishment on his countenance. By this conduct, he procures admirers, speaks of the revelations he was favored with, and brings over his wife to believe them to be true. The fame of Mahomet and his revelations soon spreads through Mecca; crowds go to hear the new prophet, and the number of his followers daily increases.

The fundamental doctrines of Mahomet's new religion, are these: to believe the unity of God; that he is eternal, infinite, wise and good, the creator of the world, the supporter and friend of man; to love, and pray to him seven times a day, to think continually of him, and to honor him by religious ceremonies. To observe the laws of society, which promote and secure our own and our neighbors happiness; to love all men and support the poor, and be merciful to all, not excepting that part of the animal creation which is useful to man; such are the doctrines Mahomet taught. He adapted the moral part of his religion to the sensual appetites of the Arabians. Living in a warm climate, the love of unlawful pleasure with the female sex, was their predominant passion. Mahomet allowed his followers the use of four wives, and of slaves as many as they chose. He, in quality of a prophet, allowed himself fifteen. Though barbarously intolerant, he took care not to discover this spirit at the commencement of his mission; knowing that inhumanity would render him odious and entirely frustrate his views.

Convinced that men need external signs to remind them of their duty, Mahomet instituted the particular ceremonies of circumcision, pilgrimage to Mecca, and frequent ablutions; and declared, that God bound the faithful to the performance of these. He acknowledged Abraham, Moses, and Jesus Christ, to have been great prophets, and the two first of whom had given laws, adapted only to the Jews; that the blessed Jesus, infinitely greater, wiser and more the object of God's love, had comprehended the whole earth in his mission; but that christians having become corrupted, God had chosen Mahomet his last prophet, to restore truth and virtue to the earth. To the faithful he promised those taken captive in war, and a paradise, that his sensual imagination had filled with all sorts of pleasures, particularly the enjoyment of beautiful women; a doctrine, which, with that of fatalism, was calculated to inspire his followers with an enthusiasm superior to dangers and death. In a word, Mahomet said that the angel Gabriel interpreted to him the will of God, brought these laws to him from heaven, and the book in which they were written.

This is the spirit of Mahomet's religion and the substance of the Alcoran. The Arabian imposter, to gain the affection of the virtuous, wisely incorporated Christian morality into his system; and to please the vulgar, always attached to superstition, he allowed many errors of their ancient worship still to remain. Indeed, the Alcoran abounds in confusion, absurdities, and contradictions, with innumerable religious, political, historical and chronological errors; but the poetry is sublime, and this work is esteemed the masterpiece, and model of the Arabian language.

The new prophet, however, found opposers; a formidable cabal set themselves against him; authority endeavored to bring to an account, and to punish him as a cheat and seditious person. Persecuted in Mecca, he flies to Medina,* where his fanaticism spread with amazing rapidity. The inhabitants of Medina soon become proselytes to his doctrine, proclaim him their chief, and acknowledge subjection to no other. He puts himself at the head of his followers, determined to shed the last drop of their blood in his cause; he marches to Mecca, which opens her gates, and submits to him as her sovereign.—From thence he traverses Arabia, reduces to his obedience the Arabian hordes, till then divided from, and independent of each other, and becomes their king and priest.

Having reduced all Arabia, Mahomet turns his arms against the Romans, defeats them, and takes from them the provinces they had been in possession of for several centuries. After having performed many wonderful exploits, he dies at Medina, leaving his country united by his religion, polished by his laws, and formidable to its neighbors. Finding himself dying, he convenes his friends, and recommends three things to be always observed by his followers: to be frequent in prayer, to extirpate idolatory from Arabia, and to bestow upon every proselyte, all the privileges of mussulmen.—This advice was respected as the command of heaven.—Spirit of General History by the Rev. Geo. Thomson.

*From Mahomet's flight, which happened A.D. 622, in the 44th year of his age, and 10th of his ministry, the Mahometans compute their time, and the æra is called in Arabic, Hegira, i. e. flight.

FROM MATAMORAS.—By the schooner Creole, arrived at New Orleans, advices from Matamoras, to the 27th ult. have been received. In that port and its vicinity perfect tranquility reigned. In the neigborhood of Saltillo, however, the inhabitants had been troubled by incursions of the Comanche Indians, who had stolen large amounts of property. It is stated that 10,000 horses and mules were driven away by the barbarians. The Indians, it appears, made a simultaneous attack on various sections of the interior, apparently with their whole force. This irruption had caused Gen. Arista to take measures for the general defence. All the states and departments invaded had been called on to furnish their quotas for the army.

The whole number of volunteers or drafted militia called for by Gen. Arista is 2,000; they are to assemble at the different rendezvous on or before the 1st of March, and it is believed that in one or two months the whole of the savages can be driven out of the inhabited part of Mexico. On the 1st of January, President Bustamente transmitted to Congress his annual message. He congratulates them that the relations between Mexico and the European and the American States, continue to be those of peace and amity. The claims of some of the citizens of the United States upon Mexico, are now about to be adjusted by the Commissioners of the two governments assembled in Washington, or otherwise by the arbitration of the King of Prussia. A new treaty is to be made with the government of the British Queen for the suppression of the slave trade.

RUMORED "ABSQUATULATION."—A rumor was current yesterday, that a heretofore highly respected carpenter of Kensington had "absquatulated" on Saturday last, with money to the amount of some twelve thousand dollars, which he contrived to raise by borrowing, in greater or less sums, from nearly every one, both rich and poor, and high and low, with whom he was acquainted. The said-to-be delinquent, has done an extensive business, and is well known in Philadelphia. Some of his journeymen are reported to be heavy sufferers by his absquatulation.—Phil. Chron.

MAPLE SUGAR.—The quantity of Maple Sugar made annually in the State of New Hampshire, is set down at 1,065,020 pounds. The Coos County Democrat remarks that in many of the new towns of the northern counties, so abundant is the supply, that no other sugar is used, while a large surplus is frequently carried to the nearest market and exchanged for other necessares of life.

UNIVERSITY OF ALABAMA.—The Rev. Stephen Olin, formerly a Professor in Franklin College, Georgia—then President of Randolph Macon College, and now President of the Wesleyan University of Connecticut, has been elected by the trustees of the University of Alabama, to the chair of English Literature, vacated by the death of the Rev. Horace S. Pratt.

NEW YORK STATE PRISON.—During the year ending 30th Sept. 1840, there were discharged from the State prison at Sing Sing, by expiration of sentence, 179 prisoners; of whom one was but 15 years of age, three were 16, and twenty-six were under 20 years old. During the same period, 19 were discharged by pardon.

ALIENS ENTITLED TO VOTE IN ILLINOIS. We learn from the Chicago Democrat, that "the Supreme Court of Illinois have decided in favor of the right of aliens to vote, and declared that the judges of elections had no right to ask the elector whether he was a foreigner or not."

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... MARCH 10, 1841.

☞The Protestant.—We received the No. of this paper for the 13th ultimo, which contains its last allusion to us, a few hours before we left home, on our visit to Mt. Vernon, since when, we have not had time to pay suitable respects to it until now. We feel it to be a duty we owe to ourself, and to the cause, to notice it once more, and then, if it be agreed, we will let the matter rest.

We will again state the difficulty between us and our "Contemporary," which is briefly this: the "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate" passed some strictures upon the doings of our late conference, &c., which we noticed in a style which we adjudged appropriate to the occasion. The Protestant, without the least provocation whatever,—for we did not at the time, nor at any former period, make any disrespectful allusions to it,—officiously interfered and stated to the Advocate, in substance, that our style was "coarse and rude," our manner "improper" and that it "decidedly disapproved" of the whole.

As we considered this uncalled for attack upon us, perfectly invidious; calculated, and probably designed to injure the character of our paper, we reproved the Protestant as we conceived its demerits required, and demanded of it, should it see cause to animadvert upon us, to insert our article in its columns. This demand, as a member of the church, we considered we had a right to make, and it was done to save us from misrepresentation which we had good reason to fear. But instead of complying with our requisition, in its number for January 23d, we are misrepresented in a style which would be discreditable to a two penny party political newspaper. Our article is represented as not being fit for its columns, and we as "quoting scripture" to prove that "christians had a right to abuse" each other. And such sentences as the following, are used in a way that the reader is left to apply them to us: "ebullitions of editorial wrath," "exhibitions of personal vanity," "where the argument is obscured in the foam and spatter of harsh words, and where the writer evidently desires to figure himself, and to show the peculiar force of his vocabulary powers," "because we did not froth, and foam, and rave," &c. This is a specimen of the beautiful, classical style of the article above alluded to, in which we consider ourself grossly misrepresented, all of which would have been avoided, if the Protestant had given our article, as we desired, upon which it animadverted, so that the reader might have seen for himself.

In our paper, of the 3d of February, we made some strictures on this article, in which we considered it a slander upon us. The Protestant of the 13th ultimo, replies again, and after repeated protestations of innocence, on its part, but keeping up the idea of "anger" and "wrath" on ours, concludes with the following eloquent paragraph:

"Alas! what a lesson upon human nature—whereby the young may learn and profit,—when the experience of fifty years, aided by the Grace of Piety for so long a portion of that period, has not quieted the asperities of our nature, nor entirely subdued the turbulence of those feelings, which operating unrestrained in the hearts of the ungodly, lead to wars and commotions, to strugglings and to blood."

That is, in other words, while the Protestant states itself to be in all this matter, innocent and blameless, this Recorder man is so full of "anger," "rage," "foam" and "wrath" that he would even push matters to "wars, commotions, and to blood."

Reader, you will recollect all this time there is nothing from us in the pages of the Protestant, but such garbled extracts and misrepresentations as suited the design of the writer, and not the least admission on his part of any thing wrong whatever. He studiously keeps out of view the ground of our complaint, so that none of his readers can have any idea of what the matter between us is. Indeed, there is more Jesuitical management of this case than we can believe an inexperienced young man capable of; especially as it not unfrequently happens, in the history of this world's affairs, that, while the puppets have played their part upon the stage, the managers of the wires have remained behind the curtain. Be this as it may in the present case, as the editor has agreed to father the precious bantlings, we shall give him the full benefit of this parentage.

The last article referred to in the Protestant, addresses us in the following language:

"Dear Brother: We are sorry that you seem to have misunderstood us from the beginning. We intended no such thing as you seem to attribute to us. Our feelings have always been those of a friend and co-worker. ☞We never dreamed of making an attack upon our 'brother.'"

Now, if the editor really be such a gourdy that he does not know, that, to charge a man who is not molesting him, with "impropriety," "coarseness" and "rudeness," is not "an attack upon his brother," we think it high time he would retire from the editorship on the score of incapacity. The reader will recollect that these remarks, of which we complain, were made under peculiarly aggravating circumstances. They were uttered in reference to our strictures upon an Episcopal Methodist editor; so that this act of the Protestant was putting weapons into the hands of a common opponent who he has since employed against us.

Then, to sum up the whole, the state of this question between the Protestant and us, is this: It officiously interfered between us and the Pittsburgh Advocate, and gratuitously, in substance, conceded to the Advocate that our treatment toward it was "coarse," "rude" and "improper." When we rebuked it for this interference, its reply to us, as we understand it, is one of the most disingenous specimens of treatment that we have ever met with from any editor political or religious. When we expressed our disapprobation of such treatment, its next reply was more sickening to us than any thing which had preceded, because of the ———— cant which distinguished it. Thus the matter stands, in our estimation, between us, at present. If the editor had at the out-set, made the least apology for his indiscretion, we would have generously met him more than half way. But he has seen cause, as we take it, to add insult to injury.—And the difficulty, from beginning to end, is all of his own seeking.

It may be thought by some of our readers that we pay more attention to this subject than its merits demand, and without a full knowledge of the facts there might be some apparent ground for this opinion. But it will be recollected by many, and we now inform all, that, some four or five years since, we were attacked by two or three anonymous writers in this very Protestant, who misrepresented and slandered us in its pages.—We held, at the time, the weapons of defence and chastisement in our hands, but for the sake of the cause we forbore to use them. We were congratulated by a score or two of brethren, who applauded our forbearance. This forbearance and these gratulations were all right and proper at the time, but it is to be hoped our friends will not require us always to submit to the invidious and personal allusions of that paper without resistance.

There is a principle of resentment, placed, by the Creator of our beings, in the breast of every man and every animal, which is designed to protect us from insult or injury. This principle, when aroused, even in the old hen, makes her a formidable antagonist, both to man and beast, as she repels their encroaches upon her brood.—The very knowledge of the existence of this principle imposes a powerful restraint upon mankind, because, there is a general dread of arousing it. The legitimate province of this passion, is to repel injuries on our own part, or that of the public. But when we have resisted an assailant so as to secure our own interests, or the public weal, we should then desist; for, if we follow a person further, merely to gratify this passion of resentment, when no good end would be accomplished thereby, it then degenerates into revenge, and "vengeance is mine and I will repay, saith the Lord." Wrath is the highest disposition to revenge. When our Lord commands us to be angry, in short, and sin not, He simply means that we must confine our resentments to the repelling of injuries and then stop. We must see that the sun never, either "sets" or shines upon our wrath.

Having restrained our resentments so long under the assaults of the Protestant, and assaults from some other quarters, the inference has probably been made that we were destitute of this principle, and, of course, that insults might be given with impunity. Now, all we have meant to do in this controversy, is to teach the Baltimore editor that we are a man of like passions. Indeed, he appears, at present, to be satisfied on this subject, but complains that the process of tuition has been rather severe. He lets on now to be very sorry that the difficulty between us ever happened. Of this, we have little doubt, for these are matters we pretty well understand, but then, judging from his actions, we are afraid his sorrow is like that of the negro when caught stealing the bacon. His master ejaculated, "Jim, are you not sorry for this?" "No, massa, not sorry me took de meat, but sorry me caught at it."

We come now to a point that we consider of some importance to the church, but which we should not here have introduced if it were not in self defence. It will be recollected by some, that, at the last General Conference, after the North and South had disputed for some time about the principles on which the "church paper" was to be conducted, without any prospect of compromising their question, that we made a motion to indefinitely postpone the whole subject. On this motion, we gave it as our opinion, and offered reasons to sustain it, that the existence of such a paper which should be considered as the "official and general organ of the church," was incompatible with such a liberal government as we were proposing to establish.—The proposition seeming to meet with considerable favor from the conference, the ultras on both sides became alarmed,—(for it seems to be taken for granted, by many, that we cannot prosper without some kind of a bishop, and if we cannot have one in the form of a general superintendent, we must have him in the character of "a general church paper,")—they agreed to compromise their difficulty if we would withdraw our motion. We accordingly did so with a view to accommodate the matter.

When we engaged in this ecclesiastical enterprize, our first impressions were that it would be best for us to give all our support to one paper, and that paper already existed in Baltimore.—We were very reluctant to yield our assent to the getting up of a western periodical. But we noticed in the progress of time that the "church paper" often arrogated a high degree of importance to itself, and frequently set on needless airs. These facts called our mind to a train of reflection, and induced us to make a series of observations, which have thoroughly convinced us, years gone by, that an "official general church organ" is a dangerous instrument in such an experiment at ecclesiastical liberty, as we are attempting. But, as we are opposed to be perpetually introducing new and exciting topics of discussion before the people, we have heretofore said little on the subject, except as above stated. And it is not our intention at present, to do more than call the attention of the church to the question, so they may reflect upon it hereafter.

The Presbyterians, who understand rational and well-defined ecclesiastical liberty, as well as any church in the land, have no general paper. Such an organ is not necessary only to sustain the controlling acts of a general superintendency. Such a superintendency our people have determined not to have, yet the "organ" is constantly assuming to exercise it, as in our case.—In any controversy in the church, see what a fatal advantage the party who controls the "organ" would have over their opponents. Let our matter answer for an illustration; the official makes an unprovoked attack upon us, charging us, in substance, with "impropriety," "rudeness and coarseness." We sent up our answer to these charges, and asked to be permitted to be heard, in the columns of the church paper, in our own defence, but the request is denied us, and we treated so as to make the impression, upon the uninformed reader, that we were little better than a common blackguard. Indeed, we have little doubt, if this "Church Organ" were to be permitted, unrivalled, to dictate the reading for our fellowship, half a century, but it would raise up a bishop in Baltimore with a pope in him as large as an ox.

The two principal arguments in favor of a "general church paper," are—first, "as we have no general superintendency to unite our fellowship, that this paper would be a kind of bond of union to the church, and would tend to mould the whole into similar habits, &c.: secondly, it will be a medium through which our official acts can be communicated to the whole body."

Now, let us inquire how this paper answers the objects here proposed. In the first place it has done but little and can do but little towards assimilating the habits and feelings of the different sections over which our fellowship is spread. This, owing to the stubborn nature of habit, it cannot accomplish, without wielding a despotism which would be ruinous. The very foundation of this conflict between it and us, is, because of an ill-judged attempt on the part of the "church paper" to conform our feelings and modes of expression to its standard.—In this land of democracy, we all feel disposed to serve God, either by singing long or short metre tunes, as we fancy, and will suffer no authority to dictate to us in such particulars. The church organ, in this case, in attempting to assimulate or conform our habits and feelings to its standard, becomes an apple of discord. Instead of being a bond of union it is a source of contention. A little sober reflection, on the general principles of human nature, and upon our condition and feelings as a church, ought to satisfy us of the correctness of this position without any facts to illustrate it.

But secondly, "it will be a medium by which our official acts can be communicated to the whole church." How the "Official Organ" answers this proposition will be seen by a statement of facts. The last General Conference refused to pass a resolution to prohibit the discussion of slavery in the church paper, and elected the Rev. T. H. Stockton editor thereof. The publishing committee, of Baltimore, who have a supervision over this paper, passed the resolution to exclude from its pages the discussion of the slave question which the General Conference rejected. So, let Annual Conferences pass what action they please on this subject, their "official" acts can find no place in the "Official Organ" of the church. When we were attacked, in its columns, we forwarded our reply, but we could not get a hearing in the "general paper." Br. Benton's golden era is not a greater humbug, in the estimation of the Whigs, than the idea that such a paper is an "official" or "general organ" of the church.

We are not to be understood, however, as favoring the introduction of the exciting subject of slavery into our church papers; there are so many in the land dedicated to that particular enterprise, that there is no special necessity for diverting these organs from the express object of their establishment. But look at the principle; a church, which has said so much against the Episcopal Methodists for suppressing free investigation, to have her principal organ gagged with a resolution excluding from its columns the investigation of an important moral question, is rather a burlesque on consistency, and discreditable to us as a people.

When this resolution was passed, by the publishing committee, the Rev. T. H. Stockton, who was chosen editor by the General Conference, as above stated, resigned his connection with the paper, and the present incumbent took a situation from which an honorable and high minded man retired from principle; of course we ought not to have expected any better treatment from such a mind, than we have received.—Meantime we hold the highest respect for the moral integrity of the man, who, blushing at such inconsistency, walked away from the humiliating act with his "feet on Chimborazo and his head among the stars." With such integrity to principle we would cheerfully divide the last cent of patronage we had in the world; and we call on the church to sustain this brother in his present enterprise, for such moral worth is worthy of all encouragement.

We see, then, that the "Official Organ" is not likely to answer the expectations of its friends. It is more likely to prove a "curse than a blessing." The church might just as well knock the thing on the brain first as last; for it will always be vaporing round with this kind of importance, to the annoyance of the public tranquility, until it be killed off. We do not want it dispatched, because we desire its patronage, for it is very little in our way, but we wish the church rid of its vexations. Let it be consigned to the tomb of the Capulets, and let the Maryland Conference get up a paper; this would answer every purpose to the church the other does, and not being dubbed with the distinguishing and bedazzling epithets,—"Church Paper," "Official Organ," &c., &c., and, feeling itself to be but an equal, would not be disposed to swagger into importance and set on airs over its neighbors.

We are satisfied that such are the diversified feelings and habits of the different divisions of this nation, that the organ which is suited to one section is entirely unsuited to another. Our community will never be accommodated only with sectional papers. And any attempt to force upon the Methodist Protestant Church a periodical containing the elements of popery must prove a failure. For a large portion of the church are not satisfied to confine their opposition to papacy among their neighbors, but are disposed to attack it wherever it rears its head, whether at home or abroad. The folly of attempting to make one periodical suit every section of this extensive country, has been fairly demonstrated in the case of the Episcopal Methodists. With one of the strongest and most despotic executives the sun ever shown upon, they have failed, in a persevering effort, to make the New York Advocate answer the purpose of the whole church, and have had to yield to the necessity of sectional papers.

In conclusion; the editor of the Protestant, in his number dated 13th ult., expresses "a hope that we will hereafter live in love." It would afford us great pleasure if we could comply with this proposition, but, under the circumstances, it will be impossible, from the plain fact, that he has exhibited towards us no qualities of mind but such as excite the opposite feelings. So soon as he satisfies us, by the proper fruits, that he is in possession of such qualities as command esteem, we shall take much delight in rendering him the proper regard. We can assure Br. Reese that we have no disposition to do any thing more in this matter than act upon the defensive; and when he ceases to bring new charges against us, or to represent us in a false light to his readers, we will let the subject drop.

We claim the right to have this article inserted in the columns of the Protestant, as our defence against its attacks upon us. We have been grossly misrepresented, in its columns, to hundreds we cannot reach through any other medium; and if that paper has any regard at all for its character, it will give us a hearing. If it will insert this article we will risk our reputation with it.

Our Br. must not think us so full of "wrath" and "rage" as he indicates. The heat of our blood has been allayed by the frosts and snows of fifty winters, and it has to pass rather more than an ordinary distance to get from the heart to the brain, so that it has ample time to cool.—Hoping and believing that this "partial ill" will be productive of "general good," we bid the editor adieu for the present.

"WANTED.—A Journeyman Printer, is wanted immediately at this office. A young man who has worked two or three years at the business, and can bring recommendations that he has left his employer honorably, would be preferred."

The above we clipped from an exchange paper, in which it was inserted first under the editorial head. It is to such advertisements—for so we must call it—that the reckless of the craft of journeymen printers are indebted for their ruin. The idea of asking for a "young man who has served two or three years at the business," under the head of "Journeyman Printer wanted," is preposterous. No man can be a journeyman under five or six years close application to the business, and not then, unless he has been very assiduous to business. The art of printing is not to be learned in two or three years. We know of some in this city who left their employers 'honorably' for such an inducement as the above, and after working a score of years cannot now claim the title of journeyman printer, a calling honorable to any man, and one that the first men in the land, having elevated themselves by assiduity to important stations, now glory in.

We set our faces against all such advertisements as the above—they are calculated only to ruin the young and forever blast their future prospects. A lad at sixteen or seventeen, when he steps into such an office as the one from which it was issued, at once imagines himself a man—a journeyman printer—perhaps, because he can set a stick full, he thinks himself a first rate workman; but how disappointed he is when he enters into an office in a city—those who have experienced the sensation, or witnessed their embarrassment are the best judges. We recommend to all young men entering upon apprenticeship, to be in point of law and fact an apprentice, then there is a bond between master and boy that makes it imperative for both to perform their duty, and the result is a good workman and an honorable man.—Phila. Chron.

Gen. Harrison's Cabinet.—The National Intelligencer of the 13th ult., announces, probably, from the terms in which it is done, upon information derived from the President elect himself, the following individuals, as those who will be called upon to fill seats in the new Cabinet.

Secretary of State—Daniel Webster, of Massachusetts.

Secretary of the Treasury—Thomas Ewing, of Ohio.

Secretary of War—John Bell, of Tennessee.

Secretary of the Navy—George E. Badger, of North Carolina.

Postmaster General—Francis Granger, of New York.

Attorney General—J. J. Crittenden, of Kentucky.

It will thus be seen that one half of the Cabinet will be composed of gentlemen from free States, and one half from slave States. The States, also are equally divided in this respect, there being thirteen free and thirteen slave States; but the free States have forty-two electoral votes more than the slave States. Before the resignation of Mr. Kendall, Mr. Van Buren's Cabinet consisted of four from slave and two from free States, but it now consists of three from each, being equally divided between free and slave States.

The Register, published at Eaton, Preble county, Ohio., states that counterfeit notes of the Ohio Life Insurance and Trust Co. are in circulation in that neighborhood. The denomination is notes of $5, letter B. payable to O. Lane or bearer, dated Cincinnati, Nov. 9. 1836, (some of the notes, however, being differently dated,) J. S. Perkins, Cashier, M. T. Williams, President. As the paper is represented to be flimsy—the engraving pale and defective, and the filling up and signatures badly done, and all in the same hand writing, it is doubtful whether they got into a very extensive circulation.

Effective.—The authorities of Cincinnati have recently enriched the city treasury to the amount of some $3,000, by vigorously enforcing the law which subjects unlicensed traffickers in ardent spirits to fines. The business has been pretty much stopped by the means.

State Board of Equalization.—This board closed its deliberations early last week. Robert Mitchell, was the member of the Board from this senatorial district; S. A. Barker, from Perry, Morgan and Washington; John Yontz, from Licking. From a table published in the Statesman of the 26th ult., we select the following equalization of Muskingum and other counties, compared with the average value per acre of lands as equalized in 1835.

Muskingum,	2.99.9	4.35.6
Licking,	3.98.5	5.05.5
Coshocton,	2.43.1	3.01.6
Guernsey,	1.76.1	1.75.4
Morgan,	1.33.2	2.29.2
Perry,	2.12.2	2.99.4

The whole number of acres of land in this State subject to taxation, is 19,637,272. When the State Equalization of 1835, was made the No. of acres was, 17,028,859. The average value per acre, as at present equalized, is about three dollars forty four cents, making the aggregate value of all the farming lands in the State, $67,493,303. The grand total valuation of all real estate, including city and town property, is set down at $99,154,745; this is an increase on the valuation of 1835, of $26,221,863.—Zanesville Gazette.

From Harrisburgh.—The most important measures acted upon since last week, has of course, been the resolutions introduced by Mr. Spackman, in the Senate, the purport of which would be to suspend the act of last session in regard to the banks, for the term of forty days, i. e. the penalties attached to a suspension of specie payments would be enforced during that period. On the 19th the Senate passed these resolutions on a final reading. They embrace the United States Bank with all the others.

On the day following, the resolutions above named were reported to the House. A debate ensued on the question of naming the day for the consideration of them, and Tuesday week was finally fixed upon by a vote of 49 to 36.

European Agency.—Will some of the Pittsburgh editors inform us whether Mr. Stuart intends taking his accustomed tour in Europe this year? If so, at what time he will start from Pittsburgh.—Steubenville Herald.

Mr. Jas. Stranaghan and David King esq., are the Agents for James Stuart, European agent in Pittsburgh, and attend promptly to all business. We presume Mr. Stuart will visit Europe the ensuing spring, though it is not necessary, he having agents in almost every town in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and on the Continent. Mr. Stuart is married, and now has his principal office in Philadelphia.—Harris.

A Master of 50 Languages.—Mr. Burritt, the learned blacksmith, as we learn from the Northampton Courier, recently delivered a lecture before the Lyceum, which for literary beauty and performance, astonished all who heard him. Says the Republican of that place: "His subject glowed and sparkled on his anvil. Mr. Burritt is about 32 years of age, of modest, prepossessing manners and appearance. He still continues his manual labor daily, and the study of foreign languages. He has already become master of more than fifty languages."

Gen. Harrison.—The General remained in Richmond on Monday. He was present at a dinner at a Log Cabin on the preceding Saturday, where, in response to a sentiment of the company, he made a speech which afforded great satisfaction. Gov. Gilmer, who was present, also responded to a complimentary sentiment. Tuesday was fixed for his departure for the old mansions of the Harrison family on James River, to spend a few days with his relatives, before assuming the responsible duties of the station to which he has been elevated.

The Mendicant's Victim.—The little son of Chester Bradley, of Dansville, near Rochester, mentioned a few weeks ago as having been frightened into fits by seeing the strolling beggar who pretends to be incapacitated from labor by the St. Vitus' dance, died on the 13th Feb. of that disease. His age was nine years.

Elections to 27th Congress.—During 1840, fourteen states elected Representatives to the 27th Congress, numbering in all, 144. Of this number, 84 are classed as friends to Gen. Harrison, and 60 are supposed to be opposed to him.

Levis.—A letter dated Galveston, 7th inst. says: Mr. Levis, late cashier of the Schuylkill Bank, has been staying here for the last month. His son, a young man about twenty years of age, accompanies his father.

Later from China.—The New York Journal of Commerce yesterday publishes later news from the Celestial Empire; but it contains nothing of particular moment to our readers.

Elected.—The Hon. Rufus Chote, was on Tuesday elected Senator in Congress from the State of Massachusetts, to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Webster.

Settled.—Messrs. Pickens and Stanley, the fractious members of the House of Representatives at Washington, have amicable settled their late difference.

Washington refusing a Crown.—The following letter has recently been brought to light by Mr. Sparks. It was written in reply to a proposition made to Washington at the conclusion of the war, by certain officers of his army, to accept a crown. The following sentiments show the republican spirit that animated the man.

"Sir—With a mixture of great surprise and astonishment, I have read with attention the sentiments you have submitted to my perusal. Be assured, sir, no occurrence in the course of the war has given me more painful sensation than your information of there being such ideas existing in the army as you express, and I must view with abhorrence, and reprehend with severity. For the present the communication of them will rest in my own bosom, unless some further agitation of the matter shall make a disclosure necessary.

"I am much at loss to conceive what part of my conduct could have given encouragement to an address, which, to me, seems big with the greatest mischief that can befal my country. If I am not deceived in the knowledge of myself, you could not have found a person to whom your schemes are more disagreeable.

"Let me conjure you, then, if you have any regard for your country, concern for yourself or posterity, or respect for me, to banish these thoughts from your minds, and never communicate as from yourself, or any one else, a sentiment of the like nature. I am, &c.

George Washington."

Mob at Cleveland.—A most outrageous & disgraceful riot occurred at Cleveland a few days or rather nights ago. A peaceable and quiet citizen was dragged from his house, wantonly beaten and left for dead. The mob destroyed nearly every thing belonging to him, with the house in which he lived we believe. We have mislaid the paper containing an account of the riot. After the mob left him he came to himself, and in attempting to escape was discovered and beaten the second time. And for what? Of what was he guilty? He was a black man! The mob afterwards proceeded to the residence of other blacks but they escaped. Three of the rioters were arrested the next day and fined $50 each for a breach of the city ordinance. They were subsequently required to enter bail for their appearance before the court of common pleas, in default of which they were committed we believe. The name of one is Van Valkenburg, famous in the annals of crime in Cleveland, the other we have forgotten.—Medina Constitutionalist.

Don't look into the Letters of the Ladies.—Joseph Bond, Baker, of Wilmington, Mass. was on Tuesday arrested and held to bail in 800 dollars in the U. S. Court on a charge of having stolen from the post office in that town a letter addressed to widow Sally Chandler. There was no pretence that the letter contained any money; but the whole thing appeared to be a gossipping transaction. When the letter arrived, it would seem that there was considerable anxiety to know who wrote it. It was subsequently missing; and the defendant, who is of respectable appearance, was accused by the post master. It appeared that Bond had been a witness in a divorce case, in which a daughter of Mrs. Chandler was a party, and Mrs. Chandler had written to New York to get information respecting his character—the letter containing which information he is charged with having stolen.

Mount Vernon.—The celebrated Admiral Vernon was commander of a fleet of six ships, which attacked and destroyed Porto Bello. During the engagement the Admiral saw in one of the ships, a young man who always appeared to be employed where his services were most needed. In the thickest of the fight and in the most exposed part of the vessel was this youth seen performing his duty with cheerfulness and courage. After the battle was over Admiral Vernon sent a captain to call the young man. He came and received the praises and thanks of his commander, for his fidelity and boldness. Before parting the Admiral asked his name, it was George Washington.

When the Father of his country purchased his estate upon the banks of the Potomac, he named it, in honor of his early commander, Mount Vernon.

The Cold Plague.—It pains us to learn from the Knoxville Register of the 6th February, that the fatal epidemic which lately made its appearance in West Tennessee, is gradually extending itself, and has created much alarm in the vicinity of Henry county. It is supposed to be the disease known some years since in that section of country as the "Cold Plague." Its ravages are well remembered in several of the upper counties of East Tennessee, and the western counties of North Carolina.

Senator Elected.—The Legislature of Kentucky adjourned on Wednesday evening the 18th ultimo. James T. Morehead was elected on that day Senator in Congress for that State, for six years, from the fourth of March inst., in the place of Mr. Crittenden, resigned, all the other candidates previously named being withdrawn, and J. R. Underwood being nominated, the final vote was—for Morehead, 72—for Underwood, 61. Both the above gentlemen are Whigs.

IE WEATHER.—We have had considerable which has continued to fall and melt since rday last, making it wet and disagreeable over head and under foot. Monday evening, this article was written, the ground was covered with snow.

E OHIO SENATE.—This body had the bill e protection of religious worship up again, e 27th ultimo, and after lugging it round le laid it down on the table once more.

ADICALISM.—The last New England Chris- Advocate inquires: "What is radicalism?" a scare-crow—a term of reproach in the h of every appendage of Methodist episco- , to alarm and put on their guard their un- ecting and confiding people against all those are aiding to apply the lever to overturn the piritual power of that spiritual despotism.

'STERN FARMER AND GARDINER.—The Feb- r number of this work is received. We are ed at the progressive improvement of this ultural paper; it bids the fairest of any thing ave seen, of the production of the West, to an impression on the public. It is a thly pamphlet of 24 pages, at one dollar per m, in advance. Get it farmers! Address, Hooper and T. Affleck, publishers, Cincin- Ohio.

ADICAL.—We get hold of no northern Meth- paper which is not fairly in the "collar," does not take great pains to satisfy its rea- it is no "radical." It seems this term is with great Jesuitical success, at present, in north and east. It used to be so in this re- , but the public here have long since come understanding of this matter. If the term ical" has any distinctive idea attached to t present, in this quarter, it means, honest .

ORTHERN ADVOCATE.—This is a weekly pa- just commenced at "Auburn and Geneva, Y." under the patronage of the Episcopal thodists, but got up on individual responsi- y. We have read the manifesto of this pa- but what its character is to be we cannot from this, because it is as vague as the hic oracle. The editor takes pains to in- his readers that he is no "radical," but, yet, re he is done with the subject, leaves it btful whether he is not what is so styled in Methodistical sense of that term. Br. Cooke, he Pittsburgh Advocate, seems to speak well , and thinks it will succeed to the patronage he conference paper lately discontinued at urn.

CEDING METHODISTS.—There are now at the h the "Reformed Methodists," the "Wes- n Methodists," the "Protestant Metho- s," and we believe several independent Me- dist churches, all dispersed through the same on, the essential principles of each being the e, and all probably driven from the old pa- t stock by the exercise of arbitrary power. roposal was made by the New York Luminary ently, for an effort to form a union of these eral segregations. The proposition seems to t with considerable favor from the parties cerned. The last Luminary says the "Wes- n Methodists" suggest the first or second k in May next as a suitable time to hold a vention in view of this object; the organ of "Reformed Methodists" mentions the last of gust, and Rev. George Storrs the 21st April. y all means should those Methodists be uni- , who have either left or been cast from the d ship," on account of her arbitrary manage- t. One hundred men united can do more promote any enterprize than one thousand ting forth individual efforts. The proposition only has our assent, but our warmest sympa- es and most ardent prayers, for the plain rea- that we believe to carry it into effect would o the advancement of liberal principles, a se which lays nearer to our heart than any er.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, March 10.—Flour $3; wheat 50 cents.

BALTIMORE, February 27.—Flour—How- ard street flour continues to decline in price, and from the views of holders freely expressed, taken in connection with the condition of for- eign and domestic markets, it is difficult to form an opinion at what point it will stop. The sales this week from stores amount to about 2000 bbls. at 4,37½, for good brands, taken chiefly for the Liverpool market, and are now going on board. The stocks are not large, but sufficiently so, as circumstances exist; and yesterday the article was not in demand at any price. The car and wagon rate is 4,25 per bbl. We repeat our re- marks of last week in reference to City Mills: the stocks are light, and so is the demand; hold- ers are willing to sell at 4,50 cash, 4,62½ at 60 days, without interest.

Fruit.—Moderate sales only to the trade con- tinue to be made of Bunch Raisins at 2,25 per box. Considerable parcels of Dry Peaches at 2,00, and Dried Apples at 1,00 per bushel; in smaller lots the rates are 12½ per cent. higher.

Provisions.—We hear of no transactions in Beef, which continues to be held at quotations. Mess, 12,50; No. 1, 10,50; and Prime, 8,50.— Pork hangs heavy; and from the large and in- creasing stock, has further given way, and we find it difficult to quote a price, from the differ- ence that exists between the asking and selling rates of holders; it is represented to us by pur- chasers, that Mess has been offered to them at 13,00, and Prime 11,50 per bbl. Mess of last year's packing has been sold recently at the for- mer price, cash; and old Mess at 11,25 per bbl. 6 mos. About 20,000 lbs. bulk, assorted, for smoking, received via New Orleans, have been sold this week at an average of about 6 cts. per lb. Sales of prime Baltimore cured and smoked Bacon, to the extent of 40 a 50,000 lbs. have been made at 10 a 10½ cts. for Hams; 8 a 8¼ for Sides: and 7½ for Shoulders. Assorted Western, 7½ cts. Lard remains much as noticed last week, 8 cts. 4 mos. for prime No. 1, at which a lot of 425 kegs sold on Wednesday; and a parcel of about 70 bbls. this week at 7 cts.

Western Transportation.—As we intimated in our last, Wagon Freights have advanced, and we now quote the rates 2,00 per 100 lbs. to either Wheeling or Pittsburgh.

The Home Market.—The transactions in Beef Cattle on Monday were rather light, in conse- quence of drovers having advanced their rates. About 200 head were offered, and 80 sold at 7a 8,00; and subsequently 20 to 30 more at 7,50 per 100 lbs. Hogs are not in active request, and a few only have been disposed of this week: the prices were 5,75 a 5,97½ and some holders wanted 6,00.—Lyford.

PITTSBURGH, February 26.—Business con- tinues extremely dull, and our merchants, man- ufacturers and mechanics almost literally at a stand, not knowing what to do, and many orders received are not filled, as few are willing to buy or credit out more goods or make any sales of im- portance, without knowing what our Legislature will do, as nothing but a wise and prompt legisla- tive action and an early tariff can save our coun- try from a constant drain of specie to pay for foreign goods. Par money scarce and exchange high.

Flour—Is coming in plenty at 2,87½, and from stores 3 to 3,25 per bbl.

Wheat—50; Rye 31 a 33; Barley 40; Oats 18 cts per bushel.

Small notes of neighboring States were at a premium of 1 to 3 per cent. in our city on Sat- urday last, and will no doubt be so again to-day, unless some provision be made in the mean time by our Legislature to supplant them.—Phil. Cou.

The trial of Dr. Eldridge will again commence on Monday next.—ib.

THE QUEEN AND HER HUSBAND.—The allow- ance of the British Parliament for the support of the Queen, her husband, and his horse and hounds amounts to over two millions of dollars a year, or $6000 a day.

Cincinnati now has 36 newspapers and other periodicals. This is well for the "Queen city of the west."

The Legislature of Delaware has suspended that provision of the bank charters of that State which made them liable to twelve per cent. in- terest on refusual to pay their notes in specie.

Col. Andrew Jackson Hutchings, aged 28, an adopted son of the "old chieftain" and educated in his family, died at the residence of the late General Coffee, in Alabama, on the 15th inst., of pulmonary consumption.

MORE OF THE MISSING.—The cashier of the Chicopee Bank, Springfield, suddenly and unex- pectedly resigned his situation a few day ago.— The Directors on examining his accounts, discov- ed that he was a defaulter to the amount of $13,- 000. It does appear that the Legislatures of the different States must affix penalties to such de- falcations that will be more likely to prevent their occurrence.

MORE IRRITATING CORRESPONDENCE.—A letter from Washington to the New York Herald says,—

"During the last three days, the subject of the Caroline, McLeod, and the recent riotous events in Lockport, have been the subject of a bitter and angry correspond- ence between Mr. Fox and Mr. Forsyth. A Queen's messenger arrived recently from Upper Canada, with important des- patches from Governor Arthur to Mr. Fox. On these despatches Mr. Fox re-opened the correspondence, and has made new and menacing demands upon our government to interfere and protect McLeod from the legal authorities of Lockport, New York. He has gone over the recent riotous events and indulged in a strain of acrimony and harshness, which has rekindled a fresh flame in the breast of our Secretary.— There is reason to believe that the organ- ization of a war army of 40,000 men, re- gulars and militia, in Canada, is intended to enforce the demand of the British government for the delivery of McLeod, nor is there the slightest hope to think that the disputed territoy in Maine will ever be given up by England."

FROM HARRISBURGH.—In another col- umn will be found an abstract of the bill introduced into the Legislature by Mr. Hinchman of this city. It provides for Small notes, and legalizes the suspension until 1843. Its provisions are of the right kind, and we trust most sincerely that it may speedily become a law. It has been made the order of the day for Thursday next, but will not in all proba- bility be finally acted upon for at least a fortnight. We hope for the best. The Governor cannot, as it strikes us, in the present critical condition of the State, but sanction some relief measure.—Bick- nell, 2d inst.

THE BEGGAR AND THE CASTOR OIL.— The Portland Argus relates an amusing case, in which a beggar in that city receiv- ed what he asked for, but not what he wished for.

A few days ago, a full grown, able-bo- died man presented himself at the door of one of our citizens, and solicited the lady of the house to give him two cents. She remarked, that she had none and inquired what he wanted with them. "To buy a dose of castor oil, marm," was the reply, "for I feel dreadful sick."

The lady had no cents, but she had plenty of oil and she prepared him a stiff dose. He tried hard to get excused from taking it; but she was firm; he was a sick man, and it must go down. The loafer found he was caught in his own trap; and, where he meant to have a glass of liquor, he got a dose of physic; but, ma- king a virtue of necessity, and with sun- dry wry faces, he gulped it down and cleared. He'll not call at that house again, we dare say.

CAUGHT AT LAST.—A pettifogging law- yer, named Cornelius W. Qerhune, who has been "up" before the New York po- lice at least a dozen times on as many char- ges of swindling poor clients, and hereto- fore escaped that punishment he has long and richly merited, is at last caught in his own trap. He was fully committed on Friday last to stand his trial for fraudent- ly obtaining money from a man named Peter Multee, of that city.

A late French paper says that the 200 slaves & young Arabs found on board the ship taken by the Preloyante, and carried into the island of Bourbon, were in a perfect state of nakedness and starvation, so that the magistrates of the Island were forced to clothe as well as feed them. The Arabs were free men, whom the pirates had car- ried by force, and reduced to slavery.

LO, THE POOR INDIAN.—The Sac and Fox Indians complained to Gov. Lucas, of Iowa, on the 28th ult., that the U.S. Agent for paying their annuities, (Major Pitcher) offered them impracticable bank notes, and that he went to St. Louis for specie but did not return.

WABASH TREATY.—The Senate has ra- tified, with some slight amendments, the late treaty made at the forks of the Wabash River, in the State of Indiana, with the Miami Indians. 500,000 acres becomes extinguished, and they will remove west at an early day.

ANOTHER SIGN.—A letter from Halifax to the Madisonian, under date of the 19th ult. says: Several regiments have been ordered to New Brunswick, and we are informed that orders have been sent from the home Government to the West In- dies, to embark all the regular troops there for this place; the Islands to be gar- risoned by the militia.

PREPARATION.—The Emperor of Rus- sia is preparing an army of 150,000 men and 420 pieces of cannon, to be ready in the month of March.

APPOINTED.—It is said that James Booth, Esq., of New Castle, has been appointed to the Chief Justiceship of the State of Del- eware.

FLOUR.—The price of this article at Augusta, Geo., is $6,50 per bbl.

The friends of Mr. Van Buren in Philadelphia have tendered a dinner to him as he passes through the city after the 4th of March, which he has declined.

M. THIERS OF FRANCE.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

This distinguished man is, unquestiona- bly, the most adroit and able statesman of all those who have taken part in the ad- ministration of France since the death of Talleyrand. He was born in Marseilles, where his father followed the trade of a saddler. Through the interest of some influential person, he was admitted to a free place in the Lyceum in his native town. In this institution he made such proficiency in his studies that these gen- tlemen determined to send him to the law school at Aix, in Provence. He there gave evidence of those brilliant talents which have since acquired for him universal celebrity. A prize was proposed by the faculty for the best essay upon a certain subject, and Thier's ambition determined to win it. His manuscript was sent in to the committee, by whom its superior mer- it was acknowledged. They were, howev- er, unwilling to adjudge the prize to Thiers, because of his opposition to the res- toration of the Bourbons, which he had made the subject of a discourse to his fel- low students. He, however, gained a sig- nal victory over his enemies, a year af- ter, when he won the prize at Paris for an essay upon the same subject, which was his original one, with some altera- tions.

Thiers was first brought into public life by the celebrated orator Manuel, who had him selected as editor of the liberal journal, the "Constitutionel." In this of- fice he distinguished himself for the vig- or and manliness of his style. During his editorial career, he wrote his famous history of the French Revolution. In the year 1828, he established, in connec- tion with the well-known Armand Carrel, the "National," the most effective and important of the French Opposition jour- nals until the Revolution of 1830. He took an active part in the overthrow of the Polignac ministry and the dethrone- ment of Charles X. He was subsequently appointed Minister of the Interior, but, in consequence of some misunderstanding with his colleagues, he retired from pub lic life, and devoted himself exclusively to literature. Like Lord Brougham, he found leisure to write upon history and philosophy. His active mind, however, was not satisfied with the exclusive pur- suit of literature, and he again entered the political arena as Deputy, and contri- butor to the political journals against the Mole administration. Upon this change he was appointed President of the Coun- cil. The Egyptian Question having pro- duced a diversity of opinion between Lou- is Phillippe and himself, he consequently resigned, and is now leading a violent op- position to his successor, M. Guizot.

M. Thiers, like Mirabeau, may have the distinction of being one of the ugliest men of his time. He is small, meagre, and badly formed, but agreeable in his intercourse with society. He is now forty- three years of age, and being a most rigid disciple of the diatectic school, his physi- cal and intellectual energies may be long preserved.

AN IMPORTANT BANK DECISION.—In a case recently before the Court of Common Pleas in Dauphin county, Judge Parsons decided "the true rule of policy, and of of law, to be: That when bank notes are current at that place in which they are received without objection, and paid in good faith, without any knowledge that the bank had failed; or where, from the facts it could not be inferred that it had. although at the time, the notes in the place where the bank is located, are not current but utterly worthless, still, in law it is a valid payment of a pre-existing debt, and when so received, and the debt or judgment satisfied, it is a payment, and the original debt is relinquished."

The case has been removed to the Su- preme Court for revision.—Bicknell.

ABOLITION.—The Baptist Convention of Alabama recently resolved to withhold all appropriations to certain missionary societies, until they give satisfactory ev- idence that they are or are not, either di- rectly or indirectly, concerned in anti- slavery movements; and in case of their refusal, the convention recommends the establishmeut of a southern Board of Missions, entirely distinct from the north- ern Baptists.

We are sorry to learn, says the Nation- al Intelligencer, that Jeremiah Leary, the coachman of the Hon. John Q. Adams, who was seriously injured on the 18th ult. in the Capitol yard, as noticed in Friday's paper, died at the residence of Mr. Adams that night about 7 o'clock, to the great regret of his distinguished employer, by whom the unfortunate sufferer was re- spected for his fidelity and excellent con- duct.

THE U. S. BANK CASE.—In the Court of Common Pleas on Saturday Judge Ran- dall gave his opinion in the case of the Citations, upon the Bank of the U. S., that the proceedings had were correct, that the tenth day from the issuing of the writ, it being a judicial day, was the pro- per day of return. On Wednesday the point of the applicability of the late law to this bank will be argued.

FOR WASHINGTON.—The number of people that are pouring into the Capitol, to witness the inauguration, is beyond all precedent, and if some of them do not find it difficult to procure accommodations we are much mistaken.

The Britannia brought over 20,000 let- ters and 40 bushels of newspapers.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP PRESIDENT.

SIX DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Late news from China—Illness of the Duke of Wellington—Debate on the McLeod case in Parliament—Passage of the Paris Fortification Bill, &c., &c.

The Steam-Ship, President, Captain Roberts, left Liverpool on the 10th ult., and arrived at New York at 3 o'clock, 3d inst., at which hour she was boarded by a pilot. At 10 o'clock she passed the foot of Wall street on her way to her berth. She experienced a boisterous pas- sage.

The papers brought by her are from Liverpool to the 10th, London to the 9th and Paris to the 8th ultimo. The news is both important and interesting.

Among the list of passengers we notice Wm. Ogilby, H. B. M. Consul for North and South Carolina, bearer of despatches to Mr. Fox, the British Minister at Wash- ington.

There has been much warm discussion in the British papers and parliament, on the subject of the Caroline affair. This was to be expected. We venture to predict, however, that the matters in dispute be- tween the two countries will be amicably settled—because it is for their national interest that there should be no war.

The posture of English affairs in Chi- na, is deemed, by the whole of the British press to be gloomy and unsatisfactory.

The London Times of the 8th ult. says —"Then what has been the fruit of El- liott's famous expedition, sent forth and maintained at an expense of near £600,- 000 sterling, to make an example of the so-called swindlers of Canton, and teach them to swallow poison with a better grace hereafter."

The Liverpool Mail is ridiculously wrathy about the McLeod or Caroline cor- respondence between Fox and Forsyth.

The London Times of the 6th ult., ut- ters a good deal of violent twaddle about the McLeod affair, in the course of which it predicts that the "matter will come to whipping."

In the House of Commons, in the even- ing of the 8th, Lord Stanley, pursuant to notice, put some questions to her Majes- ty's Government, on the subject of the detention of Mr. McLeod by the authori- ties of the State of New York. The no- ble lord entered into a detailed statement of all the circumstances connected with the destruction of the Caroline. He then passed on to the diplomatic correspon- dence to which that event led between the British and American Governments, as far as that correspondence has been laid before the public.

Mr. Hume made a statement that the American Government had repeatedly urged the British Government, to say whether the latter adopted the responsi- bility of the seizure of the Caroline; but no answer had ever been obtained. The American Government, therefore, look upon the transaction as an attack of free- booters, unsanctioned by any government, and had proceeded accordingly.

Lord Palmerston said that the Ameri- can government had instructed their Am- bassador in London, not to press for an answer on that subject. They had them- selves, in the first instance, treated the occurrence as a government transaction, and until the persons engaged in it were disavowed by their own government, the American government could not change their ground.

Mr. O'Connell expressed regret for the course taken by Mr. Hume. The life of Mr. McLeod was at stake,—and there ought to be ananimity to save the gen- tleman's life.

In the House of Lords on the same even- ing, the Earl of Mountchasel introduced the same subject to the notice of their Lordships in a belligerant speech, to which Viscount Melbourne made an elo- quent reply. He said he would not an- swer the question which the noble earl had put to him, without entering, on the present occasion, into all the facts and arguments which the noble earl had pre- ferred on the subject, &c., &c.

The christening of the Princess Roy- al is postponed until Tuesday the 16th inst. His majesty, the King of the Bel- gians, is not expected to arrive from Os- tend until Wednesday.

The Gazette of Friday night contained an order in council, directing that in all the "prayers, liturgies, and collects for the royal family, the words 'the Prince Albert' be inserted after the words 'Ade- laide, the Queen Dowager.'"

Chamberwell old Church was destroy- ed by fire on the 6th ult.

American Stocks, London, Feb. 5.— Alabama £ sterling fives 78; Indiana 5s 67; do. £ sterling, 75; Illinois sixes 75; Kentucky do. 84 a 85; Louisiana £ ster- ling fives 87; Maryland do. 82; Massa- chusetts fives 86½; do. £ sterling 100; New York fives 85½; Ohio 6s 90½ a 91 ex- div; Pennsylvania fives 84; South Caro- lina do. 89 a 90; Tennessee sixes 81 a 82 Virginia do. 89 a 90; New York city fives 83½. United States Bank shares £11.5s a 12 a 11.10s; do. debenture 100.

In France, the fortification bill having been carried with some amendments, the French Minister, says Bell's Weekly Messenger, of the 6th ult. may now be considered secure. Marshal Soult is in Paris, and the Duke of Wellington is in England, holding his own opinions on some points, but a staunch friend to the King and his government. M. Guizot, also, bears a like resemblance to Lord Melbourne; a kind of moderate liberal- ism, with good temper and good manners have given him some weight with people of all parties.

The French authorities at Havre have released the Steam-ship James Watt, of whose detention we gave an account the other day. The Court at Rouen, to which the English owners appealed decided against the right to seize and detain her.

China.—The news from China is to Nov. 3, and was not considered satisfac- tory. It is yet doubtful whether the ce- lestials have not been playing a double game with Admiral Elliott—and the Times gravely intimates that certain stars and stripes from the West may have a finger in the pie before it is disposed of.

By the overland mail news has been received that Lin had been deprived of all authority, but he had petitioned the Emperor and appealed to his mercy; pleading his good intentions, but admitting his inability. He declares he is unjustly accused of robbing the English of opium since he has in his possession Captain Elliott's petition entreating him to receive it.

The British squadron was still at Chu- san, where sickness was making fearful ravages; out of 3,650 men landed there only 2,036 were fit for duty.

The plague had broken out in three villages in the Delta, and, it was suspected in Rosetta also; it continued in Alexandria but had not increased there.

India.—From India the accounts are more favorable to British policy. Anoth- er victory had been gained over the Be- lochees in Scinde, some five hundred of them being killed. Confident hopes were entertained that both Scinde and Affghan- istan would be tranquilized in a few months.

AN EXTENSIVE LOCOMOTIVE ESTABLISH- MENT.—Mr. Norris, at his extensive loco- motive establishment at Bush Hill, em- ploys at present 300 hands. He can fur- nish a new locomotive to order in less than a month. In 1839 he built 48 engines —in 1840, he built 44—and in the pres- ent year, he expects to build 50. He has built 139 engines altogether, of which there were 16 for the British and Glou- cester Railway, Eng; 3 Berlin and Pots- dam R. R; 3 Berlin and Stettin R. R; 10 Berlin and Frankfort; 3 Emperor Fer- dinand R. R., at Vienna; 1 Mocel Royal Museum, Berlin; 1 do. Emperor of Rus- sia; the rest were for domestic use.

THE PRESIDENT ELECT.—General Har- rison left James river on Friday, and proceeded to Washington via City Point, Petersburgh, and Richmond. The Pres- ident elect is accompanied by the Vice President elect and Col. Todd, of Cincin- nati. The party expect to reach Wash- ington city this evening, March 1st.

Business Department.

Will our subscribers and agents be so accom- modating as to send us good money and not the notes of suspicious banks. We have been bored rather severely in this way latterly. You recol- lect, no doubt, what we said would be likely to be the result of this practice, a month or two since.

Mr. EDITOR: As the winter is well nigh past, and but little has been known of the President of the Indiana Conference operating on the District, I would desire, through the medium of the Recorder, respectfully to solicit him to fur- nish you with an arrangement of his appoint- ments through the District for publication, that his "whereabouts" may be known; as there are many brethren desirous of knowing it.

Yours, &c. A RADICAL.

Br. S. Wilson, near Adelphia, Ohio, wishes Br. Scott to inform him through our paper when he will be in Jackson, as he wishes to see him to make arrangements, if possible, to have his place taken into the circuit.

The post master, at Pittsburgh, informs us that W. J. Miller refuses to take his paper from the office. Will Br. Brown please see to this?

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

THE JEWS.

There is nothing in the history of nations so unaccountable on human principles, as the preservation of the Jews. Scattered among all nations—where are they not?—in what part of the habitable globe are not the Jews familiarly known? They have wandered every where and are still every where wanderers. Banished from city to city, and from country to country, they have had no secure dwelling. All nations have united to oppress them; all means have been employed to exterminate them. Robbed of property—bereaved of children—buried in the dungeons of the Inquisition or burned at the stake of deplorable bigotry. No people ever suffered the hundreth part of their calamities, and still they live. Their national identity is unbroken; they have resisted all affinities, and may be traced unchanged in the most confused admixtures of human beings, having never been assimilated to any other nation. They exist a distinct people, waiting the voice that shall call again the outcast of Israel and the dispersed of Judea.

Meanwhile, where are the nations by whom the Jews were led into captivity? Where the Assyrian, the Chaldean? Their names live only on the map of buried ages. Where is the empire of ancient Egypt? the Macedonians destroyed it. Where are they of Macedon? the Roman sword subdued their kingdom and their posterity mingled with the Greeks and Turks. Where is the empire of ancient Rome? the last conqueror of the Jews and the proud destroyer of Jerusalem? the Goths rolled a turbed flood over its pride, and another people inhabit the "eternal city." The Goths, where are they? the Jews, where are they not? They beheld the glory of Egypt, and of Babylon, and of Nineveh, they were in mature age at the birth of Alexander and the Cesars. Mighty kingdoms have arisen and perished since they began to be scattered. Now they traverse the ruins of all—the same people as when they left Judea; a monument of the days of Moses and the Pharoahs, as unchanged as the Pyramids of Memphis which they are reputed to have built. Such being the notorious peculiarities of that wonderful race, it may not be amiss to inquire a little into their moral condition. Their disbelief of the gospel is supposed, by many, to render them liable to the penalty of eternal death without any exception.

That the Old Testament is sufficient to conduct men to eternal life is evident from the testimony which it bears of itself, as well as from the grand design of revelation,—for, it would be a reflection on infinite wisdom, to suppose it capable of communicating a revelation which necessarily failed of its principal object, that of making men wise unto salvation. Nor, is it less certain that some of the most eminent saints of the Most High flourished under the Jewish dispensation. As a subsequent dispensation, however, has been given, enforced by the penalty of eternal death, it may be thought this is sufficient, at once, to determine the future condition of the Jews. The position in which christianity stands to modern Jews is very different from what it was in the days of Christ and His apostles. The absolute sufficiency of the writings of Moses and the impiety of daring to add to these lively oracles, are among the first principles instilled into the infant mind of a Jew. He is taught from infancy to repose the utmost confidence in a religion which even christians confess to be of divine origin. Respect for parental authority, veneration for an illustrious ancestry, deference to age and rank, combine with the fear of innovation, and an attachment to Moses and the prophets, to keep them ignorant of the New Testament, and consequently estranged from the principal means of conviction. The portion of revelation which the Jews profess, already contains whatever is absolutely essential to be known in order to obtain eternal life. Jews and Christians affirming unanimously that it was for upwards of 2000 years, the only authentic revelation of the will of heaven. A Jew, therefore, cannot doubt of its competence to make him wise unto salvation. He is necessarily ignorant of the New Testament, which never engaged his attention, because of an exclusive attachment to an authentic revelation of an earlier date. Supposing him from these, and similar causes, to remain all his life time ignorant of the christian system, have we any authority for asserting that he cannot possibly be the subject of divine favor, possessed as he is of an instrument of sanctification which the Holy Spirit, for ages, condescended to employ. A new revelation can make no alteration in the INTRINSIC nature of that which precedes it, and if the Hebrew scriptures were ever sufficient to make men wise unto salvation, why should we doubt of their still being competent for that purpose?

The question before us is, strictly speaking, a question de jure, rather than de facto. It does not so properly relate to the fact whether there are any Jews in a state of salvation, as to the possibility of it. That christian Demosthenese, the late Rev. Robert Hall, whose giant mind shed additional light upon every department of inquiry, was assured by a learned Jew, extensively acquainted with his own nation, that numbers of their people spend whole nights, preceding their great festivals, in their synagogues, prostrate in tears and supplications, praying for the sins of their people and for the appearance of their long-expected Messiah.—Who will dare to say, that He who delighteth in mercy, would despise the prayer of such penitents because they wanted that explicit knowledge of Christ which was for ages withheld from the Jewish church?

The Jews in Poland, says the Rev'd. Mr. Thorpe, frequently assemble in their synagogues for fasting, humiliation and united supplication to the God of their fathers, with their faces turned towards Jerusalem and the ruins of their Temple, under a general persuasion that the days of their tedious captivity are hastening to a close, and that their God will very speedily turn again the captivity of Zion. In every part of the Eastern world the earnest expectation of the speedy coming of the Messiah is as intense as that which preceded His first advent. Thirty years since, scarcely 300 Jews were to be found in Palestine, but at this day there are upwards of 20,000 and their number is annually increasing. Indeed, the whole nation, especially in the East, seems to be at this moment, while I am writing, on the move towards the Holy Land. All these things speak aloud, as if the voice of God were telling us that that prophecy is now being fulfilled which says, that after the children of Israel have been for many days without a king, without a sacrifice, without a priest, without an ephod and without a teraphim, afterward shall they seek the Lord their God and David their king, and shall fear the Lord and His goodness in the later days.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

NO. V.

ON THE PITTSBURGH PUZZLE.

Mr. Editor: It is my opinion that we Ohio folks are either gaining ground, or we need teaching. This must certainly be the opinion of the wise men of the east, for the following reasons: 1. They have understood, probably, by some means or other, that we are coming out of the kinks, and hence have sent us this interesting puzzle by way of examination. 2. And, I suppose, if the above be correct, that after we have answered to their satisfaction, that they intend to affix to our names the honorable title of M. A. What encouragement!! Fellow-students, press forward with gigantic strides! Look aloft, ye lubbers! Popularity and fame awaits you.

But it may be that they, the wise men, may be influenced by the latter opinion, viz: that we need teaching; and I suppose, they have taken the method of teaching us by puzzles, thro' the Recorder, by way of charity.

I was once in a shoemaker's shop in Pittsburgh and twice on the wharf, and I judged them to be quite a charitable people. They must either be "wise in their own conceit," or they wish to become teachers, or they are spending their time for naught. Now these may all be the fact. But we wish to inform the puzzler, that if he would have us thrive, he must give us food that answers our condition. True, things of this kind, composed on or from the names of brave men, may excite our attention for a while, and cause us to peruse the pages of history, but we want food for the SOUL. Food that will create within us a hungering and thirsting after the BIBLE; (the best of all books;) after its Author; after the verification of its promises. The Bible—the Bible, is the food we need—is the food we want. Will some of the fathers, or some of the mighties of Pittsburgh send us some of this food as cheerfully and as cheap as they have sent us their puzzles?

After making the above remarks, and in order to accommodate the puzzler this time, we will now try and give an explanation to his mighty puzzle.

THE GENEROUS MASK.

A TALE IMITATED FROM THE GERMAN.

A beautiful lady of Bordeaux, mourned with the sincerest grief for her husband, who, as she heard by report, had perished by shipwreck. A numerous crowd of suiters, attracted by her youth and charms, only waited the confirmation of this rumor to solicit her hand. She behaved towards them with the utmost decency and propriety; yet, as she wished to make a return for the politeness they showed her, she made a splendid entertainment for them on one of the concluding days of the carnival. While the company were engaged in play, a stranger masked and habited as a genius, entered, and sat down to play with the lady. He lost, demanded his revenge, and lost again. This adverse fortune attended him ten or twelve times successively, because he adroitly managed the dice in such a manner, that the chance was continually against him. Other players then wished to try their luck with him, but the experiment did not turn to their advantage. The lady again resumed her place and won an immense sum, which the mask lost with a good humor and gaiety that astonished the spectators. Some persons observed loud enough to be heard, that this was not playing, but lavishly throwing away one's money; on which, raising his voice, he said he was the demon of riches, which he valued not except so far as it was in his power to bestow them on that lady; and immediately to prove the truth of his words, he produced several bags of gold, and others filled with diamonds and different kinds of precious stones: offering to stake them, one single throw against any thing of the most trivial value, she might please to propose. The lady, startled and embarrassed by this declaration, now refused to play any more; and the company knew not what to think of this occurrence, when an old lady present observed that he must certainly be the devil; and that his riches, his appearance, his discourse and his dexterity of play, all sufficiently showed that he was. The stranger overhearing this, profited by the hint. He assumed the air and style of a magician, which could be known only to the lady; spoke several foreign languages, performed many tricks, and concluded by declaring that he had come to demand a certain person in the company, who had given herself to him, and who, he protested, belonged to him; asserting, at the same time, that he would take her to himself, and never leave her more, in defiance of every obstacle.

All eyes were now on the lady, who knew not what to think of this adventure; the women trembled, the men smiled, and the genius continued to excite the perplexity and admiration of the company. This extraordinary scene lasted so long, that some grave personages at last arrived who interrogated the demon, and were on the point of exorcising him.

The mask, however, turned every thing into ridicule with so much wit, that he had the laughers on his side. At length when he found it was no longer time for raillery, he took off his mask, which immediately, on the denouement of his extraordinary entertainment, by exciting an exclamation from the mistress of the house. In the generous stranger she recognized her husband; who having been in Spain, had gone from thence to Peru, where he made an immense fortune and returned laden with riches. He had learned on his arrival, that his lady was to give an entertainment, a masquerade ball to some particular friends. An opportunity so favorable to disguise, inspired him with a wish to introduce himself without being known, and he had chosen the most extravagant dress, he could meet with. The whole company, which in a great measure, consisted of relations and friends, congratulated him on his return, and willingly resigned to him his amiable lady whom he had very justly claimed as his own.

BROTHER JONATHAN'S WIFE'S ADVICE TO HER DAUGHTER.

ON THE DAY OF HER MARRIAGE.

Now, Polly, as you are about to leave us, a few words seem appropriate to the occasion. Although I regret the separation, yet I am pleased that your prospects are good. You must not think that all before you are Elysian fields. Toil, care and trouble, are the companions of frail human nature. Old connexions will be dissolved by distance, time and death. New ones are formed. Every thing pertaining to this life is on the change.

A well cultivated mind, united with a pleasant, easy disposition, is the greatest accomplishment in a lady. I have endeavored from the first to the present time to bring you up in such a manner as to form you for future usefulness in society. Woman was never made merely to see and be seen; but to fill an important space in the great chain in nature, planed and formed by the Almighty Parent of the Universe. You have been educated in habits of industry, frugality, economy and neatness, and in these you have not disappointed me.

It is for the man to provide, and for the wife to take care and see that every thing within her circle of movement, is done in order and season; therefore let method and order be considered important. A place for every thing and every thing in time, are good family mottos.

A thorough knowledge of every kind of business appropriate to the kitchen, is indispensable, for without such knowledge a lady is incapable of the management of her own business, and is liable to imposition by her servants every day. But in those things you have been instructed.

You will be mistress of your house, and observe the rules in which you have been educated. You will endeavor, above all things, to make your fireside the most agreeable place for the man of your choice. Pleasantry and a happy disposition will ever be considered necessary to this important end—but a foolish fondness is disgusting to all. Let reason and common sense ever guide—these, aided by a pleasant, friendly disposition render life happy; and without these it is not desirable. Remember your cousin Eliza. She married with the highest prospects; but, from a petulant, peevish, complaining disposition and negligence, every thing went wrong and her home became a place of disquietude to her husband. To avoid this, he sought a place to pass away vacant time, where, associated with those more wicked than himself, he contracted the habit of intemperance, and all was lost—and poor Eliza was thrown on the charity of her friends.

Be pleasant and obliging to your neighbors—ready to grant assistance when necessary. Be careful of their characters, and do not readily believe an ill report.—Throw the mantle of charity over their failings, knowing that we are human and liable to err. Abhor a tattler, and give no place to the reports of such. However strong a provocation may be, never contend for the last word.

Let your Bible show that it is used.—Give no place to novels in your library. Let history, biography and travels, be read, when time and opportunity admit—without interfering with the important duties of the family Be not ignorant of the events of the time being, therefore, read some journal of the day.

As to friends who may call on you—never be confused or in a hurry: treat them with hospitality and politeness, and endeavor to make them happy in their own way. Never tease them to do this or that which they do not prefer. True politeness consists in an easy and pleasant deportment, and making our friends easy, and permitting them to enjoy themselves in that way which is most pleasing to them.

Speak with deliberation. The other sex tell us that "the female tongue is never tired;" be it so: let it be regulated by reason.

At the close of the week, if possible, let all your work, for the time be done; so that on Sunday you may improve your time in such a manner as will be appropriate to the day, and never, extraordinaries excepted, let your seat be vacant at church.

As to dress; decency is becoming to all; but extravagance opens a door to want; follow the fashion of the day as far as decency and good sense will approve, but avoid singularity. Be not troubled for what you have not; be thankful for, and take care of what you have. A Leghorn hat loaded with flowers, will not cure the head-ache, nor a gold watch prevent the consumption.—American Farmer.

FROM WASHINGTON.

SCENE BETWEEN J. Q. ADAMS AND H. A. WISE.

Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce.

Washington, Feb. 4th.

Mr. John Q. Adams having obtained the floor, made a most extraordinary harangue. He was listened to with much interest, and it would seem that his remarks will bring upon him much censure from some quarters. I did not hear the first part of his speech, but I am told that his object, from the beginning, was to give his reasons why he should not support Mr. Henry A. Wise as a leader of the House of Representatives under General Harrison's administration. It was a queer subject, and it was treated in a manner equally remarkable.

In the first place, as I am told, he protested against the discussion of this and that question here, Tariff, Bank, &c.; in advance of the recommendation of the President. He read from the Constitution that clause which provides that 'the President shall, from time to time, recommend such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.' Until this was done, it was idle, in his opinion, for the House to debate questions of policy not brought before them for their action.

He referred to Mr. Wise's remarks as dictatoral to the new President and to the House, and strongly expressed his dissent from his views. That member assumed to be a supporter of General Harrison, and to state what his policy ought to be. He disagreed entirely from him as to the course of policy that General Harrison would pursue and ought to pursue.

In the course of Mr. A's remarks, he adverted to some prominent principles advanced in the House by Mr. Wise, and expressed his dissent from them. One was duelling; another was slave-overseeing; and the third, nullification.

Mr. Adams sent to the chair a newspaper with the remarks of Mr. Wise on the controversy between Cost Johnson and Duncan, wherein Mr. Wise says, 'there will be no fight.' Mr. Adams commented on this, and represented Mr. Wise as lamenting that the duel law had been passed, and that there would be no fighting.

Mr. Wise and Mr. Johnson both interrupted Mr. Adams and called him to order. Mr. Adams was sustained by the chair, and went on. With the leave, he said in the most scornful manner, of the House and professed duellists, he would proceed in his remarks. He did proceed, and in a manner that defies description.—The outpourings of sarcasm on the individuals whom he wished to reach, was as copious as it was bitter. The manner of the speaker, as well as his venomous and stinging words, told, through every sentence, as he went along.

He was resolved, he said, to bring to the notice of the committee and of the country the subject of duelling, at all hazards, and he would not be put down nor dictated to, by the duellists. He insisted that some Southern men were in the habit of brow-beating the Northern men, because they, the Southern men, were supported by their constituents in the practice of duelling, while the Northern men were not. He said this was a matter for the House and for the country to look at—it concerned the independence of the Northern members, and the freedom of speech on that floor. If the Southern men were permitted to menace us with the pistol, whenever we dissented from them, there was an end to free deliberation in this Hall. It must be decreed by public sentiment, as well as by law, that duelling here should not be tolerated. He said, he hoped to see no more duel murders in this nation. I cannot, said he, shoot a man through the heart, and then shed tears over his fate. The constituents of the gentleman applauded his duelling, and required it of him, as the gentleman had stated in a public letter. But his (Mr. Adams') constituents would not justify him in fighting a duel.

Mr. Wise several times explained, in the course of this attack, and with great force. As to the last idea, he explained that his constituents were opposed to duelling, and that they had often begged him to avoid it. When he fought, it was against their wish, and he might add, his own.

Mr. Adams also attacked Mr. Wise as to his course on abolition petitions, and dwelt with great emphasis on it. His remarks were stronger on this point—the suppression of petitions, than I ever heard from him.

Finally, he came to what he considered Mr. Wise's nullification, and exulted in the fact that he had sustained the Administration in its course on that subject.

Mr. Adams declared that he would not support such principles. Mr. Wise, he said, had raised a tri-colored standard, and called on the House to follow him; one color was black, the emblem of slavery; another was red, the color of murder; and the third was of pale, and death-like hue, representing nullification. This standard he (Mr. Adams) would not follow.

But it would be idle for me to attempt even to allude to Mr. A's points. The speech surpasses any thing that the imagination can form, not only in regard to personal invective, but to originality of views on public questions.

"I've got in my element again," as the fish said when he was put into the pot to be boiled.

2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, generally in the schools of New England, other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior in all the requisites called for in such a work to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see the land relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we have little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe that this book and the preceding have been highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow our books of this description."—*Charleston C.) FRIENDS.

BY MINERVA MOORE.

id all the varied scenes of life, hat'ere of pain, what'ere of strife, hat'ere to bitterness may 'tend,
save me from a treacherous friend!
rather live in penury's cot, rget the world and be forgot:
r from society and drear,
an have a friend that's not sincere.
rather dig or beg my bread, with wild roots and herbs be fed;
d ne'er be vexed with golden dust,
an have a friend I cannot trust.
rather far my life resign, darkness in some dismal mine;
shut out from the light of day,
an have a friend that would betray.
ould not dwell in tents of ease,

A PLURALITY OF CHRISTIAN SECTS.

ction 2. "The party prejudice excited, the concomitant evils of religious bigotry, ed by dividing the church!" Great plau- appears in the face of this objection.—e readily confess that, if this objection be unded, great weight is contained therein. hat on earth is more obnoxious to the re- palate and pernicious to the health of the piritual, than the numerous and bitter gate but too often found flowing in some streets and lanes of the city of Zion! We truth to say, that we heartily join our rs to deplore every unhallowed feeling and word and action among the followers of mb. And rather than utter a sentence, syllable, to increase the evils among ildren of God, may our tongue cleave to f of our mouth, our voice in silence die; lsied be our right arm rather than write ame any unholy passion among professors religion of the meek and lowly Saviour.— n is rather to build up than destroy. We en agree with our objectors in the end, we differ in the manner. Upon reflection ears to us that this plausible objection is und. Probably it will so appear to the from the following observations. (1.) Up- eful examination, the evils complained of ot to be a necessary consequence of a plu- of denominations. If it were so, the force objection would be granted. But it is gly otherwise. And herein we detect one f the fallacy before us. For it is not the nce of sentiment itself which produces the ties complained of in the objection; for ould the complaint be both inevitable and ble, in the present life at least, and this ectors themselves will reject. But the real of sectarian jealousies, party bickerings, lovely tempers among the professors of re- appears to be pride of opinion, and an attachment to party interest! And if so, ils may be remedied, and different denom- ns retain their organized identity. And en is our recommendation—cure the dis- but do not destroy the body. (2.) With eory, agrees our experience, and we doubt at of others. Yes, the kindness the wri- these Nos. has received from other denom- ns, could not be exceeded by our own.— eart melts with grateful emotions at the brance of the most extreme kindness re- in time of the greatest need, from belov- thern and sisters of the Baptist church.— s long as life shall last will their names balmed in thankful remembrance. While declarations are gladly penned, the tear of ionate recollection involuntarily flows, and art blesses those dear friends whose names thhold. And the time would fail us to tell ppy seasons and joyful hours, spent with ters and members of the Presbyterian, Con- cional and Methodist Episcopal Churches, ther different branches of our common Fa- family, so that we feel in our inmost soul tful demonstration of the truth of the po- assumed—that christian friendship and nce of sentiment, (aye, and differency of nination too) are not necessarily inimical. But our objectors themselves are not free the evils of which they so sadly complain g sectarians. With great sorrow and re- nce be it spoken, that so far from it, as a al thing, so far as our opportunities and vations extend, they really are among the ibigoted. And not only so, but their prom- peculiarity appears to be, great prejudice tle things. Suppose we give a specimen of f the most liberal. A good brother, and a ster, whose heart was touched with sympa- t the thought of all unimmersed christians ; forever lost, with a wonderful and ingen- stretch of charity, invented a theory to save Pedo Baptists from the bottomless pit.— pray, what was that new theory? say some. shall hear. It was this: Granting to all unimmersed members of the different churches, who were otherwise pious and obedient, a fatal existence here below. Respirative existence, in a spiritual sense, he deemed impossible, without being "born of water." Now, passing over the difficulty, how that charitable theory could afford much encouragement to expect a safe accouchment and a life of joy above, is it not amusing to see these liberalists, on merely cold water, (and only one use of that,) raised to all the size and strength of manhood? While all their Pedo Baptist brethren, who have used water too, and use all the other means of grace, cannot even breathe below! Is not this saying with a witness, "Stand by thyself, come not near to me, for I am holier than thou." And what does the Almighty say of such? "These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day." Is. 65: 5. But if this passage be too strong, take one from the New Testament, Rom. 2: 21—23. "Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? Thou that abhorest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege? Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonorest thou God?"

(4.) Another fallacy apparent in the objection is, that it assumes the sentiment, that prejudice, &c., would not live in the association, were all the different sects merged into one!—Now, so far from that being the case, we opine the very opposite would be the natural result. For thus it appears to us: It would be like sending a proud, unbelieving and fashionable American to France to cure him of these evils, and teach him the faith and humility of Christ. Or a man beset with the sin of falsehood, recommend him to emigrate to Crete, to cure him of lying—to advise the libidinous to lodge in a bordel to acquire habits of chastity—and the tippler to keep a grog shop to make him a sober man! For, with the little brief authority with which some ecclesiastics are clothed, and with all the check of other churches, ministers can now persecute and expel worthy members from their societies on account of mere difference of opinion, "with all the sangfroid that a butcher takes the life of a lamb," what would be the course and the consequence were all the different denominations of christians amalgamated into one immense mammoth church? How soon would new fires be kindled in Smithfield, and the holy inquisition set up in the land of our pilgrim fathers! Brethren, ponder these things in your minds and hearts.

Objection 3. "Human legislation!" This is a prominent, and frequently regarded as a very formidable, objection. But we esteem it not unanswerable. That some churches have egregiously erred in their legislative matters—that they have assembled and exercised authority in direct contravention of the law of God, and the right of their fellow men, and repugnant to the feelings of the brotherhood of Christ, is both admitted and lamented. And under the excited disgust of ecclesiastical tyranny, it is no marvel that many good meaning brethren have ran to the opposite extreme and decried all human authority, to enact even a few bye-laws for the regulation of religious society. The candid attention of those objecting brethren is invited to the following observations. (1.) Not all human forms of government are forbidden, and consequently, not all are sinful. Now for the proof. In that interesting and instructive colloquy between the mother of Zebedee's children and our Saviour, Matt. 20: 20—28, it is readily granted that all unrighteous and tyrannical forms of church polity are not emphatically and expressly forbidden. Hear what the Saviour says in reply to the proud application of the mother—that her two sons might sit, not humbly at the feet of Jesus, but haughtily be exalted to the right and left hand of the son of God. Part of the reply only need be given. "Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you." Here, most unquestionably, all those forms of government which exclude the rights of the people—the laity—are positively prohibited by the Great Head of the church; whether antocracy, limited monarchy, or aristocracy, or a compound of any or all of these, to the exclusion of the voice of the church. But where is the promised proof of your position? some may inquire. Answer, it is very notable that only certain forms are forbidden, and not all human government. "It shall not be SO," says the Saviour. Now, so far from all forms of human polity being prohibited, it should seem that other forms of government are not only not forbidden, but impliedly sanctioned. As clear, therefore, as antocracy, &c, are antiscriptural and wrong, so sure is a wholesome republican form scriptural and right. (2.) And with this view agrees the following didactic addendum, verses 27, 28: "And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant. Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister," &c. Collate with this passage, Matt. 23: 8, &c. "But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren," &c. And we are furnished with the grand elementary principle of true and righteous church polity. So far, therefore, from all human rule being contrary to the scriptures, we are, in fact, furnished with the foundation upon which to erect, in some form, a democratic edifice; unless, indeed, we associate with the figure of a family, the idea of anarchy and confusion, and with the relation of a brotherhood, under obligation to no man, but at perfect liberty to do what is right in his own eyes. (3.) Agreeably with these views, we find the first exclesiastical council both in composition and conduct. See Acts, 15. Upon which a few brief notes will suffice. This conference is of fundamental importance to Protesaants in general, and Methodist Protestants in particular. For, (1.) as Dr. Clarke has observed, James and not Peter was chairman, v. 13. So that the doctrine of Peter's supremacy is hereby confuted.

(2.) Laymen as well as ministers were present, and acted conjointly with them, v. 22. Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, &c. (3.) Subjects both of doctrine and discipline were discussed and decided upon, vs., 5, 9, 20, 22, 29. (4.) That notwithstanding they were holy men, and had the spirit of God with them, yet they evidently exercised their own judging faculties upon the subjects brought before them. Hence, v. 28, it is said, "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things." After this last observation, it would seem unnecessary to notice an objection, raised by some, against the proof drawn from this chapter; but some may desire it. It is about the last we should have looked for. It is this: 'But the council here was apostolic!' When we heard this objection, some time since, we were not a little amused. For, if we cite the Fathers or church history for proof, then the ready answer is, aye, but that is not Scripture—is not apostolic, and if we quote from the living oracles themselves, then the objection is, it is apostolic! Is not this "blowing hot and cold" with a witness? It reminds one of Lorenzo Dow's "iron bedstead," with ye can and ye cant, ye shall and ye shan't, &c. (4.) Minor matters are obviously left with the "church at large," in the parlance of the poet, to be managed and modified at their discretion, according to the circumstances of the times, place, &c. Such, for instance, as where, when, and how often to preach. It is most undeniably clear that God has enjoined on the ministry the duty of proclaiming the word of life; but the time, place, &c., He has not specified, but left for the decision of human wisdom; but to exercise these faculties upon the subjects here specified, is, in some sense, to legislate: therefore, all human legislation is not sinful, but plainly a duty. And on the part of the people, many passages prove it to be their duty to support the ministry, but no particular "way and means" bill is given by inspiration, but left to the judgment and discretion of the people; therefore, again, the duty to legislate in some way, that ministers may live and the gospel be continually preached.—Once more. It is, moreover, the duty of the church to try and expel unworthy members; but we have not the judiciary particulars in the New Testament, not even whether the accused is to be tried by the whole society, or by a committee, &c., but left with the discretion of man; therefore, again, in some things, it is the duty of the church humanly to legislate.

(5.) Some of our objectors themselves belong to religious organizations. And, accordingly, are under human rule in some form. They may not have printed disciplines, it is true, but they have rules or bye-laws, either written or understood, and agreed upon; and yet loudly decry against others who have the candor to confess it and publish them for the convenience of the societies. Mr. A. Campbell, for instance, after all he has said and written against sects, human rules, &c., in his "Christian System," repudiates "ultra democracy" in the church. And upon the subject of church discipline, he assigns good, and we think, sufficient reasons why an accused person should not be tried by the whole society, but by a committee, competent to judge of the nature and degree of evidence. These things call to remembrance the sayings and doings of an inspired Apostle, "Therefore, thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things." And again: "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth."

EC. INNOMINATUS.

LAW FOR OVERHANGING TREES.—A committee of the Legislature of Massachusetts lately made a report—that it is now well settled that where the trunk of a tree stands upon a man's land, and the fruit and branches overhang another man's property, they nevertheless belong to him upon whose possession the trunk stands. It is true that the overhanging boughs may be considered a trespass or a nuisance, and may be remedied or abated in the proper mode. The neighbor intruded upon may cut down the annoying boughs, though it should seem there ought to be a previous request to the owner of the tree to abate the nuisance, before the aggrieved party takes the matter in his own hands.

As to whether the owner of the tree may gather the fruit when it falls upon his neighbor's land, the law is unsettled. The better opinion seems to be that he may.

ALL FOR LOVE.—A young girl, beautiful and rich, lately eloped with a lover from Newburyport, Mass., while on the eve of being married to another. The bridegroom waited for a long time, but the bride had flown. Mrs. J——, the mother, did not suspect any thing until a note was found in her daughter's chamber addressed to her, of which the following is a copy verbatim et literatum:

Newburyport, Feb. 7, 1841.

Dear Mother—

I am O. P. H.

A—— J——.

The police were immediately in pursuit of the runaways, but no trace could be discovered of them.

From the Farmers' Cabinet.

DAMP STABLES.

SIR—When I came to the farm which I now hold by purchase, I found the stables built under large trees and near a spring of water, with a northern aspect; my horses were soon in poor condition, with long and rough coats, and almost always wrong in their bowels, nor could I get them up by extra food or lighter work; but my cows suffered the most, for they were always sick; their milk fell off, and their butter was poor and of a bad color and taste, and four of them slipped their calves before the time; when the spring came, they left their winter-quarters in a worse state than I had ever seen them, and two of them died from the scours on going to pasture. On inquiry, I found that the tenant who had left, had always been, what the neighbors termed, unfortunate in his horses and cattle, and from that cause, more than any other, he had not been able to make both ends meet. The truth flashed upon me in an instant, and in a very little time longer than it has taken me to tell you my story, I had commenced pulling down my stable, the unhealthiness of which had been, I was convinced, the cause of all the evil and all the loss, and it was not more than two days before there was not left one stone upon another of the whole fabric. I now set to work and erected another on higher ground, removed from water and clear from the shade of trees, with a south-east aspect and dry capacious yard; and from that day I have neither sickness nor sorrow in my out-door household; my horses live on less food, are always sleek and in good working condition, and my cows are a credit to their keep; our butter brings two cents a pound more in the market, and for the last year our sales are more than doubled from the same number of cows, and the same pasturage; and no more premature calves. Instead of watering my cattle, as heretofore, at the spring under the trees—the water cold, with a deadly taste and bad color—I sunk a well and put in a pump, and at a long trough in the yard for the summer, and another under shelter for the winter, my cattle lake their thirst, without setting up their coats as they always used to do after drinking at the hole under the trees; even when the weather was warm, they were accustomed to shake all over as though they were in a fit of the ague, after drinking their fill of this water; and to this, with the bad aspect of the stables, I attributed all the sickness and misery which I have experienced among my cattle and horses.

I have been induced to tell you the above, by reading in a valuable English work, called "Stable Economy," some observations which would go to show that the writer, like myself, and enjoyed the experience of the truth of what he so well describes; and as they fully corroborate all my convictions, I should be glad of the opportunity to present your readers with what he advances on the subject, if it meets with your approbation, and I am your constant reader.

"A damp stable produces more evil than a damp house; it is there we expect to find horses with bad eyes, coughs, greasy heels, swelled legs, mange, and a long, rough, dry, staring coat, which no grooming can cure. The French attribute glanders and the farcy to a humid atmosphere, and it is in fact that in a damp situation we find those diseases most prevalent; when horses are first lodged in a damp stable they soon show how much they feel the change; they become dull, languid and feeble, the coat stares, they refuse to feed, and at fast work, they cut their legs in spite of all care to prevent them—this arises from weakness; and while some of the horses, catch cold, others are attacked by inflamation of the throat, the lungs or the eyes; most of them lose flesh rapidly and the change produces most mischief when it is made in the winter season. Horses in constant and laborious employment must have good lodgings and kind treatment, but where the stables are bad, the management is seldom good, and it is no exaggeration to say, that hundreds of valuable horses are destroyed every year by the combined influence of bad stables and bad management. And although excessive toil and bad food have much to do in the work of destruction, every hostile agent operates with much force where the stables are of the worst kind.

"Stables should always be erected on dry ground or that which will admit of perfect draining, with the surface a little sloping. Stables built in a low or on marshy land are always damp, and when the foundations are sunk in clay, no draining can keep the walls dry, the dampness will follow up the walls from the deepest foundation; it is true that damp stables may be rendered less uncomfortable, by strewing the floor with sand or saw dust, and in some cases a stove pipe might be made to pass through the stable near the floor but such stables are liable to frequent and great alterations of temperature at every change of the state of the atmosphere. Some of the means usually employed against dampness in dwelling houses might be adopted in the construction of stables, so as to prevent the wall from absorbing the moisture of the soil, such as a foundation of whinstone to the surface of the ground, covered with a coat of Roman cement, or a sheet of lead; or the foundation may be sunk so low as to admit of its being laid in coal-dust or other substance which does not absorb water; and, although precautions of this kind may sometimes prove salutary, they ought not to be trusted to where a dry, airy, healthy situation can be obtained; frequently white-washing the walls with lime seems to have an influence in removing moisture and keeping them dry. The owner of a damp and uncomfortable stable often wonders why so many of his horses catch cold. "there are always some of them coughing;" now, if he were to make that stable his abode for four-and-twenty hours, he would have but little to wonder at. Large stables are objectionable, and have nothing to recommend them but cheapness in the erection, so that when it is more important to have a cheap, than a healthy stable, a large one may be indulged in; the saving in the end, however, may eventually prove a loss, if the builder of the stable be the owner of the horses. A very large stable cannot easily be ventilated; it requires a lofty roof to give any degree of purity, and contagious diseases once introduced into such, spread rapidly and lead to extensive mischief before they can be checked."

There is, perhaps, something more of serious fact than poetry in the following rhymes:

I hate long stories, and short ears of corn,
A costly farm-house and a shabby barn;
More curs than pigs, no books, but many guns,
Corned toes, tight boots, old debts, and paper duns.
I hate tight lacing and loose conversation;
Abundant gab and little information;
The fool who sings in bed, and snores in meeting,
Who laughs while talking, and who talks while eating.

THE REMAINS OF NAPOLEON.—Dr. Guillard, who accompanied the Prince de Joinville in the expedition to St. Helena, has published an account of the exhumation of Napoleon, from which the following are extracts:

"The upper part of the leaden coffin was then cut and raised with the greatest precaution; within it was found a coffin of wood, in a very good state and corresponding to the descriptions and recollections of the persons present who had assisted at the burial. The lid of the third coffin having been raised, there was found a lining of tin slightly oxydised, which having also been cut through and raised, allowed us to see a sheet of white satin; this sheet was raised with the greatest precaution by the doctor only, and the entire body of Napoleon appeared. The features had suffered so little as to be immediately recognized. The different objects deposited in the coffin were remarked in the exact positions where they had been placed; the hands were singularly preserved; the uniform, the orders, the hat but little changed; the whole person, in fact, seemed to indicate recent inhumation. The body remained exposed to the air for only, at most, the two minutes necessary for the surgeon to take the measures prescribed by his instructions, in order to preserve it from further alteration.

"Something white which appeared to have become detached from the lining, covered, as if with a thin gauze, all that the coffin contained. The cranium and forehead, which adhered strongly to the satin, were particularly stained with it, but very little was seen on the lower part of the face, on the hands, or on the toes. The body of the Emperor was in an easy position as when it was placed in the coffin; the upper members were laid at length, the left arm and hand resting on the left thigh; the lower limbs were slightly bent; the head, a little raised, rested on a cushion. The voluminous skull, the high and broad forehead, presented themselves, covered with hair, and yellow integuments closely adhered to them. Such appeared also the contour of the orbits, the upper edges of which were furnished with the eyebrows. Under the eyelids were still to be distinguished the ocular globes which had lost very little of their volume or form. The eyelids were completely closed, adhered to the subjacent parts, and were hard under the pressure of the finger. Some eyelashes were to be seen on the edges. The bones of the nose and the integuments which covered them were well preserved. The tubes and nostrils alone had suffered. The cheeks were full. The integuments of this part of the face were remarkable for their softness to the touch and their whiteness. Those of the chin were slightly blue, a tint they had borrowed from the beard, which had grown after death. The chin itself had undergone no change, and still preserved the peculiar type of the face of Napoleon. The thin lips were parted, and three of the incisive teeth were very white, appeared under the upper lip, which was a little raised towards the left. The hands were perfect, not having undergone the least change. Although the joints were stiff, the skin preserved that peculiar color which is only to be found in the living man. The nails of the fingers were long and adharent, and very white. The legs were in boots; but in consequence of the opening of the seams, the last four toes were out on each side. The skin of those toes was of a dead white and furnished with nails. The anterior region of the throat was much depressed in the middle, and the sides of the belly hard and sunk. All the members covered by the clothing, appear to have preserved their shapes. I pressed the left arm, which I found to be hard and diminished in thickness. As to the clothes, they appeared with their colors, so that the uniform of the horse chasseurs of the old guard, was to be recognised by the dark green of the coat and its bright red facings. The grand cordon of the legion of honor was across the waistcoat, and the whole of the breeches were partly covered by the hat, which was placed on the thighs. The epaulettes, the star, and other decorations attached to the breast, had lost their brilliancy and turned black. The gold crown of the cross of officer of the Legion of Honor had alone preserved its polish. Vases of silver appeared between the legs, one surrounded by an eagle, which rose above the knees, they were found entire and closed. As there were adhesions between these vases and the parts they touched, I uncovered them a little, the king's commissioner not thinking it right that they should be removed for the purpose of a clear examination."

SUCCESS OF THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.—At St. Mary's Church, Endicott street, Boston, last Sunday afternoon, Dr. O'Flaherty, after delivering an eloquent and impassioned sermon—in which he vividly portrayed the blessings flowing from temperance, and the miseries which follow in the train of intemperance—administered the pledge to over eight hundred persons.

Father Matthew, in one of his recent addresses, stated the number of teetotallers in Ireland had increased to 3,300,000.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... MARCH 17, 1841.

INSTITUTION FOR THE BLIND.—Nothing is more creditable to the State of Ohio, than the establishment of her benevolent Institutions. Her Penitentiary, her Institution for the Blind, her Deaf and Dumb and Lunatic Asylums, are so many monuments of her charity, that they justly entitle her to the character of the GOOD SAMARITAN. Through these she visits the regions of crime, ignorance and distress, and rescues from wickedness and misery hundreds of human beings, and restores them to society by fitting them for usefulness.

The Blind are instructed through the sense of feeling. Books are made with large letters, raised on one side of the leaf, which the pupil distinguishes by the touch, and it is said to be astonishing the proficiency they make in learning to read. We refer the reader to several interesting essays from our intelligent correspondent, "Howard," which will be found in our paper for February and March, 1840, on the benevolent institutions of the State.

We here give the Report of the Superintendent of the Institution for the Blind. We sat down to extract it, but before we got through with the task it so gained upon our sympathies that we could not resist the conviction, that the whole of it, though long, was due to our readers. The number of pupils now in the Institution is thirty-six, which is twelve less than the law of the State agrees to support at the public charge:

REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT.

To the Trustees of the Ohio Institution for the Instruction of the Blind:

GENTLEMEN: I am happy to state, that our institution is in a prosperous condition and continues to realize the benevolent object of the Legislature, in the moral and mental improvement of the Blind, committed to our care.

It is about three years and a half only, since a small class of these pupils were collected for instruction, and but little more than a year, since they have occupied a building suitable for their accomodation.

At the date of the last report, there were nineteen pupils; since which, one has died, one has not yet returned, and nineteen new pupils have been received; making the present number thirty-six. A portion of this increase is the result of a tour, which was made, under your direction, with four of the pupils, during the past vacation. We travelled nearly 600 miles, in the northern and eastern sections of the state, and gave public exhibitions in the principal towns on the route. These exhibitions attracted very large audiences, who manifested, every where, the highest gratification, at the attainments of the pupils, in their musical and other exercises. More decided testimonies of approbation, on the part of many thousands of our citizens, in favour of the institution, and the liberality of the Legislature in its support, could not have been given.

It has been found extremely difficult, in many cases, to prevail upon the blind to leave their homes, and partake of the advantages here offered. This proceeds chiefly from the mistaken kindness of their parents, who are reluctant to commit them to the care of others. It has also resulted, in part, from ignorance of capacity of the blind to receive instruction. These difficulties have been extensively removed by our recent tour and exhibitions, which proved how little was really known of the character and advantages of this institution. These considerations suggest the expediency of continuing such tours annually, at least for a few years to come, as the best means of increasing our number to the extent contemplated by the Legislature.

I would mention, among other tokens of kindness of the people of the towns we visited, their contributions for the purchase of instruments for a Brass Band. Our pupils are much interested in this additional scource of enjoyment, and have already made encouraging progress in the performance of several pieces.

Mr. A. W. Penniman continues to discharge his duties, as principal teacher, with ability and faithfulness. Whatever proficiency the pupils have made, is due, chiefly, to his persevering attentions and experience in the instruction of the blind.

Mr. W. H. Churchman, teacher of vocal music, and, at present, of the piano, has been successful in imparting to the pupils a knowledge of the elements of music, and in improving their taste and execution in this, to the blind, important and interesting science. Mr. C., it is due to remark, is entirely blind, and was a late pupil of the Pennsylvania institution.

Mr. A. Machold has given entire satisfaction, as a teacher of instrumental music. His services, are at present, confined to the pupils on the brass band, in which difficult task he has exhibited commendable skill and perseverance.

Our late matron, Mrs. Sloane, has been obliged to leave, on account of ill health. Her faithful labors and attention, in the care of the female pupils, call for an expression of regret at her loss, at this time. Her place has been supplied, temporarily, by a lady of suitable qualifications.

Our course of instruction embraces spelling, with definitions; reading, writing, geography, including maps and statics, grammar, arithmetic, mental and on the slate frames; lectures on natural and moral philosophy, and other subjects of useful knowledge; and reading to the pupils, in history, biography, miscellaneous literature, modern discoveries, news of the day, &c., &c.

ORDER OF EXERCISES IN WINTER.

Rise at 6. From 6½ to 7½, a lesson in geography, and grammar, three times a week; on alternate days, arithmetic, mental and on slates. From 10½ to 11½—singing in choir, by all the pupils. From 11½ to 1—reading the raised letters and writing. Dinner and recess, until 2. The afternoon is devoted to work; the boys, in the shops, at their trades; the girls, under the care of the matron, making various fancy articles, sewing, braiding, &c. There is also a familiar lecture, or reading lesson, one hour, every afternoon, for the females, who take their work with them, and such pupils as are not otherwise engaged. From 7 to 8, P. M.—a music lesson and reading history, alternately. At 9, P. M., the younger pupils go to rest, and at 10, all are expected to retire.

These exercises are varied in the summer, by rising one hour earlier in the morning, and by having lectures, arithmetic and grammar lessons daily. It is proposed, in the course of the term, to add algebra and geometry

Morning and evening prayers are attended to, immediately after breakfast and tea.

During the day, a number of the pupils receive lessons and practice upon the piano.

Great pains are used to give the pupils a thorough understanding of these branches; and, it is believed, they are as much advanced as ordinary seeing children, with the same advantages. It is hoped that they will exhibit, at the end of the allotted term of five years, the usual proficiency of scholars in our well regulated academies.

With few exceptions, the blind are anxious to receive instruction. Shut out from ordinary objects of attraction, the lights of science and knowledge open upon their minds new scources of happiness. They are equally surprised and delighted to find they have capacities for education equal to others. The influence of instruction and kind and affectionate treatment, is soon visible in their cheerful deportment and faithful attention to their studies. Some, who, only a few months since, were mourning their hapless condition, are now contented and happy. A new and bright existence seems to have dawned upon their minds.

A female pupil, who, until recently, regarded life as a burthen, has, in a few weeks, learned to read tolerably well in the New Testament, and to write a legible hand. In a letter to her mother, in her own hand, she says, "I am now happy and contented. I can read in the New Testament, and understand something of geography, music and arithmetic. I once thought life had no enjoyment for me. I do not now feel so dependant on others."

Another female pupil, who has been under instruction but a little over four months, and learning to write, about six weeks only, thus writes to one of her teachers, in a legible hand: "My heart is filled with gratitude, when I reflect on your kindness to me and my fellow sufferers. But I despair of communicating to you my real sentiments, for my heart is more grateful than words can express. I dare not reflect on the day which will separate me from the institution, for every day brings increasing delight and I look back on the time spent here, as the happiest of my life; for here I have been taught to read the word of God. As this is my first letter, you will please pardon my mistakes."

Another pupil, with a few weeks instructien, thus dedicates her first attempt at letter writing:

"My dear mother:—I now attempt to write to you. It is my first letter, and you most deserve it. Perhaps you will be pleased to see my own hand-writing. I am very happy here, and never regretted coming, except at parting with you. My love to all that inquire after blind Mary."

Another pupil, a lad aged 12, being told that some one doubted that the blind were capable of instruction, writes: "The doubts about educating the blind are very foolish. Why may we not as well receive instruction by the ear and the touch as others by the eye? How many blind persons have become eminent in learning and science."

These simple specimens, while they indicate the facility with which the blind may be instructed, breathe a language of unaffected contentment, which may teach the parents of the blind who are still retained at home, that they would best consult their happiness and welfare, by sending them to the institution, to be educated.

Books for the blind are necessarily limited in number, and somewhat expensive. Some of our pupils, in their restless desire of improvement, are constantly inquiring for more books; and whenever any new volumes arrive, the first eager inquiry of a dozen voices is, "are they in our print?" On this account, it is to be regretted that we have not a uniform print for the blind. The different characters now employ two presses; one at Boston and the other at Philadelphia; whereas, one press would be sufficient, with a uniform letter, to do double the work with about the same expense.

Every attention is paid to the moral improvement of the pupils. Our government is based on Christian principles.—The constant aim is to plant in the heart of every pupil a love of virtue, as the highest motive to do right. And we have every encouragement to believe there is a gradual improvement in the morals and affections of the pupils. They are taught to be kind and affectionate, and to regard each other as members of one family, united by a common object, and by a bond of sympathy in one common privation.

They have the full enjoyment of religious privileges, on the Sabbath, and choose their own place of worship, to which they are regularly taken, without the slightest restraint. When the weather is unpleasant, appropriate religious services are held in the institution, carefully avoiding every thing of a sectarian character. These privileges are highly valued, and attended to with becoming seriousness.

The pupils take their meals at the same time, and partake of the same kind as the teachers and family of the superintendent.

The mechanical department, which may perhaps be regarded as more important than any other, for the substantial welfare of the blind, bids fair to realize our best hopes. We have recently engaged the services of Mr. H. Hawenstein, of the Philadelphia institution, a skilful and experienced teacher of several of the branches taught to the blind. To the trades already commenced here, shoemaking, and brush making, we propose to add the manufacture of baskets and door mats, and weaving list and rag carpets. Experience in other institutions, as well as our own, teaches that shoe-making is not the best branch, in most cases, for the blind. It will be, therefore, confined to those who have a decided preferance to it. Several of our pupils have turned out very creditable specimens of this work. They have also been very expert in the manufacture of brushes, and will soon be able, when all the proper tools are received, to compete successfully with seeing mechanics.

Basket making has been found to be a good business for the blind. It will be introduced as soon as the willow can be procured. This is the principal branch followed in the New York institution, and is found to be profitable. From specimens of the finer manufactures of various fabrics, by the pupils of the institutions at Boston, New York and Philadelphia, there is abundant evidence of the ingenuity of the blind, and their ability to execute very beautiful and difficult work. But it is undoubtedly the best policy of the institution, to confine its pupils to the manufacture of articles in common use, which find a ready market, require the least waste of material, and the least outlay of capital.

In justice to the pupils, I am happy to state, that they all feel a laudable ambition to acquire the means of support by their own industry. They look upon a life of hopeless dependence as a misfortune even greater than blindness. They ask, that the means may be placed in their hands, by which they can take their station among their fellow beings. This noble feeling we delight to cherish. It is an appeal to the most honorable sympathies of our nature and will not be overlooked.

When our pupils shall become advanced in their several branches we have reason to believe the proceeds of their work will nearly or quite repay the expenses of the workshop, including the salary of their teacher.

While I feel indisposed to make any suggestions tending to increase, unnecessarily, the expense of the institution, I cannot omit to refer for your consideration, the early erection of a suitable work shop. The recent increase of our numbers has already rendered the present shop too small, and will require the use of another room in the basement of the building, and a separation of some of the pupils from the immediate and constant presence of their teacher. This necessity, of course, will be greater, as the pupils continue to increase.

Much inconvenience is occasionally felt, from the difficulty of providing comfortable clothing for some of the indigent pupils. In some cases they are entirely neglected by their parents, or guardians. This extremity falls upon those who have their immediate care. In some of the eastern institutions, a moderate provision is made for clothing of indigent pupils. Whether a small sum to be applied contingently, or other provision may be made for such cases, is respectfully submitted.

Of the pupils returned in this report, several, lately received, are over twenty-one, the age limited by law, and their reception depends upon the action of the legislature. They all come well recommended, and their moral and correct deportment, and capacity to receive instruction, entitle them to a favorable consideration. Some of them have already learned to read, and give as much promise as an average number of young pupils. The infancy of our institution, and the want of information of its restrictions in respect to age, are, it is believed, strong reasons why, in certain cases, exceptions should be made in favor of those, who, in every other respect, present the strongest claims to our sympathies. It is believed a discretionary power, vested in the trustees for a few years to come, to receive a limited number of such pupils, might be beneficially exercised.

Our new building is, in most respects, convenient and well adapted for the purpose. The painting of the outside, and parts of the interior, remain to be finished; and are required, as much, perhaps, on the score of economy as beauty. The exhibition room is yet to be furnished with seats, and some additional plain furniture is necessary. The surrounding grounds are in a rough, unfinished state, and need grading and improving by shade trees.

The institution owns but one piano, and is at present dependent upon the temporary use of one belonging to the teacher of vocal music. Our music instructions on the piano, has heretofore suffered for want of more instruments, and in this respect we cannot compare favorably with other similar institutions.

We are also greatly in need of an organ. If we propose to furnish any of our pupils an opportunity of making music a profession, an organ will be almost indispensable. The citizens of Cincinnati have already made a generous effort to procure one. This benevolence is still active, and we are invited to visit that city again with the pupils, to give a public exhibition, with a view to some further effort towards that object.

Our acknowledgments are due to the New York Institution, for the favor of a donation of some beautiful specimens of basket-work, rug and Manilla mats, the work of their pupils, which we daily exhibit to visitors.

Our thanks are due also to the American Tract Society, for a donation of a library of forty-five volumes, and also to the Sabbath School Union, for some of their publications, the reading of which gives another source of consolation to our pupils, for which they are very grateful.

I cannot close this communication without remarking that our institution, as organized, is fully prepared to receive an additional number of pupils, with but a trifling increase in the expense of instruction; and that its benevolent objects might be extended, by the reception from the adjacent States, of a limited number of pupils, in the same manner as those sent to the Pennsylvania Institution by Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey.—While such an act of benevolence would require but a moderate expense on the part of our sister States, it would increase the interest of our own institution, and enlarge its sphere of usefulness to this class of our fellow beings.

Respectfully submitted,
WILLIAM CHAPIN.

LEAGUE AGAINST THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—The Archbishop of Canterbury, in his late charge, thus enumerates the different parties engaged in 'a formidable combination against the Church.' He mentions, first, unbelievers in God and piviac revelation, second, those believers in Christ who are prepared, by the prejudices or notions of ecclesiastical government, to unite with those they most disapprove of, in effecting the ruin of the Established Church. Next are the professors of liberal sentiments, who regard all forms of faith as indifferent; next, the advocates of the voluntary system, and, finally, the chartists and socialists. This is, doubtless, a true state of the case, and the combination is indeed formidable to the establishment. But that establishment must be of questionable utility and justice, which unites against it such and so opposite interests. There must be some cause for this singular combination of opposite elements. In the days of the Reformation, there were united, against the spiritual thraldom of Rome, the real reformers, statesmens, and philosophers of a latitudinarian creed, ambitious princes, and restless fanatics. And there was good and substantial reason for the Reformation, though it resulted from such opposite elements.

But who is responsible for this combination? There is no mutual understanding between the parties. The Established Church has given them what unity they have, by placing them all in the same category. The pious non-conformist, the profane infidel, the orthodox presbyterian, the licentious socialist, all lie under the same anathema and ban of intolerance, pronounced by this church. Robert Hall, and Robert Owen, are confounded in the same supercilious contempt of dissenters, inculcated at the Oxford schools; 'And,' (asks the London Patriot, to whom we are indebted for these statements,) 'is it for the prelates of the church to turn round upon us, and reproach us for the combination which is the pure result of their own intolerant classification, by which Christ and Belial are impiously represented as leagued together?'

The same writer further says, that the religious portion of the people in England know, that if there be any real religion in the country, apart from priestcraft and state-craft, it resides with the evangelical dissenters—not exclusively, but preeminently; and, therefore, the blows aimed at dissent, either recoil upon the Church, or fall upon Christianity.—Puritan.

INHUMANITY.—George W. Jones, who had been convicted of forgery in Charleston, S. C., has been sentenced to be hung on the first Friday in May next. He was indicted for two crimes, larceny and forgery, for the former of which he was punished with the lash two several times, and is to receive two other whippings prior to his execution—and which he would have received ere this, had not the physician pronounced him too feeble to bear the punishment. The heart sickens at the thought of a human being obliged to undergo the infliction of the lash when under sentence of death. But so it is—civilized man prates of his humanity, and sends missionaries to subdue what he terms the cruel passions of the savage.

INAUGURATION.

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, MARCH 4, 1841.

The spectacle presented to-day has been the noblest specimen of a Republican Government I have ever seen. The throng of people has far exceeded all calculation, and left an impression on those who have participated in the ceremonies which can never be effaced.

The Senate was called to order at 10 o'clock by the Secretary, Mr. Dickens.

Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, submitted a resolution that William R. King, of Ala., be elected President, pro tem., and that the oath be administered to him by Henry Clay, of Kentucky.

The resolution was put to the Senate by the Secretary, and carried unanimously.

Mr. King took the Chair, and retained it until the Vice President was sworn.—As soon as the organization took place at 11 o'clock,

The Diplomatic Corps, with the Judges of the Supreme Court, entered a few minutes before the Vice President.

The Vice President entered the Chamber at half past 11 o'clock, with the committee of arrangements, and was conducted to the chair.

The oath was then administered to the Vice President by the President pro tempore.

Mr. Tyler made an eloquent and able address to the Senate.

The President elect arrived at a quarter past 12 o'clock, and was met by a committee at the entrance, and conducted to a seat prepared for him in the Senate Chamber.

At half-past 12 o'clock those assembled on the floor of the Senate, proceeded to the eastern portico of the Capitol.

The President elect was greeted with acclamations that made the welkin ring, upon his arrival at the front of the portico. The acclamations were repeated, and louder than ever when the reading of the Address commenced.

The arrangements on the Portico were as follows:

The Ex-Vice President, the Committee of Arrangements, and Associate Judges of the Supreme Court, occupied a position several feet in the rear of the President elect.

The Vice President, Secretary, and members of the Senate occupied parallel lines next in the rear.

The Diplomatic Corps were the next in position; and the late Speaker, Clerk, and members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The ladies, and such persons, as, by the rules of the Senate and arrangements of the committee, were enumerated in the programme, occupied the steps and the residue of the portico.

On the conclusion of the address, the oath to office was administered to the President of the United States, by the Chief Justice; after which, the members of the Senate, preceded by the Vice President, Secretary, and Sergeant-at-Arms, returned to the Senate Chamber.

The Inaugural was from a manuscript copy, in a clear and audible voice, and was heard by the very many of the fifty thousand persons placed within and in front of the Capitol. Of the pageant itself, especially during the delivery of the Address, it is impossible to give a description. Every one speaks of the attendance, both for the number and interest, as unparalleled and astonishing.

The oath of office having been administered to the President by the Chief Justice, tremendous applause followed, and guns were fired as a signal of the glorious event from Capitol Hill, and in different parts of the city, and the crowd dispersed.

The new Senate immediately convened in the Chamber.

Mr. Bayard offered a resolution of thanks to the Hon. W. R. King, as President pro tem.

Mr. Magnum submitted the following resolution, which he asked should be laid on the table until to-morrow: "Resolved, That Blair and Rives be dismissed as Printers to this body."

On motion of Mr. Huntington, the Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

REVOLUTION IN SOUTH AMERICA.—The whole country of New Granada is involved in a civil war. Fifteen provinces out of twenty have declared for a federal government, and have collected and sent troops towards Bogota to compel the Central Government there to come to terms. The government has concentrated all its forces near Bogota, and is determined not to yield to the wishes of the revolted provinces. Gen. Herran and Tomas Mosquera, are carrying on the operations for the government: Gens. Garmona and Pineres, Col. Gonzales and others for the provinces. Panama will separate from the rest of New Granada.

MURDER AT NAPOLEON, HENRY CO., O.—A man by the name of Reynolds got into a broil with some Irishmen on the canal at this place, a few days since, and drew a dirk, which was taken away from him upon which he went home and got his gun, and returned, shot one man through the heart. The offender has been secured.

In the Court of Common Pleas, Olef Swedensterned obtained a verdict for 500 dollars damages against Matthew Rowe, for striking him on the head with a bung starter, by which he was badly wounded, and rendered insane and deaf for a part of two months.

METHODISTS IN TEXAS.—The Methodist Church in Texas comprises 1,623 white, and 230 colored members, and 27 local preachers.

From the Charleston Mercury, Feb. 26.

SENTENCE OF DEATH.

The following sentence was pronounced by his Honor Judge O'Neall, on Tuesday last, on George W. Jones, who was convicted of forgery at the last May term of the Court of Sessions.

"George W. Jones—To day is the second time you have been before me, as the minister of justice, to receive the sentence of the law. It is, on this occasion, the dreadful judgment of the death of the body. I would say to you, prepare to die! And in order to commence that work of preparation, it is my duty to call your attention to yourself:—to point you to that beautiful star of hope, which hung over the Saviour's lowly birth place, and which guides alike wisdom and folly to his extended arms of mercy.

What has been your past life? I know of but two incidents in it, the base theft of a stranger's all, and the forgery for which you stand condemned. But, if report be true, you are no child in crime. I have heard it said, by your able, eloquent and indefatigable counsel, that you have talents and information, much above the common herd of criminals;—they have spoken of your position in society being once respectable and honest. If these things be so, what must be your feelings? How can you look back upon the beautiful flowers of youth, withered, blasted and trampled under foot by your crimes, without exclaiming, "Oh that I had never been?" How can you remember your parents, your friends, who once looked to you with pride, and not now feel the harrowing thought, that your parents "grey hairs are bowed with sorrow to the grave," and that your friends have been estranged by your crimes? You look around you, and there are none to sympathize with you in the present awful moment, but some merciful stranger, who utters for you the Saviour's prayer of mercy, "father forgive him." Nothing to a mind possessed of any feeling, can be a more distressing reflection than that in youth, in crime and in folly, a life's whole expectations have been lost! To you, unlessexe cutive clemency should be extended, time will soon cease and an awful eternity, will commence. Let the bitterness of your reflection on the crimes and folly of your life, prepare you for the change that may come upon you under the sentence of the law; but if that ignominous ending of your days should be spared to you, still in a few years more, it will certainly come, you must meet the Everlasting Judge of quick and dead. I trust, in the solitary cell, which you have tenanted for some time, and which is still to be your home, that you will read the Book of Life—if you cannot understand it, call to your aid the holy men of God, who are its interpreters, and who stand as it were on the mount of God, to point the trembling sinner to the day spring of mercy on high. They will, with unwearied patience and industry, explain the way, the truth and the life, until you may be able to lay hold on the hope of everlasting life. Let me intreat you to be not an idle and uninterested beholder of the wasting sands in the hour glass of your life. Nothing but "ceasing to do evil and learning to do well" can save you from everlasting punishment in an everlasting world. Nothing but faith in your Redeemer can give you that repentance which is unto life. Say not, "I cannot be saved,"—the thief on the Cross was snatched by faith, from the yawning, burning abyss of punishment which opened at his feet. The Publican, who could only cry, "God be merciful unto me a sinner," was accepted. None ever came to Christ and was rejected. To-day, He stands before you and cries—"come unto me, and I will give you rest!" He walks with you in your prison house, and in the silent watches of the night He stands by your couch of crime and punishment, and says to you, ask and ye shall receive. To Him, by whom the fountain was opened in the house of David for sin and uncleanness in which you may wash and be made clean, I would commend you.—The help of man is vain! Expect it not! desire it not! Look forward to the hope which is in glory, far beyond the brightness of the sun, and which is to endure beyond time, and to flourish in immortal youth at the right hand of God. May you realize the fullness and certainty of this hope, and walk through the dark valley of the shadow of death and fear no evil.

"The sentence of the law is, that you be taken hence to the place from whence you last came, and there be closely and securely confined, until the first Friday in May next, on which day, between the hours of ten in the forenoon and two in the afternoon, you will be taken by the Sheriff of Charleston District to the place of public execution, and there, between the hours of ten in the forenoon, and two in the afternoon, you will be hanged by your neck, until your body be dead; and may God have mercy on your soul."

RECOVERED.—Major Harris, editor of the Nashville Union, has recovered from the wounds received some weeks since from a Mr. Foster, who attempted to take his life by discharging a pistol, loaded with ball, at him, and has resumed his editorial duties.

"Thank God for his mercy," as the deacon said when he saw that it was his neighbor's house, and not his own which was on fire.

A CHANGE.—The English language has been substituted for French, in the law courts of St. Lucia. This island is said to be in a miserable condition.

Upon the whole of this we add:

1. Br. Cooke admits the seceders had a jority of the "voting," that is, the male " bers" at the time of the division. This we cannot pronounce upon this question wi much positiveness as we could with regard t pen to know considerable about this matter and we dispute his assumption, even in particular, also. We have no doubt but a time of the separation, there was a majori the church, including both male and female, went with the seceders. But soon after division, the authorities of the church impo into Pittsburgh two young men, the most li of any they could find, to succeed with sisters, and after they had commenced operat awhile, we were shown a long list of girls w had been added as lambs of the flock. So, t although we deny to them a majority of whole church, at the time of the division, without hesitancy, accord to our Episc brethren a majority, including the sisters, w the church suit was decided, which was some years, or more, afterwards.

2. Our brother, after briefly admitting the Pittsburgh seceders had a majority of the poration, immediately flies to their old argum of numbers. And although some of his st ments are qualified and very modest on this s ject, yet the drift of his reasoning evider is, that, inasmuch as they have so far out nu bered the Methodist Protestant Church, in city, since the division, their principles must in the same proportion better; for he seems a loss to account for their success on any ot score. Some thirty-three years since, when attached ourself to the Methodist Episc Church, in this neighborhood, they were v few in number, and not very reputable at th
The ministers of that church were then c stantly endeavoring to satisfy the public, t their paucity of numbers was a presumptive arg ment that they were right;—that Christ's flo had always been a "little flock;" many were call but "few chosen," &c. They insisted th whenever a people became numerous and wealth they invariably grew proud, haughty and im rious, and that they relied more upon their wea and influence, than they did upon the Lord success. Observation upon the state of gene society compelled us to admit the truth of the reasonings. Now, if Br. Cooke will only gi us the "Primitive Methodist argument," it w prove, from the facts he has stated, that there more probability that his opponents are rig than he. If any reliance is to be placed up the mere argument of numbers it would go disparage the religion of the Bible itself, and prove that heathenism was true. So far fro great success, in winning the attention of t multitude, to any cause, being an argument favor as the editor indicates, it is prima fac evidence that there is something wrong in t inducements which it holds forth, inasmuch man generally attends more ardently to his te poral than to his spiritual interests. A gre multitude once followed our Lord, but when H came to scan their moties, it was for the "loav and the fishes." But so soon as He reprove them for their sordidness, and preached to the the heart-searching doctrines of the Cross, the with the exception of the honest few, soon fo sook Him. Then, as numbers prove nothin positively, either for or against a system, the ma ters at issue between us and our Episcop Methodist brethren must be decided by othe evidence.

3. Br. Cooke thinks there must be "a cause" why his church has prospered so much more i Pittsburgh than that of the Methodist Protes

nt, and modestly asks whether it is to be attributed to "a more enlightened ministry? a more spiritual membership? or a more popular or efficient government?" We will state to our Br. another "fact" which "is certain" also, viz: that the Roman Catholics, at present, in his city, probably out number his church three to one, yet at the time of the secession alluded to, they exceeded the Episcopal Methodists very little, if any, in numbers. Is this because they have "a more enlightened ministry—a more spiritual membership—or a more popular or efficient government" than his church? Now get your slate, Br. Charles, and work out this question, and perhaps, before you reach the answer, you will find that though one man has been more successful in accumulating popularity, wealth or earthly grandeur, it is no evidence that either his principles or practice are any better than those of his neighbor.

4. Our friend admits, "the Protestant Methodists have one congregation in this city and one in Allegheny." For several years after their organization they had but one congregation, now they have two. And when the disadvantages under which the Pittsburgh church has labored, are considered, they have done well. While the Episcopal Methodists are receiving ship loads of members from Europe, and canal boats full from the Eastern cities, to swell their numbers, this church receives but few from those quarters, but is annually drained by a large emigration to the West. She has, probably, sent out fully another congregation, scores of whom will become nucleuses, around which churches will ultimately collect in other regions. Indeed, we consider the M. P. Church in this quarter, to be precisely in that situation which is most conducive to virtue. On the one hand, she is not so flattered with numbers and success that she is stimulated to swagger round with an air of importance, so as to render her loathsome in the estimation of a scrutinizing public, but has enough to keep her humble; on the other, she has sufficient amount of prosperity to induce the belief, that if she be faithful, she shall succeed in the face of all opposition. In fine, she is so situated that her very being depends upon her virtue. Men, so circumstanced have stronger inducements to integrity than when they can get along without it.

In conclusion; we have not toward you, Br. Cooke, the least unkind feeling. You stand fairer with us now, than when this controversy began. And we should esteem it a pleasure to have an hour's social chat with you. But still, we cannot consent "to be quiet" on the subject of your unscriptural church polity. We as honestly feel it to be our "business" to expose the errors of that system as you may to build it up. But we have learned, though, to distinguish between man and their principles.

Our Foreign Affairs.—Mr. Buchanan, of the United States Senate, and Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, stated, on the 1st instant, that he was instructed by the committee to move to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution referred to the committee, "requesting the President to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any correspondence which may have taken place between this government and that of Great Britain, in relation to the North Eastern Boundary, not heretofore communicated to the Senate." The Senator stated, in substance, that the committee had examined the whole subject, and had free access to all the correspondence between the two governments, and that they saw nothing which "had occurred inconsistent with the sincere and anxious desire which had always been expressed by the British government at any stage of the progress of the negociation" to settle the Northern Boundary Question.—The Senator stated, that the late rumors about an angry correspondence between Mr. Forsythe and the British Minister, was without foundation. Mr. Fox had addressed a bare note to Mr. Forsythe, in relation to the McLeod affair, to which the latter had replied, since the last published correspondence between them, which had not been communicated to the Senate, but he did not deem it of sufficient importance to the public to be laid before them.

Mr. Clay gave it as his belief that there were no serious fears of a rupture between the two governments; that peace was the essential interest of each, and that if war ever come it would be from collateral causes, over which the governments could have no control. He gave it as his decided opinion, that the state of the differences between the two countries was not such as to require a special Minister; that the Minister resident there would be able to do all that would be necessary in the premises without difficulty, and he thought without delay.

Junius.—We never had any satisfactory opinion as to the authorship of Junius, until we read an article in the Brother Jonathan from Tait's Magazine. The writer coincides with a book, to which he alludes, written by a Mr. Taylor, in which the authorship of Junius' letters is attributed to Sir Philip Francis. Sir Philip, at the time he is supposed to have written these letters, was but a clerk in the War office under Lord Barrington. He is thought to have betrayed the secrets of the King's government, which his relation to the office furnished him, and thus made himself formidable to the ministry; and, ultimately, taking advantage of the state of public feeling which he had produced by his treachery, raised himself to power and eminence. The reason of his not admitting the authorship of Junius, is thought to be because it would, at once, expose his perfidity and meanness. The article to which we allude may also be found in the first number of the Dollar Magazine. It certainly makes out the strongest case we have yet seen, on that subject, although volumes have been written.

☞We have been called on several times for our "Circumcision Argument." We have not found leisure, up to the present, to give any attention at all to that subject. There are several letters, on our table, which have remained there for some weeks, calling for information, &c., which we have not yet had time to attend to.

Declaration of Rights.—On our last page will be found a "Declaration of Rights" which is from the pen of the Rev. Henry B. Bascom. It was written for the express purpose of being prefixed to the Discipline of the Methodist Protestant Church, and was forwarded to the Book agent, Mr. Harrod, at the time the convention which formed the Discipline, was in session, who accordingly had it connected with the Constitution and Discipline of said church when published.

We pronounce this, without hesitancy, the most able document we have ever read on the elements of government. Its maxims are so clear, and so forcibly expressed, that their truth is irresistable. We do not think it possible for an uninspired pen to do better justice to the subject. The author was one of the principal writers against the claims of Episcopal Methodism, in that controversy which ultimated in the establishment of the Methodist Protestant Church. This bill of rights shows how well the leaders of this enterprize understood their subject. We doubt, if the fathers of the revolution ever discussed their controversy with the mother country, with greater ability than the reformers of the Methodist Episcopal Church discussed the matters at issue between them and their ecclesiastical rulers. Indeed, we have little doubt, but the developements of this discussion will lay at the root of this hierarchical tree, which, at present, seems to treat with equal contempt the storms of heaven which beat upon its summit, and the reptiles of earth which crawl around its base, until, like the worm at the root of Jonah's gourd, it will ultimately prove its destruction, or overthrow; though it may be a length of time before this will be accomplished.

The questions are often started,—"how does it come to pass, that Mr. Bascom, seeing he took such an active part in this controversy, did not share the fate of his brethren, and go with those who were convinced by his arguments, or expelled for reading the essays which he wrote? How can a man be honest after uttering and adopting such opinions as are contained in this "Declaration of Rights," especially in the 14th and 15th articles, and yet remain in the Methodist Episcopal Church under existing circumstances?

These questions, we admit, are very hard to answer, so as to exculpate the writer of the "Declaration" from the most glaring inconsistency. The author of the Bill of Rights and us were, we believe, the two first, among the itinerant ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the West, who wrote against the power of the bishops. Having a similarity of views and feelings upon this important subject, we soon formed an intimacy, and the opposition which we met with, naturally led to an attachment. This continued, unabated, until a division of the church separated us. But we still feel a respect for the many good qualites of our former friend.

The Rev. Bascom was treated by the appendages of the Episcopacy, while his pen was employed in exposing the errors of their system, with a great deal of contempt and severity. We were present at the General Conference of 1828, where the final appeal of the Baltimore expulsions was settled. George Rozel, during the investigation, after reading to the conference an article from the Mutual Rights, written by Mr. B., made a personal assault upon him. He drew a comparison between the popularity of Mr. Bascom and that of the learned Pig which was exhibited in this country some years since; "thousands," he said, "ran out to witness the pranks of the animal, but after all, it was but a hog!" While the half savage (for such the speaker looked like,) was delivering this coarse ribaldry, the Bishop, in the chair, chuckled at it, as tho' he were much amused.

It is probable that the managing spirits of the Methodist Episcopal Church calculated that they could suppress this effort to abridge their power, without any thing very serious growing out of the matter. But when they saw that the organization of a new church was likely to be the consequence of their doings, they set to work to prevent it. And, to use the language of Mr. Bascom, they commenced "buying up men by the sale of indulgence." And, as he was a very important man, they offered him the professorship of Moral Science in Augusta College, with a salary of seven or eight hundred dollars. As the College was little more, at that time, than an Academy, save the name, we considered this professorship, which appeared to be got up for the special purpose, a perfect sinecure. And to complete the Jesuitism of the arrangement, the church did not raise the means and endow a professorship of this kind, and place the annuities at the control of the Trustees of the College—for, as Mr. B. was very popular in Kentucky at that time, these might have sustained him in a conflict with the rulers of the church,—but they sent an agent among their wealthy members, and got them to subscribe so much annually for the benefit of this professorship, so that if the gentleman did not behave himself they could easily stop his bread and cheese.

When Mr. Bascom was made the offer, above alluded to, he wrote to a wealthy and liberal friend of his in the M. P. Church, naming to him this fact, and also stating his necessities, and then asked his advice as to what he ought to do under the circumstances. It was thought, by some, that this was fairly putting himself in the market; that if this friend, who had the ability, had promised to sustain him, he would have been with the seceding Methodists. But, as he declined giving him any advice in the premises, he took the bait tendered to him.

However, we cannot entertain so severe an opinion of our old friend, as to suppose he would deliberately sell himself for gain. He is a man of some sterling moral qualities. He, at the time, had an aged father and some other relations who were dependent on his personal efforts. The exertions he made, and the solicitude he manifested, to provide the comforts of life for these, are worthy of all commendation. We are, however, by no means, his apologist, so far as he has erred, nor shall we attempt to exculpate him from the charge of inconsistency, yet we think it possible that he found reasons, growing out of the peculiarities of his case, to satisfy his own mind that he was justified in staying where he is, without being chargeable with selling himself for a professorship.

But what shall we say of a church who would turn out, from her fellowship, comparatively innocent and unoffending men, merely for reading what Mr. Bascom and others had written, and not only let these pass without expulsion, but turn round and buy them up. Expel the innocent and not only let the guilty go free, but caress and reward them. Where is consistency here? A church who could thus act would do almost any thing else to sustain her pretensions. Mr. Bascom, it is admitted on all hands, wrote the severest things that were published in the offensive periodical, against Methodist episcopacy. And this Declaration of Rights, the production of his pen, like the sun which gives pain to the vision of the owl, will give much annoyance, in future ages, to clerical tyrants.

We publish this Bill of Rights at the present, because we have been called on for some copies for the purpose of framing and hanging up.

Inaugural Address.—This address of President Harrison is now before the public, and has been read with much avidity. It is too long a document for our columns. He goes against the use of the vetoing power, except on extraordinary occasions; also, against an exclusive metalic currency as peculiarly aiding the rich to add daily to their hoards, and as sinking the poor deeper into penury. He gives it as his opinion that the power of the Chief Executive of this Union, owing to his being the dispenser of the immense patronage of the government, is dangerous to the rights and interests of the States. That, although, there is no open rupture between the general and particular governments of this nation, yet there is a powerful under-current at work, which if not timously checked will sweep away the State authorities, and leave our government ultimately, in substance, a consolidated monarchy. He says nothing directly on the subject of a "United States Bank." He thinks the States have no constitutional right to interfere with the domestic institutions of each other in any other way than with advice. He renews his declaration,—that under no circumstances will he be a candidate for the Presidency a second time,—and concludes with the following appropriate paragraph on religion:

"I deem the present occasion sufficiently important and solemn to justify me in expressing to my fellow-citizens a profound reverence for the christian religion, and a thorough conviction that sound morals, religious liberty, and a just sense of religious responsibility, are essentially connected with all true and lasting happiness, and to the good Being who has blessed us by the gifts of civil and religious freedom, who watched over and prospered the labors of our fathers, and has hitherto preserved to us institutions far exceeding in excellence those of any other people, let us unite in fervently commending every interest of our beloved country in all future time."

To which we respond—Amen!

Harrison's Inaugural.—The Ohio Statesman says, this document "contains more words and as few ideas as any paper of the kind we ever saw;" and that "no one will say Gen. Harrison did not write it, for it is Gen. Harrison 'all over!'" The Globe, another opposition paper, attributes it to Webster. Now, these gentlemen have unwittingly united to give a high character to this Address. The one, his neighbor, and being supposed to know, says, no one will doubt but Harrison wrote it,—the other, so struck with the talent of this State paper, thinks it must have been written by one of the greatest men in the nation. What becomes now, of the doctrine of incompetency?

We do not charge one class of politicians with more inconsistency than another; but the above is a specimen of the miserable shifts, to detract from the merits of an opponent, resorted to by both parties. It seems there is not much difference between priests and politicians, in this respect.

Dollar Magazine.—The February number of this work was received in our absence. It contains 32 large pages, issued monthly, at $1 per annum, in advance. We presume it to be the cheapest work for the amount of matter it contains in the nation. It gives an abstract of American and Foreign literature. Should any of our friends want the work, and will send us the cash, we will have it ordered for them by forwarding the money: or they can address Wilson & Co. 162 Nassau street, New York.

☞We forgot to record in our last the death of Judge Barbour, of Virginia, a member of the Supreme Court of the United States. The court being in session at Washington city, he discharged his official duties on Wednesday and was found dead on Thursday morning. The court adjourned three days on the occasion.

Seventh-Day Baptist Register.—This paper has reached the 1st No. 2d Vol. It is an excellent family paper, and though sectarian, yet liberally conducted. Their argument in relation to the Sabbath is very hard to refute. It is now edited and published by James Bailey, per $2 in advance, at De Ruyter, N. Y.

The Weather.—We still continue to have disagreeable March weather. We have snow, rain and sunshine, all within a few hours.—Monday 15th—while we write—have a considerable snow storm from the east, which has fallen to the depth of 6 inches. The roads are remarkably bad.

☞We have to put our paper to press on Tuesday morning, as it takes us the whole day to work it off and put up the packages so as to be ready for delivery on Wednesday, the day of publication.

☞The Amistad case has been argued, but we have not yet learned the decision. Mr. Adams is said to have acquited himself with ability in the defence.

☞The Philadelphia Daily Chronicle had the President's Inaugural out before any of its contemporaries. It came to us in its paper of the 5th instant.

Good.—Gen. Harrison, in his Inaugural, says: "we admit of no power by divine right." "No power," of course, either ecclesiastical or civil.

Party Spirit.—We give the following paragraph, from Harrison's Inaugaration, on political party spirit, which he promises to use all his influence to suppress. We think it high time that the public would abandon those noisy, abusive political writers of both parties, and sustain men of more calmness and candor. An abusive pestilential political newspaper, no difference from what party press it may issue, ought not to be permitted to visit any family.

"Before concluding, fellow-citizens, I must say something to you on the subject of the parties existing in our country. To me it appears perfectly clear, that the interest of the country requires that the violence of the spirit by which, at this time, those parties are governed, must be greatly mitigated, if not entirely extinguished, or consequences will ensue which are appalling to be thought of. If parties in a Republic are necessary to secure a degree of vigilance sufficient to keep the public functionaries within the bounds of law and duty, at that point their usefulness ends. Beyond that they become destructive of public virtue, the parent of a spirit antagonist to that of liberty, and eventually, its conqueror. We have examples of Republics where the love of country and of liberty at the same time, were the dominant passions of the whole mass of citizens. And yet with the continuance of the name and forms of free government, not a vestige of these qualities remained in the bosom of any one of its citizens. It was the beautiful remark of a distinguished English writer, that "in the Roman Senate, Octavius had a party, and Anthony had a party, but the commonwealth had none." Yet the Senate continued to meet together in the Temple of Liberty, to talk of the sacredness and beauty of the Commonwealth, and gaze at the statutes of the elder Brutus and of the Curtii and the Decii. And the people assembled in the forum, not as in the days of Camillus and the Scipos, to cast their free votes for annual magistrates, or pass upon the Senate, but to receive from the hands of the leaders of the several parties their share of the spoils, and to shout for one or the other, as those collected in Gaul or Egypt, or the lesser Asia, would furnish the largest dividend. The spirit of liberty had fled, and avoiding the abodes of civilized man, had sought protection in the wilds of Scythia or Scandinavia—and so, under the operation of the same causes and influences, it will fly from our capitals and forums. A calamity so awful, not only to our country, but to the world, must be deprecated by every patriot; and every tendency to a state of things likely to produce it, immediately checked."

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

The Senate have lugged around the bill "for the protection of religious worship," until they have became fairly exhausted, and are not able to lift it any more. On an attempt to raise it off the table on the 7th instant, they failed to accomplish the object, in the proportion of 7 to 22.

The Senate have agreed to the resolution of the House to adjourn on the 29th inst.

Mr. Green introduced into the Senate, on the 10th inst., a bill to incorporate "the Campmeeting Company," which was read the first time.—Wonder if this is for the benefit of Dr. Glover, to authorize him to sell cakes and melons, on those occasions.

After resting until the 12th, the Senate were able once more to get up the bill for the "protection of religious worship;" and after worrying round awhile with it, committed it, for the time being, to the care of Messrs. Henderson and Utter.

Thursday, March 11.—The Bank committee have made their reports to-day. Mr. Faran from the majority presented a bill to re-incorporate the Banks on the so-called Safety Fund principle, adopting as the basis of his scheme, the bill sometime since introduced by Mr. Bissell. Mr. Vance, from the minority of the committee, submitted an able and interesting report upon the subject of banking generally, with reference to the present wants of the State, accompanied by the House bill with amendments. The several reports of course go to the printer's; when returned we can speak of them more particularly. —State Journal.

Friday, March 12.—The House after debating an important proposition for two or three days, have to-day adopted it by a decisive vote. It was contained in an amendment to the appropriation bill for the public works, and provides in effect for an authorised suspension of the Banks, for one or two years, as the suspension of specie payments may be continued in the adjacent States, on condition that the Banks shall make a temporary loan to the State of one and a half million of dollars.—ib.

Amistad Africans.—A letter from Washington city, dated the 9th inst., states:

Mr. Justice Story delivered the opinion of the United States Court, this day, in regard to the case of the schooner Amistad. The decree of the Circuit Court of Connecticut is confirmed, except that part which ordered the negroes to be delivered to the President for transportation.—The cause was remanded to the Circuit Court, with directions to discharge the negroes from custody and allow them to go free.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, March 17.—Flour $3; wheat 50 cents.

PHILADELPHIA, March 9.—Flour—Prices continue depressed, with moderat sales. We quote Pennsylvania superfine Flour at 4,50 a 4,56 per bbl.

Provisions—The receipts from New Orleans have been to some extent this week. Pork continues low, but holders look for an advance.—Sales of about 30,000 lbs. bulk Pork on landing, at 6 cents. 60 hhds. old Shoulders, at a low price. New Bacon, the hog round, (loose,) 7½ cents.—Considerable sales Western Lard, in kegs and bbls. at 7 a 7½ cents per lb. Butter in kegs, at 7 a 8½ cents, as in quality.

Cattle Market—Beef Cattle; 377 in market; sold at 6,00 a 7,50; extra 8,00.—Bicknell.

PITTSBURGH, March 12.—Flour—Is plenty and dull, and few sales. From wagons 2,75 a 2,80, and for choice brands 2,87½; from stores 3,00 a 3,12½, and choice 3,25 per barrel.

Sugar—Sales of 22 hhds 7cts cash, currency; 5 hhds 7½c currency, and a large lot terms not transpired.

Molasses—Sales of 20 bbls at 30 cts.

Bacon—Plenty and few sales. 10 hhds hams at 7½ cts, 4 mos.

Iron and Nails—Flat Bar Iron, common sizes, per lb. 4 a 4½; do. smaller sizes, 4¾ a 6¼; Lock Iron 5; Round and Square Iron 4 a 7¾: Hoop Iron 4¾ a 8; Sheet Iron 6¼ a 7¾; Boiler Iron 6¼ a 7¾; Stove plates 7; Nail rods 6; Deck and Spike rods 5½; plough Slabs 5½; do. Wings 5½; 10, 12 16, and 20d nails 4¾; 8 and 9d 5; 5 and 6 inch spikes 5.—Harris.

BALTIMORE, March 6.—Flour—Sales of Howard Street Flour to the extent of 2 a 3000 bbls have been made this week from store, mostly for shipment. In the early part, 4,31½ was the price paid; but subsequently, to meet the views of buyers, holders conceded, and the larger portion of the sales were made at 4,25, which price we now quote.

Provisions—We hear of no transactions in Beef. Mess is held at 12,00 a 12,50; No 1, 10,00 a 10,50 and Prime, 11,50. The sales of bacon, chiefly Western, in small parcels, have been to some extent. Baltimore cured hams, 10 cts per lb. Sides 8 a 8¼; and shoulders 7½. Western, in lots of 5 to 10,000 lbs, of prime assorted, have sold at 7 a 7¼ cents per lb, cash and 4 mos., and 1,000 lbs, sides at 7½ cts. Sales of Lard from store, in lots of 1 a 200 kegs of prime No. 1, at 7 a 7¼ cts. 4 mos. Butter is not in demand but Western is offered at 7 a 8 cts, for Nos. 3 and 2, of good quality.

The Home Market—The market for Beef Cattle remains much as noticed in our last report about 200 head sold at 7 a 8 per 100 lbs.—Lyford.

U. S. Bank.—The balance sheet of the U. S. Bank, the same that we gave at length in the columns of the Reporter, and which had such an unfavorable effect on the stock, arrived in London, on the 5th of Feb. and created a strong sensation. The conclusions drawn from it says the London Times, "varied a good deal according to the interest different parties had in the result, but it required to have a strong bias on that score to take a favorable view of it, or even to adopt the belief that cash payments may be resumed with any prospect of their continuance."—Bicknell.

Important Disclosure by McLeod.—A letter from Lockport, dated the 22d ult., states that several gentlemen of that place have held conversations with McLeod lately, in which he disclosed the particulars of a plot which had been formed in Canada, at the time of the Caroline outrage was agreed upon, to set fire to Erie, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, and other towns on the American lines.

Resignation of the Governor.—Governor Woodbridge sent to the Legislature of Michigan, on the 23d ult., a communication accepting the office of United States Senator and resigning that of Governor. Mr. W. left Detroit the same day for Washington.

Ominious.—The wife of a zealous advocate for the election of Gen. Harrison who resides in Boston, presented her husband on Thursday morning, with two blooming daughters, as the first fruits of the new administration.

Murder.—On the 21st ult., a horrid murder was committed about four miles north-east of Centerville, Ia., on the body of a respectable young woman named Rachel Whitaker, by breaking her skull in several places with a club. A young man named George Kem has been arrested as the murderer.

A sore footed pedestrian, travelling in Ireland, met a man, and asked him, rather gruffly, why the miles were so plaguey long? when the Hibernian replied, "You see, yer honor, the roads are not in good condition, so we give very good measure."

The Deaf and Dumb.—We have been favored with the annual report of the Board of Directors of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb for 1840. It contains many interesting facts. We learn that on the 31st December, 1839, there were 118 pupils in the Institution, viz: 72 boys, 46 girls—and since that period 23 have been admitted, viz: 10 boys and 13 girls, and there remained on the 31st Jan. 63 boys and 47 girls,—total 110. Of the whole number 65 are supported by the State of Pennsylvania—16 by Maryland—8 by New Jersey—and 21 by their friends or by the Institution. No change has been made in the management of the establishment.—Phil. Chronicle.

The Rev. Dr. Elliott has been consecrated Bishop of Georgia for the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The Charleston Banks have refused to accept the terms proposed by the Legislature in the late Anti-suspension Law.

Industry Unrequited.—A loafer was arrested a night or two ago, in New York, and on searching him no less than eight hundred silk and cambric pocket handkerchiefs were found concealed about his person.

Be Cautious.—The house of Mr. Skelly of Gettysburg, Pa. was set on fire last week, from the reprehensible practice of keeping ashes in a wooden box.

E. P. Grant, Esq., has been elected Cashier of the Farmers' bank of Canton, Ohio, in the place of Lewis Fogle, Esq., resigned.

Steamboat Disaster, Lives Lost, &c.—The steamboat General Gaines arrived at New Orleans on the 24th ult. with the melancholy intelligence of the loss of the steamer Creole, with about one thousand bales of cotton, and is apprehended the destruction of twenty human beings.

An Episcopal minister is now located at Galveston, Texas, and a church has been regularly organized. Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian churches had been before establishd.

Broader Declarations of the British Ministers.—The British Minister in his place in Parliament, is reported to have declared in a subsequent stage of the debate on the McLeod affair, that the British Government fully and deliberately justified the act of burning the Caroline and the conduct of her captors on that occasion! He also stated that Mr. Stephenson and Mr. Forsyth had been officially notified that such was the feeling of the British Government; and that the latter had sent out final instructions to Mr. Fox to act in the matter.

This is indeed important. Deep anxiety will be felt for the next movement by Mr. Fox at Washington. The following are the exact words used by Lord Palmerston. He "considered the capture of the Caroline a perfectly justifiable proceeding, warranted by the necessity of defending her Majesty's territory."—(Loud cheers)—Bicknell.

Specie.—We understand from the Sentinel that there are persons engaged in this city in bringing suits against the Banks for the nonpayment of their notes in specie, and as soon as it is paid to them by the Banks, on the return day of the writ, go immediately to the brokers and sell the specie at a premium of 5 or 6 per cent for other notes, upon which they again commence new proceedings against the Banks. These are the persons who cry out lustily for a specie currency, and the moment they get any specie sell it for notes. We have heard of sums of specie as low as three dollars being offered for sale to the brokers. On some notes the premium obtained is much greater.—ib.

Imposition.—Some of the Boston news boys in the streets on Saturday, were busily employed in selling, for General Harrison's Inaugural address, the Inaugural speech of Thomas Jefferson, to which was appended the signature of William Henry Harrison. The sheet purported to be "The Ledger Extra." The hoax was soon discovered, and an end was put to the vile imposition by the proper authorities Such instances of rascality are becoming too common.—N. Y. Sun.

Money Matters at New Orleans.—At New Orleans on the 23d ult, specie was at 3½ a 4 per cent. premium; exchange on Philadelphia at par; United States Bank notes 7½ to 10 per cent. discount; United States Treasury notes 3¼ a 4 per cent. premium.

Printing Office Burnt.—The printing office of the Advertiser, published at Fayette, Miss., has been destroyed by fire, together with all the printing materials, books, files, accounts, &c.

An English editor, with much gravity says that the way they procure black writing ink in South Carolina, is by whipping the negroes until they cry and then catching the tears.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On the 18th ult., by the Rev. William Munhall, Mr. Elijah Berry to Miss Elmira Culp, both of Fairfield county, Ohio.

Business Department.

☞A protracted meeting will be held at the Springfield Chapel, in the neighborhood of this office, to commence to-morrow two weeks. Any help, from either ministers or laymen, which can be afforded, will be thankfully received. The members of the society, as they have been informed that Br. T. Mapel, of Green co., Penn., talks of visiting the neighborhood this spring, desire, if possible, that he should be here at the time of this meeting.

Our third quarterly meeting for Union circuit will be held the first and second days of May, coming, at Rushsylvania, on the Sandusky road, eight miles north of Bellfontaine, Logan co., O. We solicit the attendance of Brs. Bassett, Flood, Young and Guest. This is a new organization and chiefly from the old church, and being new we will need help. The door is being open for us at Mechanicsburgh, Champaign county, owing to the exercise of clerical power.

I. C. Hunt, Sup

Br. Stockton will please credit the following persons for the Christian World and charge us.

W. Marshall, Zanesville, O.,	$1,25
John Parker, " "	1,00
Moses Sarchit, Cambridge, Guern., O.,	1,00

The latter is a new subscriber and wants his papers from the 1st. No. Mr. Parker, above, takes the paper of Hugh Elliott, Chandlersville, Ohio, which you will please transfer to him at Zanesville. Br. Marshall wants his two first numbers as he has not received them.

Mr. Editor: Please give notice of the following additional appointments for the undersigned:

April 4, Cincinnati station.
" 11, " circuit.
" 18, Rehoboth "
" 25, Washington "
May 2, Springfield "
" 9, Xenia "

Respectfully, yours,
A. H. Bassett.

Br. Ragan is requested to make his arrangements so as to visit Zanesville circuit about the middle of May, as the third quarterly meeting will be held about that time.

W. Munhall, Sup.

Mr. Raney never gave us notice to discontinue his paper, and we have sent it him half this year, and he is bound to pay us. Will Br. Marshall present our bill?

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS,

EXPLANATORY OF THE REASONS AND PRINCIPLES OF GOVERNMENT.

PREFIXED BY THE PUBLISHER,

TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

ARTICLE I.

GOD, as the common FATHER of mankind, has created all men free and equal, and the proper equality and social freedom of the great brotherhood of the human race, in view of the gifts and grants of the CREATOR, are to be inferred from all His dispensations to men. Every man, by the charter of his creation, is the equal of his contemporaries; the essential rights of every generation are the same. Man as the child of God's creation, continues man immutably, under all circumstances; and the rights of ancestry are those of posterity. Man has claims, which it becomes his duty to assert, in right of his existence, such as the indefeasible right of thinking and acting for himself, when thought and action do not infringe the rights of another, as they never will, when truth and justice are made the basis of human intercourse. These rights, common to the great family of man, cannot be abolished by concession, statute, precedent, or positive institution; and when wrested or withheld from the multitude of mankind, by their RULERS, may be reclaimed by the people, whenever they see proper to do it.

ARTICLE II.

Man was created for society, his natural rights are adapted to the social state, and under every form of society, constitute properly, the foundation of his civil rights. When man becomes a member of civil society, he submits to a modification of some of his natural rights, but he never does, he never can, relinquish them. He concedes the exercise of these rights, for his own and the general good, but does not, cannot, cast them off. His rights receive a new direction, but do not terminate; and that government which deprives man of rights, justly claimed in virtue of his creation, and interwoven with the constitution of his nature, and the interests of society, denies to him the gifts of his CREATOR, and must be unjust.—GOD can be the author of no government, contravening the wisdom of His arrangements, in the creation of man.

ARTICLE III.

In every community there is a power, which receives the denomination of sovereignty, a power not subject to control, and that controls all subordinate powers in the government. Now, whether this power be in the hands of the many, or the few, it is indubitably certain, that those members only of the community are free, in whom the sovereign power resides. The power of a community is essential to its freedom, and if this power be confined to a few, freedom is necessarily confined to the same number. All JUST government must be founded upon the nature of man, and should consult alike the natural rights, civil wants, and moral interests of his being. All rightful authority is founded in power and law; all just power is founded in right, and as one man's natural right to the character of LAWGIVER, is to all intents, as good as another's, it follows, that all legitimate law must have its origin in the expressed will of the many.

ARTICLE IV.

As all men are essentially EQUAL, in their rights, wants and interests, it follows from these that representative government is the only legitimate human rule, to which any people can submit. It is the only kind of government that can possibly reconcile, in any consistent way, the claims of authority, with the advantages of LIBERTY. A prescriptive legislative body, making laws without the knowledge or consent of the people to be governed by them is a DESPOTISM. Legislators without constituents, or peers and fellows, deputing them, as their representatives and actors—thus constituting themselves a legislature beyond the control of the people, is an exhibition of TYRANNY in one of its most DANGEROUS forms. In the momentous affairs of government, nothing should be made the exclusive property of a FEW, which by right, belongs to ALL, and may be safely and advantageously used by the rightful proprietors. The justice of every government depends essentially upon the original consent of the people; this privilege belongs to every community, in rights of the law of nature; and no man, or multitude of men, can alter, limit, or diminish it. Constitutional law is an expression of the will of the people, and their concurrence in its formation, either personally, or by representation, is essential to its legitimate authority.

ARTICLE V.

No community can be said, without mockery, to have a constitution, where there is a consolidation of the different powers of government in the hands of the same men, and the remaining portion are left of course, WITHOUT ANY SECURITY FOR THEIR RIGHTS. Such a case, presents an absolute GOVERNMENT; a government of men, not principles. A constitution is not the creature of government; the nature of things renders it impossible that it should be an act of government. In strict propriety, it exists anterior to government; government is based upon, proceeds from, and is the creature of the constitution. A constitution contains the elements and principles of government and fixes the nature and limits of its form and operations; but it is an instrument distinct from government, and by which government is controlled. It is a preliminary act of the people, in the creation of government. It sustains to government the same relation that laws do to the judiciary; the latter is not the source of law, cannot make laws, or annul them, but is subject to, and governed by law. A constitution recognizes the right of the people, and provides for their assertion and maintainance. It settles the principles and maxims of Government. It fixes the LANDMARKS OF LEGISLATION. It is the sovereign voice of the people, giving LAW and LIMIT to themselves and their representatives.

ARTICLE VI.

A government uniting the legislative, judicial and executive powers in the hands of the same men, is an ABSURDITY in theory, and in practice, TYRANNY. The executive power, in every government, should be subordinate to the legislative, and the judicial independent of both. Whenever, therefore, it happens, that these three departments of government are in the hands of the same body of men, and these men not the representatives of the people, first making the laws, then executing them, finally the sole judges, of their own acts, there is no liberty, the people are VIRTUALLY ENSLAVED, and liable to be ruined at any time. In a government, civil or ECCLESIASTICAL, where the same men are legislators, administrators and judges, in relation to all the laws, and every possible application of them, the people, whether well or ill treated, are, in fact SLAVES; for the only remedy against such a DESPOTISM—is REVOLT. No constitution can be presumed a good one, embodying the principles of correct government, which does not sufficiently guard against the chances and possibility of mal-administration. All absolute governments owe their character to the manner in which they are administered; whereas, in a representative government, with proper CHECKS and BALANCES, it is the interest, even of the vicious to promote the general welfare, by conforming to the laws. The greater the equality, established among men by government, the more virtue and happiness will prevail; for where the voluntary consent of the governed is the basis of government, interest and duty combine to promote the COMMON WEAL.

ARTICLE VII.

Every community should be the asserter and guardian of its own rights. No government can be administered to the advantage of the governed, for any considerable length of time, unless the people retain sufficient power in their own hands to COMPEL their rulers to act correctly. When a government is so constructed, that its acts are final, and preclude remedy by appeal to the people, its principles are unjust, and its administration cannot fail to be injurious;— a virtuous administration can never change, or redeem the vicious principles of a government. And whenever the subjects of a government, whose legislative, executive and judicial functions, pertain to a few, independent of the choice of the people, find themselves aggrieved and oppressed by the conduct of their rulers, without any constitutional remedy for the redress of existing evils, it then becomes the duty, and is the imprescriptable right of that people, to CONTROL their rulers by extra judicial measures.

ARTICLE VIII.

Where all the power and forms of government are held and managed by a few, who act without delegated right by consent of the people, the authority of the rulers is absolute, and the people are disfranchised of all right, in the various relations existing between them, as subjects, and those who hold the reins of goverment. Such a government must always lead to mental debility, will depress the moral vigor of a people, and necessarily abridge the liberty of reasoning and investigation. In all governments of this kind, right is the creature of FORTUNE, and the slave of CAPRICE. Those who live under a government, which denies to the people the right of representation, blindly engage to submit to the will of others, RIGHT or WRONG, and must continue to do so, or else deprive themselves of all the advantages of the community in which they live, in order to get rid of its evils. The enactment of all laws and rules, therefore, should be with and by the consent of the people, and their execution strictly under their CONTROL.

ARTICLE IX.

The right to be represented, where law is made to govern, is not only essential to civil freedom, but is equally the basis of religious liberty. Civil and religious liberty are intimately connected, they usually live and die together, and he who is the FRIEND of one, cannot consistently be the ENEMY of the other. If liberty, as is admitted on all hands, is the perfection of civil society, by what right can religious society become dispoiled of this CROWNING EXCELLENCE of the social state? The New Testament furnishes the principles, but not the forms of church government; and in the adaptation of forms to these principles, christian bodies should be governed mainly by the few facts and precedents, furnished in the Apostolic writings. The will and mind of the GREAT HEAD OF THE CHURCH, on this subject, so far as clearly revealed, whether by express statute, or fair implication, cannot be contravened without impiety; but in relation to a variety of topics, connected with the internal police and external relation to the church, on which the scriptures are silent, it is left to every christian community to adopt its own regulations, and the same is true of nations. Ministers and private christians, according to the New Testament, are entitled to equality of rights and privileges—an identity of interest implies an equality of rights. A monopoly of power, therefore, by the ministry, is a USURPATION of the rights of the people. No power on the part of the ministry, can deprive the people legitimately of their elective and representative rights; as the ministry cannot think and act for the people, in matters of principle and conviction, so neither can they legislate for them except as their authorized representatives.

ARTICLE X.

The government of every christian church should be strictly a government of principle, in relation to the governed; and every private christian is as deeply and reasonably interested as the ministry. DOMINION OVER CONSCIENCE is the most absurd of human pretentions. The assumption that absolute power in the affairs of church government, is a sacred deposite in the hands of the MINISTRY, libels the genius and charities of the New Testament. Whenever a christian people place themselves under a ministry, who claims the right of thinking and deciding for them, in matters of faith and morality, they are guilty of IMPIETY, however unintentional, to the GREAT HEAD OF THE CHURCH, inasmuch as it is required of every christian, to reflect and determine for himself, in all such cases, and the duty cannot be performed by another. And those ministers who aim at a principality of this kind, in the personal concerns of FAITH and PRACTICE, are plainly guilty of usurped dominion over the rights and consciences of the PEOPLE.

ARTICLE XI.

EXPEDIENCY and RIGHT are different things. Nothing is expedient that is unjust. Necessity and convenience may render a form of government useful and effective for a time, which afterwards, under a change of circumstances, and an accumulation of responsibility, may become oppressive and intolerable. That system of things, which cannot be justified by the word of GOD, and the common sense of mankind, can never be expedient. Submission to power, gradually and insidiously usurped, should seldom or never be received as proof of the legitimate consent of the people, to the peculiar form of government, by which they are oppressed; as such submission may be the result of principles, attachments and energies, which owe their existence to causes foreign from the government, which is supposed to produce them. Peaceable submission by the people, to a system of government, can never be construed into a proper approval of it, as one of their own choice; for, as men by birth and education, may become the subjects of a form of civil government they do not approve, so thousands may be born into the KINGDOM OF GOD, and nurtured in His family, under forms of ecclesiastical polity, materially inconsistent with the LIGHTS and NOTICES of revelation on this subject. The continued sufferance and submission of the people, so far from proving the DIVINE right of those who govern, does not even furnish proof of any right at all, except the claim which arises from mere FORBEARANCE.

ARTICLE XII.

Without insisting upon those portions of the New Testament, which go directly against the right of the ministry, to exclusive rule, the well known indefiniteness of its language, on the subject of church government, should admonish the claimants of such power, that their pretentions cannot be sustained. Nevertheless, in all ages since the apostolic, and in all parts of the world, with but few exceptions, a large majority of those calling themselves christian ministers, have shown a disposition both in ecclesiastical and civil affairs, to maintain an influence in matters of government, independent of the people, and to suppress the right of inquiry and freedom of discussion. And this is readily accounted for, by adverting to the fact, that the liberty of thinking and acting, and especially the free expression of opinion, have always lessened the influence of ministerial pretensions, and abridged the claims of an aspiring ministry to irresponsible domination. It is lamentably true that in a thousand instances, in the various divisions of PAPAL and PROTESTANT CHRISTENDOM, oppression has been exercised under pretence of duty, and professed veneration for the dead; and their doings, and an earnest contention for pre-existing customs has been urged, as sufficient reasons for withholding the rights of the people, and lording it over GOD'S heritage.

ARTICLE XIII.

It is true, to a great extent, that throughout all the divisions of the Christian world, INTELLECT has taken but comparatively little hold of the subject of religion, and still less o the subject of church GOVERNMENT, and this affords the ministry an opportunity of misleading the people on the subject of their rights, and in but too many instances, they resign themselves the passive subjects of their religious teachers, without once inquiring whether, in doing so, they do not dishonor the GREAT HEAD OF THE CHURCH in His members. Christian ministers are men of like passions with other men, they are equally liable to err and become depraved; they should not be watched with an eye of malignant jealousy, but their errors, oppressions and usurpations should be met and resisted by the people, with confidence and firmness. The people should teach their rulers that they will find them alike free from the spirit of faction, and the tameness of servility. They should let them know, that with every disposition to render proper obedience, they are determined not to be OPPRESSED.

ARTICLE XIV.

Whenever the members of a church resign the right of suffrage, and of discussing freely and fearlessly the conduct of their rulers, whether it be done by direct concession, or indirectly by attaching themselves to, and continuing within the pale of a church, where such a system of polity obtains, they renounce to a fearful extent one of the first principles of the PROTESTANT RELIGION and bring dishonor upon its name. Whenever spiritual rulers attempt to check a perfectly free communication of thoughts and feelings among the people,—when the lips and the pens of the laity are interdicted, without their oversight and license; when they attempt to repress honest convictions and free inquiry; when their disapprobation is shown to all, who do not support them, and their displeasure incurred by the diffusion of intelligence among the people, not calculated to increase their power and reputation; then it becomes the duty of the people, to decline their oversight, as men unworthy to rule the CHURCH OF GOD. The rock on which the church has split for ages, is that the sovereign power to regulate all ecclesiastical matters, (not decided by the Scriptures, and which of right belongs to a Christian community as such,) has by a most mischievous and unnatural policy, misnamed EXPEDIENCY, been transferred to the hands of a few Ministers, who have been in part, the partricians of the MINISTRY, and the ARISTOCRACY of the Church.

ARTICLE XV.

Government as a fixed and stable cause in the progress of human affairs, is finally productive of a large amount of good or evil; it is strictly in its operation, a moral cause, in the formation of character; for it necessarily presents circumstances and considerations, in the light of reasons and motives which lead to results in the formation of character, that become habitual and permanent. The good of all concerned, therefore, should be the object proposed in the adoption of any form of government; and when a system of government is adopted, which calls off the attention of the governed from the general welfare, by depriving them of all control in the enactment and execution of the laws, the natural and unavoidable tendency of a government of this description, is vicious and demoralizing: and such, are the character and influence of all non-elective governments. The members of a community, who place themselves under the exclusive control of a few irresponsible persons, as their sole masters, in matters of government, thus tamely depriving themselves of the right of representation, and even of existence, except by EXPATRIATION, betray a criminal negligence of their best interest, and great inattention to the general welfare, and all governments recognizing such a distinction, contravene necessarily the influence of enlightened conviction and independent inquiry.

ARTICLE XVI.

Any government that does not allow the people to meet, deliberate and decide upon matters that concern themselves, is evidently oppressive. For those who are not the representatives of the people, to make laws for them, and then deny them the freedom of candid inquiry and honest animadversion, is a measure, as irrational as it is unjust. The maxim which assumes, that the ministry have a right to rule and dictate exclusively, in the great concerns of RELIGION, is the fruitful source of implicit faith which tamely and without inquiry, receives instruction at the hands of men as AUTHORATIVE and final—impiously receiving "for doctrines, the commandments of men, and perverting the ORACLES OF GOD." When the ministry judge and determine for the people, without their legitimate concurrence, as matter of right, conformity becomes a question of policy, instead of resulting from conscience and principle. A government which denies to the governed, the right to inquire, remonstrate, and demand withheld justice—which from its structure and operation is calculated to darken the understanding and mislead the judgment, and thus compel obedience to its measures, in the great interests of right and wrong, must be essentially unjust, and ought not to be submitted to.

ARTICLE XVII.

No power possesses so fatal a principle of increase and ACCUMULATION in itself, as ecclesiastical power. Its facilities for reproduction and multiplication are many and fearful, and should be vigilantly guarded against by all, who consider the image of God, as closely connected with the rights of man. And whenever the growth and manifestation of this power, in any of its innumerable forms and modes of operation, shall clearly amount to an invasion of christian rights, the injured and oppressed, should resist the encroachment with manly decision and unyielding remonstrance. In every church, where the principle of representation is excluded in the affairs of its government, the right of private judgment becomes a nullity, and faith and practice are, necessarily, to a great extent, the offspring of prescription. The right of deciding what are the will and mind of GOD, in matters of faith and discipline, by prescriptive interpretation, is conceded in the scriptures to no man, or body of men exclusively; of course, the right of judgment belongs to all, equally and inalienably, and when the ministry avail themselves of the indifference, inattention or ignorance of the people, brought under their charge from time to time, to constitute themselves their LEGISLATIVE MASTERS and EXECUTIVE GUARDIANS, they usurp the dominion of conscience, and although never complained of, are de facto religious TYRANTS, because they assume and exercise rights, that do not, and cannot in the nature of things, belong to them. It should not be overlooked, moreover, that when the ministry are considered by the laity, as the sole judges and depositories of faith and discipline, the people lose the only powerful motive, the only direct incentive, they can possibly have, to inquire and decide for themselves in the infinitely momentous concerns of TRUTH and DUTY. Such a monopoly of power, by the ministry, tends directly to mental debasement, consequent INDECISION of character, INSINCERITY and MISGUIDED ZEAL.

ARTICLE XVIII.

That form of ecclesiastical polity under which the revenues of the church proceed from the people, when they have no participation in the enactment of its laws, furnishes no proper constitutional BALANCE OF POWER; for the legislative counsel of the church consisting of the ministry alone, have it in their power, at any time, to render the contributions of the people to an amount sufficient for their competent supply and even their influence, not a voluntary service but a condition of membership, when such government ceases to be free, and necessarily becomes tyrannical. Any government which places the public property of the governed in the hands of its rulers, so that it must proceed from their gift exclusively, without any constitutional negative in its appropriation on the part of the people, is unjust and vicious in its nature. Property is dominion held in right of power, and if in the hands of a few, the balance of government is destroyed, by enabling them to control the destiny of the whole. As it is the duty of every community to support those, who are only called to the administration of its affairs, so it is plainly a matter of right, that the will of the people should determine the necessary amount of supplies, and the mode of their ASSESSMENT and COLLECTION.

ARTICLE XIX.

Punishments should never be inflicted in any community, except when strictly necessary, and plainly called for by the PUBLIC GOOD; and in all cases the infliction should be according to law. All punishments proceeding from the regular administration of constitutional law, should be submitted to without resistance.

ARTICLE XX.

The subjects of all governments have a right to know the official acts and doings of their agents and officers, and to demand their publication accordingly.

ARTICLE XXI.

The vindication of an injured people, in a contention for their rights, is furnished by the SHAMEFUL denial of their EXISTENCE.

ARTICLE XXII.

Any movement by the oppressed, to recover their rights, will be resisted by those who have oppressed them; but suffering and persecution, in a cause which the love of GOD and MAN requires, should be FEARLESSLY MET AND RESOLUTELY BORNE.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.—Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

☞For sale at the store of POTTS & GRAHAM.

CONTRADICTORY PRAYER.

O! thou great and bountiful giver of blessings, both temporal and spiritual, do thank and praise thy holy name, the glorious light of the gospel, which been the blessed means of opening our s, to see our danger, and of leading poor souls to a knowledge of pardon acceptance with thee. Yes, Lord, we praise thee that we are brought from disgraceful paths of sin, and are plain thy house where we can hear thy vants dispense the word of life to our peakable joy. And we praise thee also the abundance of the good things of life, and especially since we have ned from our follies to serve thee, and en to, and feast our souls on the blessed pel, preached by thy servants, thou s greatly increased our temporal bles-gs. O! Lord, we beseech thee to cone these thy great favors towards us our children, on the same terms we received them, i. e. without money & nout price. Bless the preachers, who e forsaken all worldly pursuits, their r wives and children, and brook the ms of winter and heat of summer, to our poor souls with the bread of life.
s them and their families with every fort of this life. But O! Lord, we thee have us excused from giving n, according as thou hast prospered us, we have children, and are bound to ide and lay up for them, and can al's find some way to make use of every and dollar in our family. We there-pray thee, O! Lord, to provide for the cher and his children some way or er.

! Lord, we do feel deeply concerned poor sinners; thousands and millions treading the downward road to eterruin. O! our blessed Jesus, thou hast d them so well as to die for them, and re as we love thee we must love poor ers too. We therefore pray thee O!
d, to send thy servants far and near to sinners to the gospel feast, yea, Lord, nem go to the ends of the earth, that all ons may hear of Christ, But, O! good kind father, pardon us for contribu-little or nothing to support thy ser-s in this great and glorious work, for have thought we ought to provide for own house-hold, or be worse than in-
s. And as to the preachers' house-
, we read that they that preach the el shall live of the gospel, we there-rely on thy word, "shall live" as a mise from God, and of course he will and clothe them, some way, and free male and female from giving a cent.
! Lord, we do love thy gospel, and e that preach it, above all things.—
s it Lord, to the conversion of our children and neighbors, for we know its divine influence on their souls will e loving and obedient children and and kind neighbors. And probably e of our neighbors may be inclino remember the preachers. O! bles-
Lord, we do thank thee, that we are nder the dominion, of popish power;
we enjoy mutual rights, in our branch he church, as well as in the state.—
pray thee to continue these blessings us, and do bless the preachers, who e forsaken all to support these inval-e privileges, and give them wisdom courage to spread them far and near.
Lord, rain manna from heaven to feed n and their families, and give them t to the full, and let not their gar-ts wax old. We know that thou art same yesterday, to-day and forever.— finally, O! Lord, save us all from etousness, which is idolatry. O! save rom the love of the present world, for know thou hast said, if any man love world, the love of the father is not in . Save us from a penurious, selfish, inconsistent spirit, and thine shall be he glory, now and forever more—

FFICIAL CHURCH DOCUMENTS.—Two young residents of Pittsburgh, having applied to Pittsburgh quarterly conference for license to ch, their application was rejected by that . On which they connected themselves with Pittsburgh circuit, which lies in the neighood of Pittsburgh, and applying to the quarconference thereof were licensed. A com-ee of the former quarterly conference remoned to the Annual Conference against such eedings; that body took the following action the subject, viz: ED.

e highly appreciate the views and motives he Pittsburgh quarterly conference, as exed by their committee in the remonstrance e alluded to, and believe, that, was the e objected to, by them, established as a edent, it would, indeed, open a wide door to chy in our church; Therefore esolved, 1st. By the Pittsburgh Annual Con-ce of the M. P. Church, That the matter plained of by the Pittsburgh quarterly con-ce, although not necessarily involving the ns concerned in censure, is nevertheless a edent of injurious tendency, as opening a for anarchy and for conflict between differ-parts of our fellowship: that it is an evasion e true spirit and intent of our rule of dis-ne, on the subject, and that our executive ers be respectfully urged to guard against an anomalous course of administration, h would probably have an injurious influence our religious community.
esolved 2d. That we affectionately advise brethren, who are members of quarterly con-ces in circuits and stations, never to evade meeting for business when lawfully called, lest this too should tend to anarchy and confusion.

(Signed) Z. RAGAN, Pres't.
Geo. Hughes, Sec'y.
A. K. Earl, Ass't.

The quarterly conference of Pittsburgh station held March 8, 1841, adopts the proceedings of the Annual Conference as follows:

Resolved 1. That this quarterly conference approves of the action of the Annual Conference, on the subject of the Protest of this conference, in the case of brethren ——— and ———, and that the same be entered on the minutes of this quarterly conference.

Resolved 2. That the editor of the Western Recorder be requested to publish forthwith the said action of the Annual Conference.

Resolved 3d. That we respectfully refer the brethren of the Pittsburgh circuit quarterly conference to the above published record, as our answer to their communication of February 8, 1841. (Signed) GEO. BROWN, Pres't.
John L. Sands, Sec'y.

For the Western Recorder.

I send you these few lines for publication, if you think proper.

I once saw the bark of hickory put on young apple trees as a preventive from injury by sheep or calves. I had two or three trees injured in that manner, partially; a covering of hickory bark was applied. It remained on between two and three years. The 2d and 3d years the growth was more luxuriant than other adjacent trees without the covering. This induced a trial on two trees that appeared to be dying. The result was, that the first year they revived a little, the second, they grew greener and shot forth more branches than they had for several years before. This was last year. The manner of doing it is this: about the last of May, when the bark runs freely, cut a young hickory around near the root, then about 4 or 5 feet high,—split the bark down,—take your axe and slip it in under the bark, run it around, and you have it ready to cover a tree a little smaller than the one it was taken from. Will you, or any of your readers try the experiment and give the result?

A SUBSCRIBER.

For the Western Recorder.

Editor of the "Western Recorder:" I herewith inclose you two dollars for the second year's pay for your paper, and tender you my hearty wishes for the welfare of you and yours.

I like that fair play system that you give parties, when attacked thro' the medium of the "Recorder," for it is the very mode, in which to establish certainty, as to the subject matter in controversy: and so far as truth is before error, so far is the system that elicits truth better than its opposite, the suppressing system,—either in part, or in whole.

I am pleased with the encouragement that you give to those persons who are just commencing to write for the public. I would say to you, Mr. Editor, be patient with such and buoy them up on your shoulders. We are in our infancy, in point of education, and in most of our institutions, comparatively speaking, but we have genius: this granted, we want next to have a field for genius to operate in, and I conceive that the columns of a free newspaper are pretty well adapted, for all subjects, that do not require the dimensions of a book.

I noticed among other articles some few on the subject of baptism. They were all of them imperfect; were not from the hands of a master.—I wish I knew how to provoke the Editor of the "Recorder" to publish his thoughts on the subject at full length, in some few consecutive papers. I am in hopes you will have time within a year, as you promised you would leave off some or all, of your agricultural pursuits, in favor of your editorial labor: thereon I hang my hope. I am certain I would not be the sole gainer; many would feel edified on that all engrossing subject. I want a master to go over the whole field without prejudice, that is, to bring forward all the proof pro. and con. as far as the Bible will furnish materials, and no farther, without regard to the consequences, though it might tend to change the opinion of some of the very "Elect." A great number of your readers would like to hear from you on Baptism. Satisfy good desires if practicable; not otherwise.

I was well pleased to meet with the President's and Governor of Onio's annual Messages in the columns of the "Recorder" sooner than in either of my two political papers. The religious intelligence is cheering, it seems, almost in every quarter. Still, crime abounds most frightfully. It would seem that we are threatened with war to cap the climax of crime and misfortune. Oh, when shall we look for the golden era of general brotherhood!

Respectfully, yours, WM. J. ROBINSON.
COSHOCTON CO., O., MARCH 4, 1841.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MIDDLETOWN, VA., FEB. 24, 1841.

Br. Springer: Our second quarterly meeting has just closed. Brs. R. Simonton and S. Clawson were with us. We had a good meeting.—Sinners were convicted and some converted to God. Three united with us, which makes 68 since I last wrote to you.

We have a good state of religious feeling in all the classes. My colleague, Br. Cullen, is a pleasant associate, faithful in the discharge of his duties, and unexceptable as a preacher. Our unstationed brethren are laborious, especially P. T. Laishley and Asby Pool. Peace dwells in our borders. The preachers are well sustained. We move on harmoniously. This circuit has 27 appointments, 20 classes, 894 members. Our principles of government are understood and appreciated by the people in this country.

Our friends requested me to solicit the Conference Missionary, Br. Reeves, to visit this circuit at Middletown as soon as it will suit his convenience. If he will say through the Recorder, or by letter to me at Polsey's Mills, Monongalia, Virginia, three or four weeks before he comes, I will appoint a protracted meeting at Middletown for him. I hope he will not fail to visit us, as we have so much need of help.

Yours, respectfully,
THOS. J. ADDIS.

RUDDLE'S MILLS, KY., MARCH 3, 1841.

Br. Springer: We held our first quarterly meeting at Ruddle's Mills on the 7th and 8th of November last, at which time we were favored with the assistance of Brs. E. Newton and P. Smith, who labored faithfully with us during our meeting. The Lord reward them.

Our second quarterly meeting was held on Beaver, (the only appointment or preaching place I have in conjunction with the former,) the 23d and 24th of January last. We had no particular excitement, but good impressions I hope were made, and such too as will be lasting. I greatly rejoice that the Lord has been in some measure with us. There has been nine accessions from the world and two from the Old church. May the Lord pour out His spirit here, and more abundantly revive His work in this part of His vineyard.

Last Saturday and Sabbath we were blessed with the labors of our President, Br. Bassett, whose faithful exercises will not soon be forgotten by the large audiences that convened together from time to time.

Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Ruddle's Mills on the 29th and 30th of May next. We invite and earnestly solicit the assistance of Brs. S. H. Euans, E. Newton and D. Hannah, and all of the ministeral friends that can conveniently get here. We hope the brethren will remember our utter destitution in reference to efficient help. We have not so much as an exhorter to assist us.

Yours, in Christ, J. G. L., Sup.

MORGAN CO., O., MARCH 11, 1841.

Br. Springer: By way of quarterly report, I can, with pleasure, state, that the Lord in His tender mercies is still our supporter and comforter. Our second quarterly meeting was held at Bethel, commencing on the 7th of February and closing on the 10th. Brs. D. Y. Ostrom and S. Thompson came to our assistance; and the meeting was orderly and well attended, and there appeared a time of union in conference and devotional exercises. Religious excitement was not so high with us as on former occasions, yet many souls were filled with holy rapture and overflowing love, and our love-feast was truly a feast of love. Eight persons united with us—one from the old fellowship, and 7 from the Reformed or Independent Methodists. These people took their rise in the eastern States: one of their principle ministers, who now resides in the east, is known by the name of Elder Bailey. They having settled in this county, and being destitute of ministerial aid of their own order, have adopted our book of discipline, and were received into our fellowship by a vote of the quarterly conferene. They being a people of respectability both in church and state, located where they are, will doubtless form a nucleus around which, through the blessing of Heaven, a large society may be formed, which may shine as a light to the world.

Since our quarterly meeting we held a protracted meeting at the new class above Pisgah, and it was a time of reformation, for which to Christ belongs the praise: twelve united with us. Last year our accessions were principally to the prominent classes; and this was perhaps owing to the blessing of the Lord upon the anxious and willing manner in which they encouraged and supported protracted meetings. This year our accessions which are encouraging, mostly embrace new ground, and they are consequently doing much in filling up the symmetry of the circuit. We think there was much propriety in calling for an assistant: his labors are valuable.

Our president, Br. Z. Ragan, is informed that our presidential meeting will be held at the Pisgah meeting house, and will commence on Friday evening, April 2d. May the Lord prepare us all for the work we have to do for time and eternity. Yours, &c., C. WOODRUFF, Sup.

WAYNESBURGH, PA., MARCH 12, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having a little leisure time, and some religious intelligence to communicate, which we think will be interesting to the readers of your excellent paper, we, therefore, embrace this opportunity to inform the friends of Zion generally, and those identified with us in particular, that the Lord is still with us, and that to bless, in this portion of His moral vineyard.

In our last communication, we stated, that our prospects were of an encouraging character, and, blessed be God, we were not mistaken; our anticipations have been already realized to some extent. At a protracted meeting, recently held at Strawsnider's school house, about ten miles south of this, the Lord was present to the great joy of many souls. The hearts of God's people were encouraged and made to rejoice in witnessing the return of a number of their wandering fellows from sin's destructive ways, to the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls. Sinners were converted—mourners comforted—lukewarm christians re-animated—careless sinners alarmed—in a word, the cause of Christ received an impetus, the effects of which, we believe, will be seen and felt by some, not only in time, but through all eternity. We were favored with the labors of Br. John Clarke, of Brownsville circuit, who labored with much zeal, acceptability and profit during the meeting. Our old side friends, in the neighborhood, united with us in the good work, and all was harmony and peace. The meeting resulted in the union of sixteen members to our church, and two to the old church;—and more are expected. To God be all the praise,—the bliss is ours.

We have recently returned from a very interesting meeting held at Bridgeport, Brownsville circuit. Brs. Robinson and Davis were in attendance. Here, also, the church was much revived, a number of souls converted, and much good resulted from the labors of God's people.—We left before the meeting closed; eleven joined the church before we left, and we have learned since that five more were added afterwards, making in all, sixteen. Brethren, if the means are faithfully attended to, the good work must and will go on. O, may the period soon arrive, when all shall know Him, whom to know aright, is life eternal! Yours, &c., J. HOPWOOD.

CLEARFIELD CO., PA., MARCH 1, 1840.

Br. Springer: Our second quarterly meeting commenced on February the 20th and continued to the 25th. Backsliders were reclaimed and sinners converted, one of which was considered a Saul of Tarsus by the community, and by the church. He was a wealthy man and a persecuter, but the power of God brought him to tremble and cry for mercy at the foot of the Cross.—By profession he was a Seceder.

There is, in progress, a revival of the work of God, eight miles from Indiana, at which place thirty-two have been happily converted to God, and thirty-four have joined the church, all from the world.

I wish to say to my kind friends, on Mahoning circuit, that we have blessed times. I also would say to Br. Ragan, I hope he will not forget us. Yours, &c., W. M. MCCULLOUGH.

BROWNSVILLE, O., MARCH 12, 1841.

Br. Springer: We commenced a protracted meeting on last Saturday at Brushy Fork, which closed on last evening. This was one among the best meetings I ever attended. The church took hold of the work in good earnest, and the power of God took hold on sinners and they were led to cry aloud for mercy. Ten were, I trust, converted to God, and ten united with the church. Others returned home inquiring for Him of whom "Moses in the law and the Prophets did write."

Yours, &c., WM. MUNHALL.

ATHENS, OHIO, FEBRUARY 23, 1841.

Br. Springer: Though prospects were discouraging when I came to this circuit, they are, at present, improving. We have received some into the church, and have a prospect of more.—We have some good members on this circuit, but, as a church, we are little known in this quarter. Yours, in haste, M. SCOTT.

Mr. Editor: Please give notice of the following additional appointments for the undersigned:

April 4, Cincinnati station.
" 11, " circuit.
" 18, Rehoboth "
" 25, Washington "
May 2, Springfield "
" 9, Xenia "

Respectfully, yours,

TO BORROWERS.

If e'er you borrow of a friend
A book or so, to read,
Despatch it quick, and careful send
It home with all due speed.

By doing so you'll always find,
He'll not refuse to lend
A second, to improve your mind,
And thus you'll keep your friend.

But if, perchance, you make too free,
And keep it as your own,
'Twill not quite just and upright be,
For such a kindness shown.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

AMUSEMENTS FOR CHILDREN.

BY AN APPRENTICE BOY.

Two little boys often met one another in the room adjoining that in which I work. They are about eight or nine years old. The name of the oldest is Charles; that of the other Eden.

Charles is the son of an industrious and moral tradesman. The instruction which he receives is imparted to him by his father and Sabbath school teacher. The father of Eden, formerly an estimable merchant and good citizen, is now a pest, avoided by all. Alas! intemperance has ruined his good name, and destroyed his noble faculties.

An intimacy has grown up between the two boys, and they often meet through the week, and always in the Sabbath School.

I have observed that their amusements are mostly profitable.

One day, after growing tired of noisy play, they sat down on a bench, and Charles took up a book and began turning the leaves. As he turned them, he called on Eden to say which of the objects represented by the pictures he preferred. The properties and advantages of the horse and the cow, the lamb and the pig, the vessel and the wagon were discussed, as each of the boys contended for the greater usefulness of the object of his choice. At length Charles turned a leaf which displayed a fine house and the Bible. Charles quickly, and with earnestness, remarked that he preferred the Bible.

"Why so," demanded Eden. "Why would you prefer a book to this fine house?"

"I do not prize it simply as a book," replied Charles; "but I think the Bible of more value than all houses in this town. My Sabbath School teacher gave me a beautiful present for reading it through the past year; and I learn from it that mansions are prepared in heaven for all that love God:—That our Lord Jesus Christ descended from heaven to die for sinners:—That wicked men crucified him: That in his death he finished an atonement for sin, and all that believe on his name can be saved;—That he rose from the dead and ascended to his Father, in the New Jerusalem, the Holy city of our God. Now the house you see here would not accommodate but few persons, while the Bible offers the privileges of heaven and the mansions above to all people, for "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth." For a short time only, will this house be of use to us; for I read in my Bible that we must all die; but the mansions in heaven will continue forever. And the Bible informs us how we may prepare for death. When we go down to the silent grave, if we possess ever so many fine houses they can be of no advantage to us whatever. But if we love the Bible, and fulfil its requirements, when our bodies die, our souls shall ascend to God and be forever happy. And throughout eternity the truths of this blessed Book will increase in interest, as we learn more of the character and ways of its Divine Author."

Eden came to the conclusion that the Bible is of great value, and that although young, he had no time to lose in becoming experimently acquainted with the blessed truth of God's holy word.—Youth's Cabinet.

TITLE OF BISHOP—The right way to make a Bishop.—It will be recollected that about two years ago a resolution was introduced and adopted by the Franckean Evangelic Lutheran Synod that the title should be prefixed to the names of all ordained ministers, for its scriptularity and appropriateness. Since that time, the title has come into general use among us. In consequence of this some have started the inquiry, what do they mean by the term? Do they assume the same authority that the Bishops of the Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal churches arrogate to themselves? We believe that the assumption of such power is altogether anti scriptural and dangerous in church polity.

What we mean by Bishop is, that every pastor of a church or churches under his ministerial care and oversight is entitled to the appellatiou of Bishop, according to scripture usage and meaning.—This is evident to all who read the scriptures.—In 1 Peter 5: 1—3. we have the terms Elder and Bishop interchangeably used, and their power defined, all included within the province of a pastor over his ministerial district. Here Peter exhorts the elders to feed the flock of God, taking the oversight, or more literally taking care of the Episcopal government, or care of the people of God. They should govern the flock not with lordly authority, but by pious examples. It will be remembered that the Greek word, episcopos, is translated Bishop. The Elders and Bishops were the same persons and had the same powers conferred upon them by God. In Titus 1: 4—7, we learn that Paul instructs Titus in his duties, and informs him that he was left at Creete to "obtain Elders in every city," and tells him the qualifications a man must possess to be entitled to this office, "for a Bishop must be blameless." Here elders and bishops are again used as synonymous and must be ordained 'in every city.' This shows they were nothing above pastors. In Acts 22: 17—28, we find that Paul sent for the elders of Ephesus and addressed them in a public manner, and in the 28th verse he exhorts them thus:—"Take heed therefore unto yourselves and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, (episcopos) to feed the church of God," &c.—Here we learn that the elders of Ephesus were made Bishops (episcopos,) by the Holy Ghost to feed, take care and manage the church of God. From all this we learn that Pastors of churches were called Bishops in primitive times; for this reason we reject all other titles and use this one.—Lutheran Herald.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.

Daniel Webster of Massachusetts, to be Secretary of State.

Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, to be Secretary of the Treasury.

John Bell, of Tennessee, to be Secretary of War.

George E. Badger, of North Carolina, to be Secretary of the Navy.

J. J. Crittenden, of Kentucky, to be Attorney General.

Francis Granger, of New York, to be Postmaster General.

The Rev. George Cookman, Chaplain to the Senate of the United States, has been appointed a delegate from the American Bible Society, to represent that body at the next anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in May next.

A bill to preserve the purity of elections has passed the Senate of Ohio, by an almost unanimous vote, both parties cordially uniting upon it.

TOWNSHIP SEMINARIES.

Having revolved a system of Township Seminaries, a good deal, in my own mind, I have lately mentioned the scheme to a number of persons, all of whom concur with me in opinion, that it is worthy of public patronage.—And that, for it to be patronized by the Legislature; and for it to receive the sanction and support of the people, generally, who are located inconvenient to colleges or high schools, it is only necessary to present its merits fairly to them. For this purpose I have written a few lines to our Representative in the Legislature, to make the suggestion to him, that he may digest the subject and make such disposition of it as he shall deem expedient.

Some of my friends, indeed all, to whom I have suggested the system unite with me in wishing it made notorious; with a view to obtain legislation in its favor, should it receive the popular sanction.

The following is an outline of the system:—To have a Seminary erected, by public tax, as near the centre of every township as conveniently practicable under the superintendence of 5 or 7 Trustees, to have been chosen by the township. To have a room for the professor's family, (for which, perhaps, he should make an allowance out of his salary.) To admit no students who are not prepared to study higher branches than are taught in all our common schools.

The anticipated benefits and advantages of this system are so numerous—so various—and so diversified—and some of them of so paramount consideration; that almost every person, demands the establishment of such a system of high schools, that they may be convenient and accessible to every farmer, mechanic, and trader's sons and daughters. In these Seminaries they can receive a liberal—nay, more—a classical education, if they please: for doubtless it will be proper to procure a professor who can teach—not only all the higher branches of an English education, but also the dead languages: if, indeed, it is necessary to preserve them from eternal death. But for my own part, if we have every thing in them that is valuable translated into our own language I would be glad if they were, not only dead, but buried in eternal oblivion—so we should never have another untranslated quotation from them in our common books. Then a classical education would be the more easily attainable. It may be objected that,—"Perhaps it will be difficult to obtain a sufficient number of competent instructors, to supply the demand, for so many seminaries." To this it may be replied that "it will not, surely, be half so difficult to get one for every township, as it now is to get one for every common school district. I will here mention some advantages of the contemplated system:—

As children receive their first and most durable impressions from their mother, one grand object is to give a liberal education to the "Mothers." It is not common to send young women to college. This scheme makes a college education attainable by them at home.—This will enable them to begin with their children, in an infantile state, to fit and shape, qualify and prepare their minds to fill the many posts of all our variously diversified relations in life. These Seminaries would bring the means of college education within reach of all. Many farmers, mechanics, and dealers would give their children a liberal education at these Seminaries, who are not able to board them away from home and incur the other expenses of a collegiate course, at college. Here, our youth would mingle together, become acquainted--familiar with, and attached to one another. This would have a great tendency to remove bigotry and prejudice; to strengthen the union of effort to preserve and perpetuate our civil and religious liberties.

Sometimes, when young men are sent, or when they go away to college, being from the immediate protective influence of parental care, they fall in with bad company; are attracted by influences prejudicial to their best interests—and are rescinded.

Finally, to recapitulate and condense. The object is, to procure the liberal education of many males and females who cannot expect to get it under the present organization of schools and colleges—to procure a college education, at a small expense, with less risk to the morals of youth, by having Seminaries near enough for youth, to go from their parent's dwellings in the morning, and return thither again in the evening. &c.

PANTHER FIGHT.—A few days ago, a young man by the name of John Keller, about 18 years of age, a resident of this county, had an encounter with four of these dangerous animals at one time.—The difficulty occurred about 18 miles West of this place, near Little river; and resulted in his killing three and putting the fourth to flight. The engagement was a very close one, as the gun was considerably disfigured by the marks of the panthers' teeth.—Wash. (Ark.) Tel.

All this may be so, but it seems rather queer to an old hunter.—ED. REC.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... MARCH 24, 1841.

Our Meddling with Politics.—It will be recollected that in conducting our paper we are not left entirely to follow our own judgment.—The conferences which have particularly adopted it as their organ, have dictated certain principles to which we must conform to be entitled to their patronage. To comply with this contract between the parties, we frequently give articles, both selected and original, which we would not do if we were left to follow our own judgment. We therefore repeat that we do not consider ourself responsible for any article we do not expressly endorse.

One of the conditions of our paper, as given by the conference, was, it must give an "abstract of political and religious intelligence." In the commencement we promised, in our political abstract, not to interfere with party politics, apprising our readers at the same time that we had no expectation of getting off without censure on that ground. We understood our position too well for this; we were well aware of the imperfection of our own judgment,—the liability of honest men to misinterpret us, and the disposition of others to find fault, lest their ability to be judges of the matter should be suspected.—We have, however, rather exceeded our expectations in avoiding censure, on this subject. An intelligent layman commended us at the last Annual Conference for the manner we had avoided party politics, while the whole country was so excited with it. He thought, however, it was easily discoverable from our columns that we were a friend of Mr. Van Buren, but that nothing had been said on the subject to which exceptions ought to be taken. But it seems from the following extract that a different inference is made in regard to our political position:

"Mr. Editor: —— —— and —— —— requested me to tell you to stop their papers at the close of the present volume, if you do not learn to let politics alone!! You gave Governor Shannon's message and then a piece just followed it which made it out a stump speech.—This highly offended Mr. ————. If you had given the message without any comment, he would have thanked you. You also gave us a long letter from a Mr. Jay, relating to the capture of some Africans: and he, Mr. Jay, rolled the blame over unto Mr. Van Buren, and you published that slanderous report. This gave great offence to Mr. ————. In other respects they like your paper well, but they say they can no longer put up with these things!!! So you may drop their names at the end of the year if you do not mend."

We remark upon this:

1. Strange as the assertion may appear we never knew that there was such an article, as the one first complained of, in our columns, until informed of it in this note. If there be such it is not there with our consent. The circumstances of the case are these: it will be recollected that our office is upon our farm, between five and six miles from Zanesville. One of the offices in town made a proposition to our foreman to unite in putting up the President's and Governor's annual Messages; as in towns there is great exertion made to have such documents immediately before the people so soon as they come to hand; he communicated the project to us, and for certain reasons, if understood, any man would say were satisfactory, we gave our consent. So our hands all went to town and remained there until the paper containing the Messages was up, worked off and distributed. We did not select one article for it save we gave our consent that the Messages should both go in it, and we have not read that paper up to this moment. If we committed any error, in this matter, it was in permitting the paper to go from under our notice, but we repeat the peculiarities of the case were such that it was proper that we should do so.—As it respects Mr. Shannon, we have nothing to do with his politics, nor with the politics of any one else, but as a citizen we hold too high a respect for him and his family, to make any invidious allusions to him. And such attempts, on the part of the press, as we have latterly noticed, to make him accessary to the Gallipolis Bank swindling, is highly discreditable to it.—Mr. Shannon, in that case, did what every public functionary should do under the circumstances. When the forms of law had been complied with, he issued his permit to the institution.—To have done otherwise would have been tyranny.—But it is afflicting to have friends that we highly esteem, grumbling at us in this way without cause. When such matters occur, why do they not write us for an explanation before they condemn? We would rather pay postage than be subject to this kind of annoying censure.

2. As it respects the objections of our other friend, in relation to the publication of Mr. Jay's letter on the Amistad case; we are at a loss to know what connection, its publication, at this juncture, can have with politics. If it had appeared before the contest for the Presidency was over, there might have been some ground for complaint. But, as Mr. Van Buren is not now a candidate for that office, nor is it probable he ever will be again, there is no political end to be accomplished by the developments of Mr. Jay's letter. But, even if he were now a candidate for the high office of Chief Magistrate, would it not still be the duty of every press, friendly to humanity, to have interfered in the case under consideration? What are the circumstances? Forty human beings, the victims of a trade that a decent devil (pardon the expression,) would hardly be engaged in, are cast forlorn and pennyless on our shores. Lieutenant Gedney, without any warrant of authority, either from heaven or earth, as Mr. Adams has shewn, immediately pounces upon them, and with force of arms makes them his captives and casts them into prison,—for what? What had they done? They had been guilty of freeing themselves from thieves and robbers, and were trying to find their way back to their native land from whence they had been forced. For this wonderful crime they are cast into prison. And after the justice and benevolence of the courts of the land had set them at liberty, the Chief Executive of this nation, interposes the strong arm of the government to crush these helpless and destitute strangers. Now, we should like to know where the "slander" of this case is. No one denies the acts which Mr. Jay attributes to the Chief Magistrate. Every court that has acted upon the case, has determined that no man or body of men had any right to deprive these Africans of their liberty, and have severally ordered them to be set free.—This is precisely the view which Mr. Jay took of the case, when he charged the President with despotism in attempting to crush these poor defenceless beings by using the power of the government. When such movements are made by the heads of the nation, involving the very essence of humanity, that press which would not lend its influence to correct public opinion is worthless and contemptible.

3. As our friend has authorized a bill of complaints to be forwarded to us, he certainly will not murmur if, in turn, we utter some objections to him. What we have to say is, it is deeply to be deplored that a member of the church, and a professor of religion, should so far surrender himself to the influence of political party excitement, that he would suffer it to consume all his sympathies for human misery, so that he could see forty helpless and pennyless human beings cast into prison, for no crime under the sun, and because his party leader did it; cry, "all's well!" For such his censure upon us implies. May kind heaven save us ————.

Our Difficulties with Great Britain.—We cut the following article from the "Ohio State Journal," which we designed for our paper of last week, but it was crowded out for the want of room. We considered the article interesting, upon the subject, because of the facts which it states:

For ourselves, we indulge no expectations of a satisfactory adjustment of our difficulties with the British government, for the present. Our opinions, however, are founded upon out-door signs and observations—we know nothing of the tone of the correspondence between the diplomatic agents of the two countries. No doubt, however, it is sufficiently sugared over with fair promises to our government, but who that reflects upon the long years of prevarication which Great Britain has managed to interpose to stave off a final settlement, can be impressed with any expectation that that power has received new light on the subjects in dispute, and is any more predisposed to render us terms of justice, that she was when the matter was first presented to her consideration. Instead of offering a guaranty for the recognition of our claims, and for the continuance of peaceable relations, she is actively engaged in strengthening her means of annoyance and defence—the frontier bristles with bayonets, and the finest troops in her service are accumulated in the adjacent provinces in force far beyond the necessities of local security, and at an expense which no measures of internal policy could warrant or demand. In addition to the regular troop, the Canadian militia are put upon the war establishment—are completely organized and disciplined for active employment. A steam vessel has been placed upon Lake Erie, which will completely command the upper waters; one of a thousand tons burthen is to be launched at Kingston this spring, and another still is to be built on Lake Champlain. Now whatever others may think of the amicable professions of the British government it does appear to us that the note of all this warlike preparation, at any outlay so far beyond the ordinary requirements of the provincial governments, speaks in a sense that can no more be mistaken than the thunders of Niagara. It is plain that Great Britain is growing more imperious than ever. Her conquests in India—her pretensions in the Celestial Empire—the part she has played in the pacification of Syria—her independence and contempt of French politics—all indicate a conciousness of strength and power, a hauteur and arrogance, that would rather prefer to exercise themselves in collision with a country occupying the position of the United States, than to feel restrained by the character of our claims, or be intimidated by the consequences which might possibly befal their neglect or rejection. Since the war of 1812, and the general peace in Europe, a new adaptation of military arts has been discovered, which admits of the most extraordinary combinations and application, and which England has not failed to avail herself of to an extent as yet imitated by no other power. We allude of course to her steam marine. Her means of attack have been most fully demonstrated in the destruction of Beyrout and St. Jean d'Acre. We argue from this that she is by no means insensible to her own vast resources, and that confident in her ability to enforce her peculiarly selfish and aggrandizing policy, she is nowise prepared or inclined to surrender an inch of the territory which she disputes with us, or an iota of principle in the jurisdiction which she has lately set up over our African commerce, to say nothing of her pretensions in Oregon, or in the case of McLeod. War, however, depends entirely upon ourselves, and is probably distant enough. Great Britain is in possession—she has no claims to fortify by the commencement of hostilities. It belongs to us to appeal to the ultima ratio. We are in no condition to do so—and we should feel, as a nation, reluctant to surrender all final hopes of a successful negociation, and resolve upon a resort to force for the vindication of our rights, although, we apprehend, there can be no question of the prevalence of a proper national spirit on the whole subject of our relations with England. Our conclusions are, therefore, that there is no immediate danger of a collision, nor any ultimate prospect of a peaceable adjustment of the points at issue. The final arbitrament presents a mere question of time, and may be precipitated or protracted by circumstances which cannot now be anticipated. In the mean while the foreign affairs of this country must become the fruitful source of anxieties and of interest both to the government and the people.

Illinois Legislature.—The Alton Telegraph of the 6th inst. has the following remarks on the doings of that body:

The General Assembly of this State adjourned on last Monday morning, after a session of fifteen weeks. Having received neither letters nor papers of a later date than Friday of last week, it is not in our power to announce with certainty what this body actually did, for good or evil, before their separation. We understand, however, that they passed an act for the relief of the State Bank, which authorizes the said institution to suspend the payment of specie for its notes until January, 1843, and also to issue bills of the denominations of one, two and three dollars, during the same period. The Bank is likewise empowered to charge seven per cent. on all loans and discounts for six months or less, and nine per cent. on all over six months. As a consideration for these privileges, the institution is to take, during the ensuing two years, State bonds at their par value, to the amount of $200,000, the proceeds of which are to be applied to the payment of the interest on our public debt. The Legislature have likewise passed an act, raising the rate of taxation for State purposes, and fixing the minimum valuation of land at three dollars per acre. It is expected that the increased revenue derived from these sources, together with the funds to be obtained from the State Bank, will provide sufficient means for the regular payment of the interest on our public debt; though this is by many considered very doubtful.—The Canal, we are informed, has been left to its fate, as well as our Internal Improvement system.

☞The Duel.—The difficulties between Mr. Clay and Mr. King, of Alabama, which had led to the preliminaries of a duel, have been amicably adjusted by the intervention of friends.—The affair, pending the adjustment of it, produced tremendous excitement in Washington. The circumstances which led to the challenge, are as follow:

For the last six years the editors of the Globe have assailed Mr. Clay with a bitterness and asperity rarely equalled; on the resolution to dismiss them as printers to the Senate, Mr. C. took occasion to pay them off all dues and demands with compound interest. Says a Washington writer: "His descent upon the editor of the Globe was withering and crushing. The scorn, contempt and vehemence of his denunciation were overwhelming. It was a process of pulverization which excited the resentment of some and the hearty acquiescence of others. He nounced Blair as the infamous conductor of an infamous sheet—as a daily libeller, and a mass of reeking putridity offensive to the very air." Mr. King, of Alabama, in his reply remarked, in substance, that the editor of the Globe was no more infamous than Mr. Clay, and that his private character would rise in comparison with that of the Kentucky Senator. Mr. Clay rose under strong excitement and said:

He had spoken of the Globe and its principal editor as infamous. Certain gentlemen seemed to think, by an irregular inference, that they must be regarded as participating in that infamy. If any Senator had thought proper to ask whether he meant any such thing, he would have promptly disclaimed it. No one had done so—but the man in the corner (continued Mr. Clay, pointing to Mr. Smith, of Connecticut,) whom I do not think worthy of my notice, has chosen to make the inference. I make no answer to him. A gentleman, however, who considers himself responsible, (Mr. King bowed) has gone one step farther, and undertaken to classify me with this partizan Editor of the Globe.

This (added Mr. Clay) was an unparliamentary proceeding. He had a right to comment on the journal and the character of the man when under consideration. He had spoken of the libels and calumnies daily published in that paper. He never saw any article relating to him that was not full of untruths and misrepresentations. He had remdined the Senator from South Carolina of its attack on him as "John Cataline Calhoun," as "a man who never spoke the truth when an untruth would serve his turn." He had said he considered the Globe a libel, and its editor a libellier. "And now, under these circumstances (said Mr. Clay, with peculiar distinctness and emphasis) for the Senator, of Alabama, to put me on a level with him, is false, untrue, and cowardly."

Whereupon the Senator from Alabama, remarked, in a very significant manner, that he had nothing to say in that place. He immediately drew forth a sheet of paper and wrote a challenge, when calling on Dr. Linn, from Missouri,—they retired from the Hall, arm in arm,—the latter returned in about ten minutes, and when the Senate adjourned, presented Mr. Clay with a formal challenge, who as formally accepted it.

But it is probable the Alabama Senator did not wish to fight, for all this was done in such a way that every one understood it. A writ was immediately issued and he taken before the proper officer and bound to keep the peace in the penalty of five thousand dollars. "Mr. Clay was also confronted by the Marshal as he was coming down the Avenue with Mr. Preston, and released on his parole."

In closing, Mr. Adams said:

May it please your Honors:—On the 7th of February, 1804, now more than 37 years ago, my name was recorded on the rolls of this Court, as one of its Attorneys and Counsellors. Five years afterwards, I appeared before this Court in an important cause. Since that time, I have never appeared before this Court until the present occasion, and now I stand before this Court again. It is this same Court, but not the same Judges. At that time these seats were filled by honored men indeed, but not the same. They are all changed. Then there was Chief Justice Marshall, and Judges Cushing, and Chase, and Washington, and Johnson, and Livingston, and Wild. Where are they? Where is that able statesman and lawyer, who was once my associate counsel, Robert Goodloe Harper? Where is the eloquent counsellor, so long the pride of Maryland and of the American Bar, Luther Martin? Where is the excellent clerk of that day, whose name has been inscribed on the shores of Africa, as a monument of his abhorrence of African Slave trade, Elias B. Caldwell? Where is the Marshal? Where are the criers of the Court? Where is one of the very Judges before whom I commenced my argument in the present cause? Gone—gone; all gone. Gone from the services which they rendered to their country, to appear before a tribunal where they must answer for all the deeds done in the body. From the excellent characters which they sustained, so far as I have the means of knowing, I fondly hope that they have gone to receive the rewards of eternal blessedness. In taking, as I suppose, my final leave of this Bar and of this Honorable Court, I can only ejaculate a fervent petition to Heaven that every member of it may go to his final account with as little to answer for as these illustrious dead, and that you may every one receive the sentence—"Well done, good and faithful servants, enter into the joy of our Lord."

I need not say that a crowded audience was deeply affected by this solemn close. Many of them shed tears.

Fire.—A destructive fire occurred at Bangor, Maine, on Friday morning, commencing in the Pattern shop of Mr. Nathan Perry on Harlow street, connected with the Foundry of Messrs. Hinkley & Egery, and the Machine shop of Franklin Muzzey, Esq. The Foundry, the Machine and Pattern shops, with their contents were totally destroyed, and the loss is estimated at from $15,000 to $20,000. No insurance.

From the Sunday School Journal.

To Sunday Schools in the West.—Twenty Gratuitous Libraries.—By the liberality of the London Sunday School Union, the managers of the American Sunday School Union are enabled to offer to Sunday schools in the Valley of the Mississippi, twenty libraries of our publications of 121 volumes each, in a case, with a catalogue, &c. ready for use.

They will be given to twenty of the most destitute schools in the Valley of the Mississippi that shall apply for them before the first day of May next; provided the applications furnish a particular account of the condition and prospects of the schools they represent, stating the population of the place where the school is kept, the length of time the place has been settled, the number of children attending the school who can read the books and the means of reading they possess without this library. And provided also, that such applicants engage to report to us when the books are received and are in actual circulation. The object of obtaining this information is to satisfy our English friends that their liberality has been well applied.

Preference will be given (other things being equal) to schools recently established, and without regard to the question whether they are connected with our Union or not.

All applications under the above offer must be post paid.

Philadelphia, Feb. 2, 1841.

☞ Western papers will doubtless be glad to circulate this announcement as widely as they can.

Mr. Clevenger, the Sculptor.—The friends of Mr. Clevenger, the gifted but modest artist from the West, will be glad to learn of his arrival, with his family at Florence, Italy. During a sojourn in Boston, he made an admirable bust of well known individuals, which he is now executing in marble from the casts. The likenesses taken by this gentlemen, are to say the least, as strikingly like and spirited as any that have been here.—Boston Mercantile Journal.

Mr. Clevenger before he left New York for Europe, took among others a bust of Chancellor Kent, which was excellent. It seemed to give you an idea of the character of the man as well as his physiognomy.—New World.

A Question of Order.—On Monday last, while a bill empowering married women to make bequests of property belonging to them, before the Massachusetts Assembly, Mr. Bradburn, of Nantucket, raised a question of order by inquiring of the Speaker if, under the rule which forbids members directly interested in any subject to vote thereon, all married men were not disabled from voting on this question? The Chair said that if Mr. B. would put the case of any individual member whose wife held property, the point of order should be decided. Mr. B. said he could furnish a list of fifty of the gentlemen so situated, but to save time he would leave the matter to their own consciences.

The Prince Albert Cane.—We saw at Mr. Hart's Book store yesterday, one of these curious Canes. It is of hollowed iron with a coating of black horn. In the head is a beautiful compass, and by unscrewing a joint, a fine telescope and stand is drawn out. In another joint are other instruments of the surveyor. The cane is of moderate size—and much lighter than would be supposed. The maker presented one like it to Prince Albert—whence the name. The price is $100.—Charleston Mercury.

Suicide.—On Saturday morning last, Mr. George Shoemaker, of Weisenburg township, Pa., committed suicide by hanging himself in his own house. What makes the circumstance more melancholy is that his wife lay at the time a corpse in the house, and was to be buried at 10 o'clock that day. It is believed that owing to the decease of his consort, and a nervous complaint he has been afflicted with for 30 years expedited this melancholy catastrophe.

☞Arrested.—Three persons, named John L. Burgoyne, John W. Wallace, and French, conspired recently to set fire to Vincennes, Ia., murder a clerk of Mr. Hayes, merchant, and take off a quantity of goods The plot was exposed by a young man named George Donley, at work in a shop where Burgoyne was employed, and the villains were taken in the very act, but not until Burgoyne was severely wounded.

☞From Canada.—We learn from the Montreal Transcript, that the trial of Captain McAdam, for killing Lieut Farquahar, has resulted in a verdict of justifiable homicide. H. E. Barron, Esq., joint Sheriff of the Montreal district died very suddenly on the 5th inst.

Emigrants.—A report made to Congress by the State Department, shows, from returns not entirely complete, that 115,206 persons came into the United States by sea during the year 1840.

This number, however, includes such of our own citizens as returned during the year from abroad.

Mr. Webster has appointed his son, Daniel F. Webster, under Secretary of State.

One Angel, a doctor, has been tried in New Orleans for passing counterfeit money. Bad business for an angel.

Painful Narrative—Shipwreck and Loss of Lives.—We learn the following particulars from the Charleston Courier.

On the 5th Feb. the steamboat Lamplighter, Capt. Woods, sailed from Mobile Bay for Cedar Keys, and Tampa Bay, with a crew consisting of Capt. Woods; Swift, mate; S. F. English, 1st engineer; Davids, 2d engineer; 4 firemen, all Germans; 6 deck hands, names unknown: 1st and 2d cooks and stewards, names unknown: Wm. Wibble, a ship carpenter. The 2d cook was a black man.

Passengers—Lt. Cost and lady, Mobile; Mr. Cost, his brother, do; Mr. Hudson and lady, Buffalo, N. Y.; Andrew Dargan, Mobile; Capt. L. G. Morton, Apalachicola; and a black girl about 15 years of age.

The steamer reached Dog Island to the east end of Apalachicola Bay, on the 13th. At 8 o'clock, A. M. she broke her shaft, cast anchors, and waited for assistance. None appeared before the next day, when the steamer Caroline, from St. Marks, bound for Apalachicola, with a company of players, passed by—they sent their boat to her relief, with Lieut. Cost, his brother, and Wibble, the carpenter. The captain and pilot of the Caroline deemed it unsafe to send to the relief of the sufferers then; the boat rowed to the St. Mark's Light House, procured a schooner, which, as fast as possible hastened to the sufferers; reached the spot on Monday, the 15th, but not a trace of her was to be found.

On Saturday morning it commenced blowing a gale from the north, which continued with increased fury throughout the day. At 12 o'clock at night it was discovered that the Lamplighter could not survive the gale many minutes; both boats were immediately launched; six persons got in one, and three in the other. The sea was so violent that the small boats could not be brought near the steamer, and eight persons leaped into the sea and swam to the boats. While arrangements were making to take the rest on board the boats, the steamer sunk amid the cries and lamentations of those who found a watery grave, to rise no more till the last trumpet sounds, and the sea shall give up its dead. It was with difficulty the persons on board the small boats extricated themselves, during the hurry and confusion incident on such occasions, to cut the fastenings so as to prevent the small boats from sinking with the steamer. These nine men and two boats were left to the mercy of the elements, without chart, compass, or provisions or water. They were separated, and drove by the winds and sea to the eastward. Of the six in one boat, the steward and a deck hand perished with cold on the second day, one in the morning, and the other in the evening. Of the 3 men in the next boat, the black man perished with cold the second night with the thermometer at 28 degrees. On the third day both the boats met at sea. The two who remained in the smaller went into the larger boat, which ran before the wind until Wednesday morning, when they reached land in search of water, but found none before the next day, which was the day we brought them on board, having fasted from Saturday until Thursday.

The names of the six persons saved, and now on board the James Adams, are—Capt. Woods; mate, Thos. D. Swift; Engineer, S. J. English; a deck hand; John Maares; Capt. Andrew Dargan, of Mobile; Capt. L. G. Morton, of do; and the three gentlemen who went in the first boat, to look for relief, are all safe.

Pennsylvania.—A democratic convention assembled in the court house at Harrisburgh on the 4th, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Governor of the State. H. W. Beeson, of Fayette, was chosen chairman, together with six vice presidents and four secretaries.—When the vote was taken for a candidate, David R. Porter, the present incumbent, received 139 votes, Dr. Daniel Sturgeon 1—4 absent.

The Crew of the Shenandoah.—The crew of negroes, shipped by this vessel for Liverpool last fall, all returned in the vessel, on Thursday, fat and hearty.—The officers had no trouble with them.—Phil. paper.

"In this country," says an English editor, "it is considered the height of folly for a man to get drunk and lie across a railroad with the idea of obtaining repose." The same opinion obtains to a considerable extent in America.

The Toronto (U. C.) Patriot states that upwards of 15,000 soldiers, horse, foot and artillery, the very elite of the British army, are now stationed in the United Canadas.

Latest from Havana.—An institution for the instruction of the deaf and dumb is about being established in the city of Havana, some of the streets of the city are about being paved with wood.—Business was dull.

Never despise a man because his employment is mean or his clothing bad.—The bee is an insect that is not very pleasing to the sight, yet its hive affords an abundance of honey.

Launch of the Steam Frigate.—The 15th of April next has, it is said, been fixed positively as the day for the launch of the steam frigate building at the Navy Yard.

An attempt was made on Saturday last by a number of prisoners in Baltimore to break jail. One individual named Wm. McCay was shot down on by the police.

FROM WASHINGTON.

From the Correspondence of the New World.

Washington, March 6, 1841.

The immense crowds congregated here have begun to disperse. To-day it commenced snowing—then it hailed—and now it is raining violently, and an occasional peal of thunder gives cheering token of the approach of spring.

I have no news of any interest to communicate. The office-seekers are still kept in doubt. My own opinion, founded on that of those who know Harrison best is that the new administration will be extremely cautious and forbearing in making removals. The Senate will probably adjourn on Monday. This however, will not prevent the President from making such nominations as he pleases. It is decided, that Curtis is not to be Collector.—I think Wetmore will be the man—but this is still a matter of doubt. Todd, of Cincinnati, is to be Consul at Liverpool.—Gen. Wilson, of New Hampshire, the former Whig candidate for Governor of that State, is to be Governor of Iowa. Of these appointments there can be little doubt.

Gen. Harrison is finally comfortably installed in the White House. His daughter-in-law, Mrs. Harrison, presides over his domestic arrangements. She is a lady of very uncommon personal attractions, dignified though gentle and courteous in her manners, with a noble figure and a face of much sweetness and intelligence. I cannot imagine one better fitted to do the honors of the President's House. Mrs. Harrison is a widow with two or three children; though she is not apparently more than thirty. She has with her a niece, Miss Ramsay, who, in personal charms, found few compeers ever at a time when representations of the beauty of the whole Union were assembled in Washington.

Gen. Harrison has made a most agreeable impression upon all who have had any intercourse with him. His conversational powers are certainly extraordinary. He speaks with fluency, and his thoughts fall naturally into a mould of the choicest and most beautiful language. I could detect nothing like affectation or effort in his conversation. He has one of the most suggestive minds I ever encountered; and having passed through a career full of incident and variety, his retentive memory seems to be constantly on the alert for illustrations drawn from his own experience of any points that may occur.

The Globe has wantonly done Gen. Harrison great injustice in intimating that he did not write his inaugural address. No intelligent person ventures to express a doubt upon the subject here; and no one can hear him converse for five minutes, and question his ability to produce such a document.

There is little apprehension here as to any serious difficulties growing out of the McLeod affair. Mr. Webster and Mr. Fox have had an interview; which, it is said, affords the most satisfactory hopes of a peaceful adjustment. What result will grow out of the demand made by the British government for the surrender of McLeod it is difficult to foresee.

Pennsylvania.—Harrisburgh, March, 9.—The Senate has passed the resolution limiting the Governor's office to a single term, 16 to 8.

The tavern license bill has also passed the same body.

A message was received from the Governor, with information that he had signed the bill for the establishment of an Insane Asylum.

A large number of petitions have been presented in both branches, from various sections of the Commonwealth, asking the Legislature to legalize the suspension and authorise the Banks to issue one, two, and three dollar notes. Remonstrances were presented against the same.

There are many amusing anecdotes in circulation respecting the interviews between Gen. Harrison and Mr. Van Buren. They are certainly on very good terms, and crack jokes freely at each other's expense. On Thursday week, Mr. Van Buren returned Gen. Harrison's call and the weather being extremely cold, conversation naturally turned upon it—when Gen. H. jocosely expressed a wish, that Mr. V. B. would improve it to fill the President's ice house, which Mr. V. B. much amused promised to do.—Alex. Gaz.

Proposed Impeachment.—The Legislature of Mississippi have passed rsolutions requesting their representatives in Congress, to prepare articles of impeachment against Justice McKinly, of the U. S. Supreme Court. The Governor has approved of the resolutions.

These resolutions have their origin in the refusal of Judge McKinly, to hold the Circuit Court in Mississippi as his duty required.

Rumors prevail at Washington, that Mr. Fox had addressed the Secretary of State, Mr. Webster, and had signified very plainly that if McLeod was not immediately released he must ask for his own dismissal.

Changeable Climate.—The Boston Mail says the weather has been so variable of late, that it is hardly safe for ladies to go into Washington street without a boy to carry a cloak and a fan, to guard against either extreme.

Extract of a letter dated Montevido, 21st Dec., 1840:—"The report of to-day is that they are digging trenches around the city of Buenos Ayres."

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

TUESDAY, ... MARCH 24, 1841.

CH LAW AT OBERLIN.—We published an in our 74th number, under this caption, e Connecticut Observer, which stated, in ce, that on the 25th of July last, twelve nen, after having detected a Mr. Norton, er of the Oberlin Institute, as being the of certain anonymous letters of very ob- and bad character, addressed to young belonging to the establishment, gagged ndfolded him, and after making his case er of prayer, they inflicted on his naked enty-five stripes with a raw hide; that Taylor, editor of the Oberlin Evangelist ne of this number, and that Professor had given his assent to the whole, &c. received the "Oberlin Evangelist, Extra," 24th ultimo, about three weeks since, but ot had time to notice it until now. This is occupied with an explanation of this and a defence against the misrepresenta- which have been made in reference to it. substantially admits the facts above sta- Prof. Cowles says, he "gave a hasty and g assent" to the proposition "to inflict kind of punishment on the writer" of these , without understanding what that pun- t should be. Mr. Taylor states, that he d corporal punishment until a short time Norton was caught, but that he then d his assent, and although he did not in- them, stood by assenting while the stripes administered. Mr. T. admits that Norton's n was stopped to prevent him from halloo- nd that he was blindfolded, of which he t approve,—and that he called on one of mpany to go to prayer, on the occasion. e facts, connected with this case of Norton, ted in the Evangelist before us, are briefly : Early in the month of May last, letters addressed to two young ladies in the Ober- stitution, under the care of Mrs. Cowles, some unknown person, of the most polluting ter. "Their language," says one, "was ost obscene and insulting, yea, even posi- beastial; and then, to crown all, they were all round the margin with pictoral repre- tions of the vilest imaginable kind." This great affliction to Prof. Cowles and his lady, had charge of the female department, as s to the parties insulted. It appeared to distressing that they had such a monster llution concealed in their midst. A num- ore of such letters were addressed to young s, and put into whosever hands might be nient to be conveyed to the persons for h they were intended. Soon after the let- above alluded to, were received, three others, essed to different young ladies, came into ands of a young man, who saw from the tious pictures, not concealed by the folding, they were not proper to be put into the s of females, and he broke them open. This g man now being awake to the subject soon ted others of a similar character: he, asso- d with a friend, and Prof. Cowles, were each nown to the other, making efforts to detect writer, but no prospect of success seemed to d their efforts, until the incog proposed to one of the ladies at a certain time and . One of the young men wrote him a reply, used the signature of the young lady, as- ing to his proposition. And though the ing did not take place as first proposed, yet me and place for the meeting was ultimately for the 25th of July, when the twelve g men, above, prepared themselves, and ing a "lady" as a decoy, caught him, and tised him as alluded to; he admitting at the the authorship of the letters.

o these doings on the part of those connect- with the Oberlin Institution, as admitted in r exposition of the subject, we have three ctions:

That the delinquent richly deserved all he we admit. But still it was the very essence narchy to administer punishment as this was e. Right may be done in a wrong way. The derer forfeits his life to the laws of the land, for me, because he deserves death, to kill , would be, on my part murder itself. How- r, there is no controversy with us and the de- lents on this subject. They all admit their r, in this particular, and express their most rty regret that the thing ever occurred.

. The Faculty, by resolution condemn this ; all the parties concerned admit their own demnation. Mr. Taylor passes the severest sure upon himself. Why then, under all these umstances, is he continued editor of the Evan- ist? Is there nothing due to public opinion? a man who will publicly violate the law of the d, "under great excitement," so that he has repent for it in sack cloth and ashes, a suita- e person to be at the head of a religious journ- ? All these confessions and this humiliation is ht and proper, and nothing else would save the rties in public estimation; but we should like see some fruits meet for repentance.

3. But the most objectionable thing, to us, in these doings is the use that is made of the lady" who acted as a decoy. We have no ob- ction to the kind of deception that was prac- ed to detect the villain, but we have serious jections to the instrument used. If she were a man of sense she would not consent to go on ch a mission as this, without understanding e nature of it; of course, these "young men" ould have to give her the history of this affair; d when she started she knew she was going to eet a young man who had made a proposition r an illicit interview. What kind of reflec- ons must this whole subject have awakened in r mind, and what a tax must they have impo- d upon her chastity. To say the least about e matter, we think this "lady" acted very silly have consented to be used in this way, and ose who would ask her to render such a service be so inconsiderate as to stand in need of a uardian. But the editor of the Evangelist can e nothing wrong in all this matter; he argues at these young men had a right thus to deceive is aggressor, to which we have no objection, and then places the act of the "lady" on the same ground. He says, "whether her conduct was justifiable under the circumstances, must depend upon whether the rest of us were justifiable in the kind of deception practiced," &c., evidently making no distinction between the part the young men took in this decoy and that of the lady. We should be very loth to commit any female of whom we might have the charge, to an Institution where this kind of casuistry prevailed; or where such doings were countenanced. There was no need, as we conceive, for the services of this lady, as one of the "young men" could easily have garbed himself in the attire of a female, which would have answered every purpose in the detection. We do not charge the sentiment upon the Institution, but really these whole doings seem to indicate that Oberlin might be a suitable soil for the growth of the doctrine, that "to the pure all things are pure."

RIOTOUS PROCEEDINGS IN LORAINE.—We have seen a long article, from the Cleveland Advertiser, giving an account of the arrest of two fugitives from service, at Oberlin, Ohio, by some Kentuckians. The account goes into a minute detail of the whole affair, which is in substance; that three Kentuckians, found the two negroes, the object of their search, at the house of a Mr. Paige, at, or near Oberlin, and proceeded to their arrest, when a large number of citizens came to the rescue of the negroes, who, after many threats and disorderly movements, permitted the Kentuckians to proceed to Elyria, the seat of Justice for Loraine, where a hearing was had before Judge Long, who entertained the matter, and continued the case for trial until the 13th of April next, at which time the court of Common Please will be in session. Immediately upon the disposal of the case, the Kentuckians were arrested on a charge of an assault, for which they were bound over in a penalty of 500 dollars each, to appear at the next term of the court. The negroes were handed over to the Sheriff, and lodged in jail, on failing to give bonds, of one thousand dollars each; but, on the night of the 2d inst. the jail was broken open by the mob and the prisoners set at liberty. Where will mob violence end?

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.—A friend, up in the mountains, in a letter received the past week, sent us fifteen new subscribers. He says they neither mean to "bore or chissel us," but so soon as they can turn their pine logs into money the cash shall be forthcoming. He also says without having "licked the blarney stone, I know of no better way to let our Methodist Episcopal brethren and the world know how we are coming on, than to circulate your paper." Another friend from the north has sent us seven new subscribers this week, which he says are all bankable; adding that he is determined not to send us any "bad" currency. But better still, Br. Boberts of Mt. Vernon has sent us 15 dollars cash for subscribers on the company plan which we recently proposed. We have also received in the neighborhood of 20 subscribers at the office within a short time past. A little renewed effort, would, no doubt, get us many more new subscribers. Who will continue it?

BOUNDARY QUESTION.—The House of Representatives of the State of Massachusetts have passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the interest and honor of Massachusetts alike demand a perseverance, not the less determined because it is temperate, in maintaining the rights of Maine. And that we now cheerfully repeat our often recorded response to her demand, that the justice which has been so long withheld should be speedily done to her—and that whilst we extend to her our sympathy for her past wrongs, we again assure her of our unshaken resolution to sustain the territorial rights of the Union.

The trial of Peter Robinson for the murder of Abm. Suydam was proceeding on the 16th inst. at New Brunswick, New Jersey. The lawyers engaged were then arguing a motion to quash the indictment on the ground of technical informality.

The correspondent of the Philadelphia Chronicle says:

"The prisoner is a man of middle height, with small features and dark complexion, and has a very repulsive countenance. When first brought into the Court, he was deathly pale, and seemed very much excited and alarmed at the crowded state of the Court room. He took his seat by the side of his counsel, and appeared soon to gain composure. He was well dressed, in a suit of dark clothes, and paid particular attention to the proceedings of the Court."

On the 17th the Court over-ruled the motion to quash the indictment, but adjourned at 7 o'clock in the evening, having only obtained ten jurors.

Blair and Rives have been dismissed as printers to the Senate of the United States, by a vote of 26 to 18, and the bond which they recently executed for the faithful performance of their duty for two years, returned to them.

STORMS.—A storm occurred in New Orleans, on the 2d inst. which did considerable damage to houses and shipping. A storm has also occurred at the east which has done considerable damage about Philadelphia and New York.

Mr. Isaac Dillon of our town attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church about two months ago, he has since withdrawn and joined the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Br. W. J. Bledsoe, of Indiana conference, informed us, the reason Br. Hanna does not travel through the District, is, because he is confined at home by sickness, part of the time to his bed.

ADJOURNED.—The United States Senate adjourned on the 15th inst., having attended to all the Executive business the President wished to lay before them.

EXTRA CONGRESS.—It is stated in the papers to be settled, that an extra session of Congress will be called, probably to meet about the first of June.

NEW CABINET.—The Cabinet of President Harrison, as found on the first page, have been confirmed by the Senate.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

The bill for the "protection of religious worship" passed the Senate, after sundry amendments, on the 15th inst., by a vote of 29 to 5;—Messrs. Glover, Hostetter, Hough, Mitchell and Thompson voting in the negative.

As we have, on several occasions, amused ourself with the manner the Senate worried with this bill, and supposing that some of our readers might think we exaggerated, we will give a history, from the Statesman, of the lugging they gave it on the 13th inst.

PROTECTION OF RELIGIOUS MEETINGS.

Mr. Henderson, from the select committee, to which was referred the bill to amend the act for the prevention of certain immoral practices, with amendments; agreed to.

Mr. Glover moved an amendment to strike out "without" and insert "with," so that it would read "with warrant," &c.

Mr. Holmes had hoped that all differences had been reconciled.

Mr. Utter said, he should now, after the adoption of the amendments, vote cheerfully for the bill.

Mr. Glover withdrew his amendment, and offered another to strike out 'two' and insert 'one' mile. Lost—yeas 31, nays 4, [Messrs. Glover, Hough, Taylor and Thompson—4.]

Mr. Glover then moved to strike out the words "the same shall become forfeited," alluding to propriety seized. Lost, yeas 17 nays 18.

Mr. Hough moved to strike out "ten days," and insert "three months," so that the property would not be forfeited until three months expired.

Mr. Hazeltine moved to amend the amendment by striking out "three" and insert 'twelve;' but afterwards withdrew his motion.

Mr. Henderson called for a division of the questing, and (it turning on striking out) was lost: yeas 8, nays 27. (Yeas, Messrs, Glover, Hostetter, Hough, Humphreys, Mitchell, Patterson, Taylor, Thompson and Utter—9.)

Mr. Glover offered an amendment allowing an appeal in all cases where the fine and costs amount to $20.

Mr. Leonard proposed a modification, so that appeal be allowed in all cases, which Mr. Glover accepted.

The amendment was rejected; yeas 11, nays 25.

Mr. Glover moved an amendment, so that an appeal might be entertained when the fine and costs amounts to 20 dollars.

Mr. Bissel then made a few remarks, animadverting on the course pursued in offering so many amendments in order to embarrass the bill.

Mr. Glover replied to Mr. Bissell, and denied that he had any intention to embarrass the bill. He wished to perfect the bill.

Mr. Scott moved the previous question.

Mr. Taylor opposed the motion, as did also Messrs. Holmes and Hough.

Mr. Humphreys spoke against the motion.

Mr. Root hoped the Senator for Guernsey, (Mr. Scott,) would withdraw his motion, in order to give the Senator from Washington, (Mr. Humphreys,) an opportunity to speak on the bill; since that Senator felt a great interest in the subject, and had been absent from the Senate for some time on account of sickness.

Mr. Carpenter had no objection, provided the motion for the previous question was renewed after the Senator from Washington should finish his remarks.

Mr. Scott withdrew his motion.

Mr. Bissell endeavored to make an explanation, but the Speaker (Mr. Green) decided that.

Mr. Humphreys had the floor. Mr. H. then spoke against some of the provisions in the bill.

Mr. Crowell then renewed the motion for the previous question.

Messrs. Glover and Utter opposed the motion, and Mr. Thomas supported it.

Mr. Crowell spoke in favor of his motion, but was called to order by Mr. Vance, who thought it was improper to move the previous question and then speak for an hour in support of it.

The Speaker said the question was, "Shall the main question now be put?"

The yeas and nays being demanded, they were ordered, and were yeas 17, nays 19.

The question recurring on Mr. Glover's amendment, it was rejected, yeas 13, nays 23.

Mr. Taylor moved an amendment, provided, that any person sick or otherwise disabled from claiming his property seized under the provisions of the bill, may be permitted to claim the same within twenty days after such disability is removed. Carried; yeas 21, nays 15.

Mr. Hunt stated he had voted under a misapprehension, and therefore moved a reconsideration.

Mr. Faran said he had intended to vote in the negative.

The reconsideration was then ordered, yeas 30, nays 6, (Messrs. Glover, Mitchell, Patterson, Ream, Taylor and Thompson.)

Mr. Taylor, on the suggestion of Mr. Root modified his amendment so as to give ten days to persons sick, or otherwise prevented, by unavoidable circumstances, from claiming property forfeited under the provisions of the bill, to claim the same after such disability shall have been removed.

Mr. Bissell moved to recommit the bill and amendment. Lost; yeas 9, nays 27.

Mr. Bissell moved to recommit the bill to a select committee of one, with instructions to strike out "ten days," and insert "twenty days."

After some remarks from Messrs. Utter, Thomes and Bissell,

The question was about to be put, when

Mr. Glover asked for a call of the Senate, which was ordered, and two members found absent, and excused.

Mr. Glover renewed the call, but not being in his seat, it was decided out of order.

Mr. Faran moved the previous question; and it was sustained; yeas 20, nays 15.

Mr. Glover moved that the Senate take a recess, but it was decided out of order.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading yeas 30, nays 6, (Messrs. Glover, Hostetter Hough, Humphreys, Mitchell and Thompson—6.)

This manœuvering is all perfectly understood. These improvers of the bill are its real enemies, and they are afraid to meet the subject fairly in the face, and despatch it manfully and above board, but wish to kill it off with affected kindness; for if most of these motions had prevailed, they would have rendered the bill entirely nugatory. We have some in the church who seem to think that religious liberty means that they are to have their way on all occasions, so likewise the State, no doubt, has many who think Democracy means that they shall always be permitted to carry out their notions, whether they are in the majority or in the minority. No difference how well the subject may have been discussed and understood, or how plainly the majority may have indicated their will, these hang on, as in this case, with a determination which is desperate. We consider such, no difference whether found in Church or State, or under what banner they sail, the most contemptible tyrants under heaven. And we would not vote for one of them, let him belong to what party he might, to the post of scavenger.

BR. COOKE, OF THE PITTSBURGH ADVOCATE.—You seemed to think, sometime since, that it was rather presuming in the Protestant Methodists, after saying so many plain things about your church, to expect you to extend your pulpits, &c., for their accommodation. We refer you to an article on our last page, headed, "Meetings of Union," containing an extract from a letter, published in the Christian Advocate and Journal, from two of your ministers in Maryland, showing the kind treatment of the Protestant Methodists toward them. We take this article from the New York Luminary. We do not contend that we have no errorists or bigots among us, but as long as our brethren evince such a spirit as that referred to, we shall never be ashamed of them. If the Episcopal Methodist brethren were to pursue such a course towards us, they would disarm us forty times sooner than to pursue the method indicated in the remarks of our Pittsburgh friend. The doctrine he indicates demands an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth; whereas, the whole genius of the gospel teaches us, "if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink," &c.

FAYETTEVILLE LUMINARY.—This is a weekly, super-royal sheet, published at Fayetteville, New York, at $1,50 in advance, for the "Reformed Methodist Connexion," under the direction of a committee;—Wesley Bailey, editor. We have been in the regular receipt of this paper, nearly since our commencement. It is conducted with considerable ability, and seems to breathe a liberal spirit. It is the organ of that class of Methodists to which a reference is made in the communication of Br. Woodruff, on our first page. As there is now a proposition for a convention with a view to unite all the seceding bodies of Methodists in one, and as the editor of the Luminary is favorable to the project, will he think we ask too much when we request him to give us information on the following points: What were the circumstances which gave rise to the formation of the "Reformed Methodist Connexion?" How are your conferences formed? How are your preachers appointed to their fields of labor? What are your probable numbers?—The brief information which might be comprized in half a column or less, will satisfy us. In turn, we will reciprocate any favor in our power to render. This information may have been given in your columns before, but nothing occurring to call our attention particularly thereto, we have not retained it.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.—The Senate on the 15th inst. indefinitely postponed the bill appropriating $10,000 for the erection of a new State House.

On the 18th inst. in the House, the bill to reduce the number of engineers in the public service, was read the third time and passed. The bill to grant a jury trial to persons claimed as fugitives from service or labor, in other States, was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 34 to 32.

TOWNSHIP SEMINARIES.—We call the attention of our readers to an article, from the Lebanon Star, on Township Seminaries, on our first page. It strikes us forcibly, that a law to provide for such Institutions, leaving it optional with each township whether to adopt it or not, would be highly promotive of the cause of education, and would tend greatly to advance the condition of general society.

☞Will the proprietor of the "New World" please send us the quarto instead of the folio edition of that publication? And if he could spare the back numbers, he would oblige us very much by sending them from the commencement of "Ten Thousand a Year," if not, commence with "Barnaby Rudge."

Will brother Medary, of the Statesman, forward us a copy of the bill for the "protection of religious worship," at his earliest convenience? If he will comply with this request, we will promise to vote for him for State printer, when we get to be a member of the Legislature, should he then be a candidate.

THE WHITE HOUSE.—It is stated in the whig papers that the furniture of the President's house, at Washington, has been much abused since the election, and a considerable portion of it conveyed away. The democratic press says the report is all a fabrication.

We see by the list of appointments made by the late President, in another column, that our old friend Walter Forward, of Pittsburgh, is appointed U. S. Attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania. No man is more deserving than he.

☞Two or three letters in this paper should have been published in our last. They were mislaid. When such occurrences happen, thro' our neglect, it probably afflicts us more than the parties neglected.

LADY'S BOOK.—This work for March is before us. It is embellished with a splended steel engraving by Dick—Mathemetical Abstraction; three engravings of fashions—colored;—spring fashions, three figures. Its contributers are some of the best writers in the country.

COMMON SCHOOL ADVOCATE.—We occasionally receive a half medium sheet, bearing the above title, published monthly at Cincinnati O., for gratuitous circulation. It contains many things very interesting to teachers, and on the subject of education generally.

We do not give our prices current this week, as the prices generally remains as per last week. In Cincinnati, Wheat, on the 16th inst, was 52 cts. Flour, 3,25.

THE STORM.—The storm on saturday, raged with great violence at Providence, R. I. It was accompanied with snow and hail, which fell to the depth of about four inches. The Journal says—a remarkable circumstance attended the gale—there were two full tides in the morning. The tide came up to within two feet of the wharves at 8 o'clock, sunk three feet, and then returned to its former height at 12 o'clock.

The prisoner was taken before Alderman Hoffner, and committed for a further hearing.—Phil. Chron.

LATEST FROM MONTEVIDEO AND BUENOS AYRES.—By the brig Susan, Capt. Laudeman, arrived at Baltimore from Montevideo, we learn of a hard fought battle between the troops of Gov. Ross and Gen. Lavelle, and the defeat of the latter. The battle took place on the 28th Nov., at Los Quebrachitos, near Corolia, where after a conflict lasting seven hours, Gen. Lavelle retreated with a loss of 1,500 men killed.

ANOTHER STEAMBOAT SUNK.—The steamboat Renown was snagged and sunk a few days since, at Moore's Bluff, on the Little Bigby river. She was on her downward passage, and had some cotton on board, though not a full cargo. The Mobile Advertiser of the 1st inst. observes: This is the fourth boat which has been sunk in our rivers within a week past.

SILK BOUNTY.—The bounty allowed in Massachusetts is 15 cents per lb. for cocoons, and 50 cents per lb. for reeled or thrown silk. For the five past years there have been claims allowed for the raising 14,160 pounds of cocoons, 955 pounds reeled silk, and 343 pounds thrown silk, amounting to $2,430. In addition to this, claims amounting to $1,557 remained unaudited.

THE WEDDING OF THE JEWESS.—We give an additional description of the marriage ceremony as performed according to the rites of the Jewish faith, in the Synagogue in Fifth street below Walnut on Wednesday afternoon. As soon as the bride entered the synagogue, the Rabbi commenced reading the evening prayer, which represents the sacrifice of Isaac. The marriage contract was then read by the priest. After the reading, it was signed by him, the sexton, and the groom, and prayer was said according to the ancient Mosaic law. The groom was then led forward by persons appointed for the purpose, to give him away; the bride was likewise conducted, similarly attended, to the place where the ceremony was to be consummated, in front of of the reading desk, between that and the altar, where a canopy was held by the four groomsmen over the bride, groom, and Rabbi. The wedding ring was then placed upon the fore finger of, the right hand of the bride by the groom: a glass of wine was then handed by the priest to the groom, who took a sip of it and who then passed it to the bride with an accompanying prayer that she might multiply and increase as the fruits of the field. A wine glass was then placed on the floor, which the groom trod upon and broke to pieces, which signified that they can be as easily separated as the fragments of the glass can be again joined together. The officiating Rabbi then read the concluding prayer which was very solemn and imposing: and so ended this interesting ceremony.—Phil. Chron.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Ohio Penitentiary.—From the annual Report of the Directors of this Institution, made on the 21st of December, 1840, and recently published, it is represented to be in a state of progressive improvement. It appears, from this document, that the number of inmates of the Penitentiary on the 30th of November last was 488. The number discharged during the year 138, as follows: by expiration of sentence 78; pardon from the Governor 47; President 2; escaped (from brick yard) 6; died 4; by writ of error 1. The number received during the year 137, being less than the preceding year 35. The amount of earnings, over and above the expenses, is reported to be $26,000, being an increase over the year previous of near $6,000.

The term of employment of the "moral and religious teacher" having expired on the 30th of November last, the Directors say he has been discharged, and that they do not feel at liberty to employ a chaplain, as the decision of the Legislature is "adverse" to the employment of any individual as such. We consider it a disgrace to the State to let such an unfortunate class of beings remain without the benefits of religious instruction, except as it may be incidently given. It is evidence to us that there is a large amount of infidelity lurking in the heart of the Legislature. The extreme reluctance they manifest to extend protection to religion, tends, with us, to confirm this suspicion.

We give the following Report of the Instructor, before he retired, as containing statistics of interest. Ed.

REPORT OF THE INSTRUCTOR.

To the honorable Board of Directors of the Ohio Penitentiary:

Gentlemen: The ordinary routine of service allotted to the Moral Instructor of the Penitentiary, and which was described in my last report, has been regularly performed during the past year. In addition to my usual duties, I have devoted much time and labor to a careful and thorough inquiry of the convicts, in regard to their previous education, habits, pursuits, and associations, for the purpose of ascertaining, as far as possible, the causes, of crime, or the circumstances which contribute to its commission. As the result of that inquiry, I submit the following tabular statement:

Those who have had a collegiate education,	10
Those who have had an academical education,	21
Those who can read, write, and cipher,	199
In regard to this class of convicts, it is proper to say, that a large portion of them are poor readers; and few of them have made much proficiency in arithmetic, or any of the advanced branches of a common school education.
Those who can read and write only,	87
Those who can read only,	105
Those who cannot read the Bible.	59
Those who were grossly intemperate,	126
Those who were temperate drinkers,	222
Those who were total abstinents from intoxicating drinks,	129
Those who were intoxicated when the crime for which they were sentenced was committed.	115
Some of this class state, that the crime, which has resulted in their incarceration, was committed during the first instance of intoxication in their lives; and that, but for such intoxication, they should not, and could not, have committed it. A large portion who are incarcerated for killing, or intent to kill, are of this class.
Those who had intemperate parents or guardians,	56
Those who had lost or left their parents before they were sixteen years of age,	181
Those who had followed boating on the lakes, rivers, and canals,	180
Those who had been sailors,	52
Those who had been in the army,	71
Those who had been addicted to gambling,	115
Those who attended Sunday schools,	262
Some few of this class have been teachers in Sabbath schools; but by far the largest number have attended them but for a very limited period, and inconstantly.
Those who had been habitual readers of the Bible,	121
Many of this class are to be understood as occasional or weekly readers of the Bible; or as reading it more than other books on the Sabbath.
Those who had committed the decalogue to memory,	170
This was generally done in their childhood, when under parental instruction, or in the Sabbath school.
Those who had been conscientious observers of the Sabbath,	80
In most of these cases, the Sabbath had come to be neglected and desecrated by the time the career of crime had been entered.
Those who had been married,	225
Those who had never been married,	64
Those who had lost or left their wives,	64
Those who had been professors of religion.	93
A portion of this class give evidence, more or less satisfactory, of being reclaimed.
Those who have been hopefully converted in prison,	93
The evidence of a hearty and thorough reformation given by many of this class, is as satisfactory as, in the circumstances, would be expected. Allowing all that can reasonably be asked for—the strong liability to deception in their case, as in the case of the sick, and for the many temptations they may have to be hypocritical, still no reasonable doubt can be entertained in regard to very many.
Those who are sceptical in regard to their religious views,	21
Those who had been accustomed to associate with lewd women,	155
Colored convicts,	50
Indians,	2

The effects of the moral and religious instruction imparted to the convicts have been most benign and encouraging. They have been apparent in their orderly and submissive deportment; in the diligence and cheerfulness with which they have labored; in the avidity with which they improve leisure time in reading; in the subdued, peaceful, forgiving, and patient spirit with which they endure the penalty of the law; and in their abhorrence and condemnation of their past criminal conduct, their gratitude for the reforming influences under which they have been placed, and their avowed purposes of leading virtuous lives in future. As another and convincing evidence of these beneficial effects, the remark has often been made by the convicts themselves, that corporeal punishment has decreased greatly, some say one-half, within the last two years; and yet no one will pretend, that the discipline of the institution has been relaxed in the smallest measure. My own observation, during the two years of my connection with the institution, has convinced me that the moral influence felt by the seriously and virtuously-disposed portion of the men, and, by them, exerted upon the more hardened, incorrigible, and reckless, tends, more than any thing else, to secure subjection, and sustain the government of the Prison.—And all that seems to me as needful to render that influence as entire, and efficient, and happy as could be desired, and place this institution on the eminence in regard to moral and reformatory power, (sustained by the Charlestown Prison, Massachusetts, and the Middletown Prison, Connecticut,) are the hearty and full concurrence of all its officers in the diffusion of moral and religious instruction, and the maintenance of a strictly moral and religious example. Without such influence, it may continue to be an abundant and increasing source of revenue to the State, but it will utterly fail to attain its first and great end—the reformation of its unfortunate inmates; without such influence, the spirit of avarice may be gratified, but the spirit of christianity, of philanthrophy, of humanity even, will be wounded and estranged.

On taking my leave, therefore, of the institution which you, gentlemen, have in charge, permit me to express my ardent prayer and hope, that you will labor to carry out the views of your predecessors, and to attain the great moral ends of prison discipline—the personal reformation of the convict, and his preparation for sustaining properly the duties of a member of the civil community, on his release.

Charles Fitch.

An Unprofitable Business.—The Paymaster General of the Missouri Militia has made a report, in which it appears that what he calls the Mormon War cost the State of Missouri one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

From the Christian Witness.

FAMILY PRAYER IN THE MORNING BY MEN OF BUSINESS.

In this busy and bustling age, no wonder if secular duties are allowed to crowd out those of a higher order. Indeed, I am myself acquainted with some, "who profess and call themselves christians,"—men of business—who seldom or never attend morning devotion with their families.—They think that they have a sufficient excuse in the supposition that their business would materially suffer by delay; as if, were there a will, the family could not be brought together sufficiently early to remove this fancied objection. What means the reluctance which so many christians appear to manifest, to take God at his word? "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all other things shall be added unto you."

The following interesting illustration of the blessedness of family prayer, before entering upon business, will, I hope, be read by many with profit. May the Lord add his blessing.

Said a pious tradesman (in England,) to a clergyman—"When I first began business for myself, I was determined, through grace, to be particularly conscientious in respect to family prayer.

"Accordingly, I persevered for many years in the delightful practice of domestic worship. Morning and evening every member of my family was ordered always to be present; nor would I allow my apprentices to be absent on any account. In a few years the advantages of these engagements appeared manifestly conspicuous; the blessings of the upper and the nether springs followed me; health and happiness attended my family, and prosperity my business. At length, such was my rapid increase in trade, and the necessity of devoting every possible moment to my customers, that I began to think whether family prayer did not occupy too much of our time in the morning.

"Pious scruples arose respecting my intentions of relinquishing this part of my duty; but, at length, worldly interests prevailed so far, as to excuse the attendance of my apprentices, and not long after it was deemed advisable, for the more eager prosecution of our business, to make the prayer with my wife, when we arose in the morning, suffice for the day. Notwithstanding the repeated checks of conscience that followed this base omission, the calls of a flourishing concern, and the prospect of an increasing family, appeared so imperious and commanding, that I found an easy excuse for this fatal evil, especially, as I did not omit prayer altogether. My conscience was now almost seared with a hot iron; when it pleased the Lord to awaken me by a singular providence.

"O, my dear master, never, never, shall I be able sufficiently to thank you for the precious privilege with which you indulged me in your family devotions. O, sir, eternity will be too short to praise my God for what I have learned there. It was there I first beheld my lost and wretched state as a sinner, it was there that I first knew the way of salvation, and there I first experienced the preciousness of 'Christ in me the hope of glory.' O, sir! permit me to say, never, never neglect those precious engagements; you have yet a family and more apprentices; may your house be the birth-place of their souls!" I could read no further; every line flashed condemnation in my face. I trembled—I shuddered—I was alarmed at the blood of my children and apprentices, that I apprehended was soon to be demanded at my soul murdering hands!

Filled with confusion, and bathed with tears, I fled for refuge in secret. I spread the letter before God. I agonized, and—but you can better conceive, than I describe my feelings, suffice it to say, that light broke in upon my disconsolated soul, a sense of blood bought pardon was obtained, &c. I immediately flew to my family, presented them before the Lord, and from that day to the present, I have been faithful, and am determined through grace, that whenever business becomes too large to interfere with family prayer I will give up the superfluous part of my business, and retain my devotion; better to loose a few shillings, than become the deliberate murderer of my own family, and the instrument of ruin to my own soul.

My dear Mr. Editor, we are commencing a new year, and if the account which this delinquent furnishes, shall bring similar truants back to their solemn and responsible duty in the morning, who can begin to calculate the good which such a movement might effect upon the hearts of parents, children, apprentices, and their associates. What father, what master, that omits the duty habitually, can expect the divine blessing on his household? What an item in the list of ministerial comforts, would it be for a minister to know that all the heads of families in his Parish every morning, remembered him—his sins and frailties—before God. What a fruitful scource of support and comfort it would be to him in his parochial labors! So far as my experience goes, I have usually found, on approaching a household who perform, or rather offer both morning and evening sacrifice, that "thoughts of Christ and things divine," come without bidding; whereas, when drawing near to one when these are always omitted, the compliments of the day, some other trival acts of courtesy, and kill time, are all that seem to occur to the mind. Would, that while men "become diligent in business" they would not forget to be "fervent in spirit."

The Faith of Indiana.—The Legislature of Indiana has levied a direct tax to meet the interest on their State debt.

Meeting of Union.—The Christian Advocate and Journal of last week contains a letter from two Episcopal Methodist ministers hailing from "Hartford Co., Md." Among other items of intelligence these brethren give the following account which we extract for the benefit of all concerned:—

'At length, however, having been presented with a lot in an eligible situation, by an estimable citizen, we made a contract for the erection of a neat and commodious church, adapted to the wants of the place; but as this could not be finished before conference, when one, if not both of us, must leave, we determined at all events to hold a protracted meeting; and the Methodist Protestant church having been kindly furnished us for the occasion, we were able to do so with comfort to ourselves and to the people. The result was cheering indeed. After continuing the meeting the greater part of four weeks, 30 or 40 were converted, and we received 30 on probation, thus doubling the society in that place.—It is worthy of remark that half of these were heads of families, some of them among the oldest and most influential citizens in the place.

'This was not what is commonly called a union meeting, (too often such only in name,) but it was truly a meeting of union. To our Methodist Protestant friends particular, with their esteemed pastor, (Rev. Wm. Hunt,) we have been greatly indebted, not only for the use of their house, but for valuable aid in conducting the meetings.'

It is to be hoped that these ministers, now that they have become more particularly acquainted with the spirit and conduct of reformers, will hereafter cultivate towards them feelings of affection, and when Methodist Protestants are similarly circumstanced within the bounds of the circuit where they may labor, they will extend towards them the like christian courtesy and kindness. Methodist Protestants, so far as our knowledge extends, have always been disposed to cultivate a spirit of union with other churches, and even with the M. E. Church, which of all other churches has the least claim on our charity, for her ministers and membership unitedly have strove to retard our progress, and that by the most dishonorable means, and have too often shown a fiendish disposition to rejoice at our misfortunes. Had the M. E. Church authorities and their partisans, pursued a proper course with reformers from the beginning, it would have been infinitely more creditable and advantageous to themselves, and would have been more in accordance with the spirit of our common religion. Those who were conversant with the low and disingenuous course of our opponents in time past, and who now watch the signs of the times, will not fail to appreciate our remark, when we say that a more Jesuitical priesthood, so far as it relates to the course pursued by them toward us, cannot be found. They are ever and anon shifting their ground according to their own convenience, now lavishing praises on us for clever fellows—then stigmatizing us as heretics shismatici, and all that kind of thing. Where the cause of Protestant Methodists stands firm in the public estimation, they are caressed—where untoward circumstances have rendered them unpopular, they are persecuted and slandered. In New Jersey, in Penn's Neck, at a Camp-meeting, a few years since, a professedly sanctified Presiding Elder declared that "hemp was too good to hang them;" and but 4 years since on Egg Harbor circuit an aged minister of the Protestant church, (Rev. John Smith,) whose character has always been above suspicion, was refused permission to preach the funeral sermon of an old Methodist brother who died in that section, in their church. We do not make these remarks to excite feelings of opposition to our opponents, but merely to stir up their minds to a remembrance of one fact, that all "meetings of union" should produce reciprocal advantages, and while there is to be a union of feeling and action in view of religious effort, we are not to seek a union at the expense of the pure principles of reform—we should not aid to perpetuate a system of "sectarian exclusiveness. Let some of our ministers ask a favor, and if granted, then proclaim it on the house top.—N. Y. Lum.

TO THE CHILDREN.

How I should like to go
To church, and join in pray'r;
But if my God won't have it so,
I'll try to serve Him here.

I first will sing a hymn,
And this my heart may move,
So weep, and grieve for all my sin,
And help me Christ to love.

My Bible then I'll read,
And find out more of heaven;
There I will find how Christ did bleed,
That I might be forgiven.

And then I'll strive to pray,
That I may be forgiven;
And serve my Jesus every day,
And meet His saints in heaven.

Then will my moments fly,
And I much pleasure find;
To reign with Him above the sky,
The Saviour of mankind. Mary G.

One Term.—In the Senate of Pennsylvania, on Wednesday, the resolution for an amendment of the State Constitution, so as to render the Governor ineligible to a second term of office, came up for discussion on a second reading, and after a short debate passed that body by a vote of 16 to 8.

Coming Due.—On the 1st of April $5,000,000 of debentures owned by the U. S. Bank fall due, and on the 1st of October $5,000,000 additional, for which stocks are pledged.

Mr. Webster argued a case in the Supreme Court of the United States on Monday. It was on the Boundary dispute between Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which are undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see the relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language." Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe that this book and the preceding have been highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.—Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

PROSPECTUS OF A

n offering to the consideration and patronage he community a new religious paper, it is be- ing in its originators to set forth the objects will aim to accomplish, and the principles up- which it will be conducted. Like the Meth- st Protestant Church, under the auspices of branch of which it will be published, it is de- ned to advocate and diffuse a knowledge of moral and spiritual tenets of the Scriptures, they are interpreted and understood by the at body of the Methodists generally; and at same time to spread before the eyes of all, o may choose to see, those principles of reform, ich we are laboring to engraft upon the Church lity, or interweave with the Governmental nstitution and organization of old Methodism, d which we believe will improve both her ap- arance and efficiency, bring her nearer in sim- ude to the Primitive Church, make her better ord with the genius of our people, and with spirit of the age in which we live.

As a religious sect we are often misrepresen- , and as often misunderstood. To correct er- eous notions, therefore, respecting us, wheth- er originating in excusable ignorance, open hos- tility, or cloaked maliciousness, and to cause our youthful but growing Church to stand forth in the view of the world, arrayed in that garb of comeli- ness and beauty, which so well befits her, and which legitimately belongs to her, will be one of the prominent objects of this paper. In endeav- oring to accomplish this, the only "weapons of our warfare" will be truth, candor, fact and argu- ment. We are of those who believe in the ulti- mate omnipotency of truth, and have no ulterior object, other than her ascendancy and triumph, and are willing to follow whithersoever she may lead. We are also convinced that a holy and righteous cause need not fear the eye of scruti- ny, however close the analysis of investigation, however minute and searching, nor the battery or argument, however potent. Hence our co- lumns will be freely open to communication from our old-side brethren, and others who may differ from us in opinion, provided they are character- ized by a spirit of fairness, and as much cour- tesy and respect, as the nature of the case will admit, and one christian brother may justly exact from another. While such communications will be cheerfully inserted, we reserve to ourselves in all cases, the right of reply, under such res- trictions and limitations as we impose upon our opponents.

The doings of the Illinois and General Con- ferences, will be published in this paper, as well as extracts from the proceedings of other State Conferences, so far as these may be of a general nature, or of special interest to our readers.— Every thing, either nearly or remotely related to our common Christianity, that we may be able to gather from our varied resources, circulated to subserve the cause of the Redeemer, or interest his followers, religious revivals in our own or oth- er churches, missionary intelligence, &c., will have an appropriate department in our paper.— Facts and essays, moral, literary, scientific, me- chanical and agricultural, will all come within the legitimate scope of our periodical, and form prop- er subjects for insertion, review, criticism and re- mark. A summary of general intelligence will be given in each paper, embracing news, foreign and domestic; but most carefully abstaining from any intermeddling with the party politics of the country.

During the sessions of the Legislature of this State, one page will be devoted to a publication of its proceedings.

The above Periodical will be established and sustained by the Illinois Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and commen- ced immediately after the next session of said Conference in September next; provided a suffi- cient patronage can be obtained.

The paper will be issued semi-monthly on the largest sheet that can be afforded at one dollar and fifty cents, payable in advance.

The undersigned were appointed a committee, by the Illinois Conference, to ascertain the prac- ticability of publishing a periodical in this dis- trict, and with that view now send forth this prospectus.

ON PRAYER.

It appears evident to my mind, that the necessity of prayer, has its foundation in the weekness and entire helplessness of human nature. If any human being could be found, who was not indebted to the Deity for existence, or favors, the propriety of prayer from such a supposed creature, to Jehovah,might not appear so obvious. It is a fact that men and wo- men, the descendants of Adam,are indebt- ed to God for their existence, and are e- qually dependent on him for all the bles- sings of his grace and providence, to make them happy in this life, and to prepare them for a state of immortality which he has promised to them in the gospel.

Whether fallen beings, depraved as men are in their origin, and corrupt in their practice, could have seen the pro- priety or advantage of making supplica- tion to the Divine Being, for a redress of their wants, without instruction and encouragement from the Parent of all Good, is a matter of some doubt. In an early age of the world, but after the promise was made that "the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head," we read that men began to call on the name of the Lord. And there is no doubt but they were taught so to do by the great Author of Nature. We find under the various and succeeding dispen- sation of God's government of the human family, namely, Patriarchal, Prophetical and Christian, He has enjoined upon his creature man, dependent man, to call upon him in prayer, and that he has promised to hear and answer the sincere petitions of his needy creatures. The reasonableness of making prayer to such a Being as Jehovah hath revealed him- self to be in the Bible, will appear very evident if we consider the feebleness and circumscribed power of man; that he is imbecile in a moral or scriptural point of view, possessing no saving health or strength;—having far gone from original righteousness and not capable of success- fully encountering one spiritual adversa- ry. But when we contemplate the attri- bute of God we discover that he is unlim- ited in power and can do all things, what- soever he willeth in heaven or on earth. He said "let there be light and there was light." "He stretched the North over the empty space and hung the earth up- on nothing." Surely there is a suitable- ness in human beings praying to such a God.

Further if we view ourselves as guilty and sinful, as having our souls contam- inated with impurity and moral evil, there is a sufficient reason why we should look to the Holy one of Israel, who has said "look unto me all ye ends of the earth and be ye saved." Viewing man as a rebel against his maker, a pardon is ab- solutely necessary for him. But have we ever heard of a penitent being pardon- ed without prayer? Was Saul of Tarsus pardoned without prayer? Was the jai- lor? Was the thief on the Cross? It is true, prayer is not the specified or dis- tinctive condition of justification or accep- tance with God. Repentance for sin, and faith in Jesus Christ are the most promi- nent conditions of pardon. Yet prayer to God for his mercy is always supposed to be concomitant or attendant with re- pentance and faith. It is of great impor- tance to understand the nature of prayer. Without attempting to give any nice the- ological definition of prayer, I will say it is the sincere request of the heart to the Invisible Jehovah for some needed bles- sing. It seems to imply something more than the simple desire of the soul. It is an exertion of the heart towards God; a putting forth of the desires and wants of the soul to the Deity. Prayer may be per- formed mentally or orally. It may be with the utterance of the lips or without the ex- pression of the tongue. It may be in secret or public. In the church or in the closet. As to the posture of the body, it is not essential to success in prayer. It may be acceptably performed standing on our feet or prostrate on our faces, or bowed on our knees; the latter is preferable and perhaps the most scriptural. I have no recollection of any example in scripture of persons sitting to make a formal address to Jehovah, though doubtless we can maintain the spirit of prayer in this position; and when a congregation is seated to hear the word of God proclaim- ed, every hearer should pray mentally or ejaculatory, and have his heart lifted up to God, in the behalf of the ministry and for the success of the truth, that the word of God may run and be glorified.— And if occasionally at the end of some emphatic sentence, or petition, by the officiating minister, any of the hearers may respond a hearty 'Amen' to what was said, it will not offend a minister of the new or old School, provided he has been rightly schooled himself.

Supplication to the Divine Being is one great and indispensible duty of chris- tians. We have a very poor opinion of any man's piety who does not pray much, and especially a professed minister of the gospel who ministers in holy things; who is sent of God or should be sent of God to point sinners to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. But if he be not a prayerful man, how will he know whether he is sent of God or himself, or whether Satan be not trans- formed into an angel of Light. The maxim of St. Paul is pray without ceas- ing, and the precept of Christ is pray always and faint not. But as my sheet is full, I must come to a close. If you think this worthy of a place in the Re- corder, I may resume this subject in an- other letter. May God's blessing attend your labors, and prepare all our souls for a better world than this, is the prayer of your affectionate Brother in Christ,

REUBEN T. BOYD.

RESOLUTION OF THE ILLINOIS ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Resolved, That this Conference do hold that, according to the principles of dele- gation and mutual rights, and the consti- tution of the Methodist Protestant Church, the delegates of the unstationed ministers, at each session of the Annual Conference previous to the sitting of the General Conference, are entitled to their seats du- ring the entire session, and all the rights and privileges that other members of said conference are entitled to.

The above resolution was passed at Canton, Fulton county, Illinois, Septem- ber, 1839, and ordered to be published, but from some cause it has not appeared yet. W. H. COLLINS, Pres't.

Mr. Editor: If you please, publish the following sum as a puzzle.

Suppose a pole 40 feet high 4 inches in diameter at the bottom, runs to a point at the top, how much wire will it take to wrap it one ine inch apart, and how far must a man walk to unwrap the wire, commencing at the bottom? J. B.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MEDINA, O., MARCH 10, 1841.

Br. Springer: I would say to our friends through the columns of your ex- cellent paper, that, considering the state of Wayne circuit when I reached it, in connexion with the youth and inex- perience of its superintendent, we have reason to be encouraged.

We commenced a protracted meeting at the Killbuck society, on the Saturday after the rise of the Annual Conference, which was continued several evenings successively, and resulted in the conver- sion of quite a number: ten were added to the church. Our first quarterly meet- ing, which was held at Br. Cass', was one of interesting character; the church was built up, especially the Waynesburg society. The Great Head of the church was with us; sinners were converted, and some accessions to the church. Dr. Cass sustained the greatest weight of the meeting, which was protracted a num- ber of days. The last named society was in quite declining circumstances when we reached it, but through the mercy and blessings of God, it is advancing. They were then destitute of a house of worship but have since purchased ■ very comfort- able church, and are looking forward to days of prosperity! May the Lord send them speedily.

Our second quarterly meeting was held at Carlisle, Loraine co. Some peri- ods of this meeting were very interesting. It was productive of good. Here we have a small but good society. Br. Wil- liams, an unstationed preacher, is a mem- ber, and has labored with a good degree of acceptability with them, but we have but little benefit from his labors elsewhere in consequence of his remoteness from the main body of the circuit. Father Armstrong has labored with us on our quarterly occasions, and has always stood ready to assist when necessity re- quired.

My health being delicate, and in conse- quence of a lack of ministerial help, we have not made many protracted efforts, the winter past. Not long since we held a two day meeting at East Union, at which we had the labor of Br. Cochran of the Granger circuit. Although there was at the meeting apparently little good affected, yet we have reason to be- lieve that there was work done prepa- ratory to a greater display of divine mer- cy.

On the whole we are gaining ground. We have received some TWENTY-FIVE into the society—have generally a good state of feeling, and we will say, al- though the circuit is small, in numbers, yet they are a good people and have thus far, this year, labored in sustaining the spiritual interests of the church. We expect to form a number of societies soon under favorable circumstances, as we think. We have to travel about 140 miles to get round our charge, which is performed in two weeks, in addition to preaching to average thirteen times.

We attended the second quarterly meeting for the Granger circuit. It is still in progress, and has been a time of grateful visitation. Some evenings there were to exceed fifty forward for prayers. Br. Cochran is highly esteemed on that circuit, and under his faithful adminis- tration, the work of the Lord seems to be prospering. He will, probably, give you the particulars of the above named meet- ing. Yours in the best of bonds,

A. W. RUSSELL,

LAFAYETTE CT., IA., MARCH 13, 1841.

Br. Springer: Our second quarterly meeting for Lafayette circuit commenced on the 6th inst. at Clarksburgh, elev- en miles South of Lafayette. Our breth- ren in the ministry, were Ilekenhons, Beal, Bains, Hosea and Davis. Our meeting continued until Monday night; we had good congregations, and good at- tention. Many were almost pursuaded to be christians. I have no doubt but that the effects will be realized in eterni- ty. We have general peace in all our borders without any thing to mar our com- forts. We believe that the principles of freedom, are taking deep root in this part of the work.

Our next quarterly meeting will be held on Sugar Creek, on the first Satur- day and Sunday in June. I remain yours in the bonds of brotherly love,

WILLIAM J. BLEDSOE.

MT. VERNON, MARCH 17, 1841.

Br. Springer: Our quarterly meeting continued to the following Sabbath even- ing after you left with increasing inter- est; eight were added to the church.— The society continues to grow in the fa- vor of the Lord and raise in public opin- ion. Our congregations are large and daily increasing.

We expect to commence our first Sab- bath School, for the season, next Sabbath. We have now, on our list, between sev- enty and eighty scholars, to which there will be an addition of about fifty in a few weeks. We have also raised about ten dollars, to which there will be an addi- tion of five or ten dollars more for a li- brary: this, together with what books we have on hand, will secure us an ex- cellent library. Should you know where we can purchase books to a good advan- tage, please communicate it through the Recorder. Yours, &c.

J. B. ROBERTS.

SHARON, PA., MARCH 10, 1841.

Dear Brother: I regret to inform you of the state of my health at this time; through exposure to the weather, and constant labor I have been again attacked with my old disease. fever and ague, but still hope for the best. I feel happy to inform you that this circuit is in a pros- perous condition. We have received something like one hundred and fifty into Church membership since Confer- ence; and our prospects are brightening.

I remain yours in the bonds of Chris- tian friendship, PHINEAS INSKEEP.

TIPPECANOE, IA., FEB. 20, 1841.

Br. Springer: Our quarterly meeting closed on Sabbath. We had a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. We had some additions and the prospect is good. There is nothing among us to mar our peace.

Inquiry has been made about our Pre- sident, Br. Hanna;* he is here and brea- ched to a crowded house of attentive hearers; he is actively and zealously en- gaged in the work. On his way to this meeting he was obliged to leave his horse at Tippecanoe, on account of the ice, and come ten miles through the frost and snow on foot. We had to our assistance also, Br. Griffith, of the United Brethren, and Br. Robinson, of the "Old Ship," Br. Bledsoe, of Lafayette circuit, and Brs. Eliconhontz and Rains, local preachers. God abundantly blessed us, and we found it cheering for brethren to dwell toget- her in unity. Our next quarterly meeting is to be at Pleasant Hill meeting house, on the first and second of May. Breth- ren come and help us. Yours, &c.

A. HOZEY, Supt.

*The letter to which we referred in our last, in reference to the illness of Br. Hanna, is dated March 13th, and the writer says he resides on his circuit. ED.

LITTLE HARRIET.

"Harriet," said Mrs. Perkins to her lit- tle child's nurse, "I'm going up stairs to finish a piece of work. If Mrs. More calls, tell her I am not at home." "Yes ma'am," was the reply; but as soon as Harriet was seated in the nursery, she began to ask herself, "will it be right to tell Mrs. More that Mrs. Perkins is out?" would it not be telling a lie; was it not two weeks last Sabbath that my Teacher talked to her class about the sin of lying? I remember she said, if we indulge in this sin in childhood, it will probably beset us when we become women, and that now is the time to avoid it—she said too, that one reason why so many men and women have such a propensity to falsehood, is, that they had been trained to it when they were children, and the habit had grown so strong they found it very difficult to re- sist the temptation. Little H. now felt quite uneasy—what to do she could not imagine. The dread of offending one who had during the month she had lived in the family, treated her with so much kindness, at length led her to think that for this once she might comply with her wishes; but the conscience and under- standing of this poor child were two much on the side of truth to let her rest conten- ted many hours after this determination. A knock was soon heard at the door, and such ■ beating of the heart and trembling seized her, that she was scarcely able to raise the latch. It proved to be the Let- ter-carrier. As she returned to the nur- sery, she burst into tears and exclaimed, "O if that had been Mrs. More, I should not have dared tell the lie." From this she no longer hesitated; difficulties all van- ished, and when the baby was asleep, she went to Mrs. Perkins, and asked permis- sion to tell Mrs. More, that she was enga- ged, and did not wish to see company— "A pretty message indeed, to deliver to Mrs.More! Why girl,what has come over you—have you taken leave of your sen- ses? do you mean to dictate to me?" "O no ma'am, but the Bible speaks against telling an untruth, and my Sabbath School Teacher says it's very wicked." "Your Sabbath School Teacher! and who is she I wonder! some one I presume as ignor- ant as yourself—pity she hasn't better employment than to be putting mischief into your head; I should like to know whether you are any better than my own children that have done the same dozens of times. For your impertinence, how- ever, you may look out for another place, and that too this very day; but I want you to remember that you will never fare so well again as you have done here."

Harriet's mother, being an intemperate worthless woman, who had long forsaken her daughter, and taken no interest either in her temporal or spiritual welfare, lit- tle H. could of course obtain no counsel from her, but was under the necessity of seeking a home for herself. Tears fell fast from her eyes, at the thought of not only being homeless, but friendless and desolate. The Lord's eye however was fixed upon her, and he no doubt directed her steps. She had gone along several streets, when, in her perplexity to know which way next to bend her course, she stopped at the corner, just as an old lady was crossing the street. "Do you know," said the lady, in a soft tender voice, "of any little girl about your own age who wants to hire out?" "I am looking for a place ma'am," said Harriet. After paus- ing for a moment, the old Lady remark- ed, that she was not in the practice of ta- king strangers into her house, without in- quiring into their character; but being at this time much in want of some one to do errands, she might if disposed, go home with her. A short time after they turned the corner of the street, little H. was at her pleasant home. Mrs. Jewell, her daughter Miss Susan, and an old domestic composed the family. To the little strang- er every thing went on pleasantly, thro' the day, but what was the joy of her heart at night, when Miss Susan took up the Bible, read a chapter, and com- mitted the family to God in prayer.— A portion of each day was devoted by Miss Susan to instructing Harriet and so great a favorite she became, that no pains was spared to teach her all the most use- ful branches of an English education.— She was also instructed in the doctrines and duties of religion—the Bible was ■ precious companion—lessons for the Sab- bath School were well studied, and so much interest was manifested in all her Teacher would say, that she seemed un- willing to lose a single word.

Will the dear Sabbath School children who may read this account of little H. like her pay strict attention to the instruc- tions of their pious Teachers, and so trea- sure in their hearts the blessed truths they are taught, as to remember and practice them through the week? Then they will not only fear to tell a falsehood, but will dread sin in every form.

"Have children never heard or read,
How God abhors deceit and wrong?
How Annanias was struck dead;
Caught with ■ lie upon his tongue?

So did his wife Sapphira die,
When she came in, and grew so bold,
As to confirm the wicked lie,
That, just before, her husband told.

The Lord delights in them that speak
The words of truth; but every liar
Must have his portion in the lake,
That burns with brimstone and with fire."

COMPLETE CENSUS OF THE UNITED STATES FOR 1840.—We have the pleasure of pre- senting our readers with the complete aggregate result of the Census for 1840, and we believe we are the first to give it entire. The Secretary of State furnished all the returns he had to the House of Representatives. By the politeness of Mr. Cist, we are furnished with these.— They lack however, three States and sev- eral counties, of which we have the States and part of the defective returns, from lo- cal papers. We shall first give the to- tals with the ratio of increase for each, and hereafter furnish some comparative tables.

The Census now taken is the sixth since the adoption of the Constitution, & shows conclusively that the population of the United States moves on with the same uniform law of progression, with- out reference to emigration, disease, or any other cause. This law is an increase of one third of the existing population for each period of ten years.—Cincinnati Chronicle.

*One county and part of another in Pennsyl- vania were wanting for which, however, we have added their proportions.

†Some small counties are wanting in Georgia but probably contain but few inhabitants.

‡The western district of Louisiana is omitted. This with Florida, also omitted, will make up about 150,000 to be added to the sum total.

AN OLD NEWSPAPER.—There is noth- ing more beneficial to the reflecting mind than the perusal of an old newspaper.— Though a silent preacher, it is one which conveys a moral more palpable and for- cible than the most elaborate discourse. As the eye runs down its diminutive and old fashioned columns, and peruses its quaint advertisements, and by-gone para- graphs, the question forces itself on the mind—where are the busy multitudes whose names appear on these pages?— where is the puffing auctioneer, the push- ing tradesman, the bustling merchant, the calculating lawyer, who each occupies a space in this chronicle of departed time? Alas! their names are now to be read on the sculptured marble which covers their ashes! They have passed away like their fore-fathers, and are to be seen no more! From these considerations the mind naturally turns to the period when we, who now enjoy our little span of ex- istence in this chequered scene, shall have gone down into the dust, and shall furnish the same moral to our children that our fore-fathers do to us! The sun will then shine as bright, the flowers will bloom as fair, the face of nature be as pleasing as ever, while we are reposing in our narrow cell, heedless of every thing that once charmed and delighted us!

A POOR STATE.—The St. Louis New Era says—"The Legislature of Missouri adjourned just in time, for it is literally true, that there was not money enough in the Treasury to have paid the members a single day longer.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... MARCH 31, 1841.

ROBINSON'S TRIAL.—We give the following extracts from the Report of the evidence on the trial of Peter Robinson for the murder of Abm. Suydam, as given in the Philadelphia Chronicle. Suydam was found buried under the floor of Robinson, and is supposed to have been murdered by the latter to get from him a mortgage on his property for 780 dollars. This testimony illustrates the fact how difficult it is for a man to conceal his guilt, as circumstances are ever ready with her thousand tongues to proclaim his condemnation:

FRIDAY, MARCH 19, 1841.

Jacob Edmunds, sworn.—I know the prisoner at the bar; I have known him for twelve years; heard the statement made by the last witness; he made that statement to me on the 12th of December, my son asked me how a man would proceed to take up a bond and mortgage; he made the communication to me on the 12th of December; the conversation with my son made an impression on my mind that Robinson had taken up the bond and mortgage; I went to see Peter Robinson on Monday, the 14th of December; I went to his house, and found him at work making mortar in the front basement room; in the front basement part there was a mason at work; I discovered that a new floor had been laid down, and I asked Robinson when he laid that floor; he said he had laid it down a few days previous; I then asked him where his wife was, and he said his wife had gone to New York and Newark, on a visit; he said he had concluded to finish his house, and he let her go in the mean time; I asked him if he had been to New York recently; he said he had a few days previously; I then said, Peter, there is an unsettled account between you and me, and I want to have it settled; I asked him to make it convenient to settle it that day; he said he would; I then asked him to walk out, that I wanted a little conversation with him; we walked out into the rear of Doctor Howell's house; I came up to the well, and looking down said, I wonder if this well has been examined for the body of Mr. Suydam.

He said, do you think Mr. Suydam is dead? certainly I do, said I; why I think he has run away, said he; the well has been examined, said he; said I, Robinson my son tells me you are getting along very well with Mr. Suydam; he tells me you have taken up that bond and mortgage; says he, I have paid him the money, and if you will walk to the house I will show it to you; I then stepped up to him and looked him right in the eye, (the prisoner at this part of the examination exclaimed in a loud voice, "I wish you would look me right in the eye now;") said I, Peter, Mr. Suydam is a murdered man. and from the fact of your having this bond and mortgage I charge you with being implicated in the murder; his countenance changed very considerably, and after stammering for some time he said, "do people suspect me of murdering him?" said I, Peter, I have come to tell you alone what my suspicions are, if you are an innocent man, and have taken up the bond and mortgage, honestly, you can tell me where you got the money from; he stated that he had the money out at interest and that he had called it in; I asked who had it.

He told me he could not tell me the person who had it; he did not wish to tell me; I told him he must tell me, or I should have him arrested, and compel him; he then turned the subject, and we proceeded on to my house, about a quarter of a mile distant; as we were going along together, he said, could you suspect me of murdering the man; I said, Peter, I suspect you of murdering Mr. Suydam, to get the bond and mortgage, but I hope you have not; I hope that you will satisfy me that you have not; he then bought two window sashes of me, and paid me with a five dollar note of the Bank of Rochester; I told him he had not satisfied me about the bond and mortgage; he said he had a mason and carpenter at work, and must hurry back to the house, but that he would come back if I would name a time; he then said he would meet me at the lumber yard, at one o'clock; I think about half past 12 o'clock he came to my house; I finished my dinner and went down to the lumber yard with him; we settled our accounts; after we had passed receipts I closed the office door, and said, now Peter, I hope you are prepared to tell me where you got the money to take up that bond and mortgage; said he, I have had it by me eighteen months; said I, this morning you told me you had it out on interest, and called it in; said he, I told you no such thing; said I, have you had $300 in gold and 500 dollars in notes by you for 18 months?

Yes, he said, he had; he said it was a fact that he had the money by him; said I, your statements only go to strengthen my suspicions. He then appeared a little irritated and said "if you suspect me of murdering Mr. Suydam have me arrested;" I told him that was what I should do; he then left the office to return to his building, and I went to the Mayor of the city and told him my suspicions; myself and the Mayor, and two other gentlemen, then went to Robinson's house; when we got to the house, we saw Robinson, and the Mayor said he wanted to talk to him; he readily assented and went up stairs with him; Mr. Mealy, Mr. Cook, the Mayor and myself then went up stairs; the Mayor, then asked Robinson about the bond and mortgage, he said he had taken it up some four or five weeks previous.

The Mayor then asked what kind of money; I think he told him $300 in gold and the rest in State Bank notes; the Mayor then asked him if he had a receipt for it, and wished to see it; Robinson then went out of the room, and brought a policy of insurance; the Mayor told him this was not it, and he then went and brought the mortgage; the Mayor said there is no receipt on this; the Mayor then observed that Mr. Suydam had disappeared in a very mysterious manner; he asked Mr. Robinson if he would have any objection to go before Squire Conover to be examined; Robinson said he had no objections; the Mayor then said he would keep the papers.

By Mr. Graham.—I have known the prisoner twelve years; when I first knew him he was making looking glass frames; he has bought lumber from me twice; I always thought him a steady hard working man.

On the morning of the 14th of December, I found him making mortar in a little room partitioned off, in the front basement room of his house; there was a mason at work in the front room, the house was in an unfinished state; upon observing the floor had been newly laid, I asked him when he had laid it; I went there with the intention of taxing him with the murder of Mr. Suydam; he said he had laid the floor a few days previous; during the time I was driving a bargain with him for some window sashes, I told him I believed he was the murderer, and I intended to have him arrested that day; he said he did not think Mr Suydam was dead, but that he had run away. I should think it impossible for any man to be charged with murder and not change countenance; after a conversation about the bond and mortgage, we proceeded to my house; we got to my house; we had some conversation and he said he wanted to get back, as he had some men at work; he said he would return at one o'clock; I made no complaint to any officer about him; it was my agency in the matter that led to his arrest; there was nothing to prevent his escape in any way; he was not watched by me, or by my authority, by any one; he found me at dinner when he returned to my house; we went to my lumber yard; after we had passed receipts, I shut the door, and said, now, I want you to tell me where you got the money to take up the bond and mortgage; my son was in the room the whole of the time.

The conversation with Robinson, myself and the Mayor, at the house of Robinson, I do not pretend to be precise about; I think he knew the Mayor; he readily assented to go up stairs, and he did go up; he manifested no backwardness to show the bond and mortgage; he appeared perfectly willing; after having brought the policy and bond, he returned and brought the mortgage; the seal I think was cut off; I think the Mayor asked him when he had seen Mr. Suydam; he said he had not seen him for six weeks; the Mayor asked Robinson if he would be willing to go to Squire Conover's; he said, "yes, if you say so;" he readily assented to the Mayor taking the papers; we then went to Squire Conover's; the Mayor, Robinson, myself and William Robinson, and Mr. Neal.

By the Court.—The house was raised and enclosed in the fall of 1839; the floor looked to me to have been finished on Saturday, as I went on Monday morning.

David W. Vail, sworn.—I am the Mayor of the city; on Monday, the 14th of December, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Edmunds called on me, and made a communication in relation to the prisoner at the bar; the communication induced me immediately to go with three other gentlemen to the house of Robinson; there were four of us, and it was suggested that two should go round the square to the house and the other two go direct to the house: Mr. Mealick and myself went together; I inquired if Robinson was in; some person answered that he was, and Robinson appeared; I think he came down stairs; I asked him if he had a private room to take us into; that we wished to see him by himself; he said he had, and immediately went upstairs, and we followed him; he took us into the front room on the second floor; I inquired of him when he had seen Mr. Suydam last; he replied about six weeks ago; I asked him where he saw him, he replied, passing round Alexander Moore's corner, in Church street; "have you not seen him since that time?" he said "no;" I then asked him if he had not paid Mr. Suydam a bond and mortgage since that time; he said "Oh, no, I paid the bond and mortgage one week after I gave them;" I asked him to let me see them.

At my request he produced the mortgage and deed; I examined the mortgage and found no entry on it for payment of money; I then remarked that probably the entry would be on the bond, and asked him to get that; he then produced the bond and policy of insurance; I examined the bond and found it not receipted; the name was torn off; I then asked him where he got the money from to pay Mr. Suydam; he replied I do not know that I am obliged to answer where I got it from I replied that most of us that get 7 or 8 hundred dollars together can tell where it comes from; he then said he had the money in his house this eighteen months; I asked him why he had given Mr. Suydam a bond and mortgage for $780 while in March last he had the money; he replied I thought I might want it to furnish my house; I then said suspicion rests on you as the murderer of Mr. Suydam, and that we had examined a number of witnesses, he could have no objection to go to Squire Conover's to be examined; he said he should have no objection; if I desired it; we then went to Squire Conover's; the examination was commenced there. In consequence of something that occurred during the examination, we were induced to go back to the house; we went back to the house to get more papers and possession of a gold watch; we went in at the basement and into the back room of the basement story; some boards had been removed from the floor, and a hole dug; Robinson remarked that the hole was dug to get some sand for the masons. I asked him how long the floor had been laid, he replied a long time and we have been living here; we then passed into the front basement, the floor of which appeared to have been recently laid; his brother William was in the front room; I said to Peter, you had better at once submit to have this floor taken up and examined; he replied if you take up the floor, the house will fall down, the beams are so constructed; I said to him, we all know better than that; his brother William then interposed and said I helped to nail or lay this floor; I then urged him again to have the floor taken up.

He replied, it could not be laid down again as good as it then was, without sustaining some injury; I replied that any damage that was done, if nothing was found, should be remunerated; I asked a carpenter if the floor could be taken up and re-laid without damage; he said the damage would not be very much; I then pressed him again to submit to the examination of the house. He said we might begin at the roof and take down the house, but we should not take up the basement floor; I asked him soon after we got there for the papers and the gold watch, he told his wife to get the watch; she went and got it; gave it to him, and he gave it to me; we went up stairs with him for the papers; he opened a large tool chest in the front room of the main story, and took out some papers and gave them to me; nothing further occurred until we got back to the justice's office; I should know those papers again if I saw them; (the bond, mortgage, policy of insurance, and other papers were here shown to the witness,) I believe them to be the papers; (the name and seal were torn off the bond.) I have no doubt they are the same; I sealed all the things up, and put them in the vault of the State Bank; (the note spoken of by the first witness was here produced,) this was not among the papers; a number of receipts for various sums of money received by Robinson from Mr. Suydam, were here read to the Court; the signature, in every instance, was torn off. I cannot say whether those receipts are in the handwriting of Mr. Suydam; (a gold watch was handed to the witness;) I think this is the watch that was given to me by Robinson.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham.—I went to the house of Robinson next day, I examined it thoroughly; I think the floors were very dirty; large crowds were coming in and going out of the house; I discovered no hesitation in the reply of Robinson to my question of "when he last saw Mr. Suydam;" there was a little hesitation when I asked him where he saw Mr. Suydam; I am not positive that he said he paid Mr. Suydam the bond mortgage a week after they were given; he made no objection to my keeping the papers; he made no objection to go before the Squire; there appeared no necessity for taking hold of him; all the papers I received from Robinson were a policy of insurance for one thousand dollars, bond and mortgage for 780 dollars, drawn by Abraham Suydam, and several receipts with names torn off, also a note of $75, payable to order of William Robinson, deed of conveyance from Abraham Suydam to Peter Robinson, consideration three hundred and fifty dollars, and one gold watch attached by a chain of hair.

John Brush, sworn.—know the prisoner at the bar; on the 2d of December last I met Robinson on board the Steamboat Raritan, running between here and New York; Robinson said he had a question to ask me; I asked him what it was; he said he was going to pay the mortgage off, that Mr. Suydam had on his house, and asked me how he should do it; I told him there was but one way to do it, to pay the money, get a receipt, and take it to the clerk's office and get it cancelled; he then said he thought that was the way to get it done; he said a good many persons said Mr. Suydam would have his house, but he wanted to pay it off, and not let any one know it; I did not see him again until the 10th or 11th of December, when I saw him at Vanderhoof's in Burnet street; when I asked him if he had settled with Mr. Suydam, he said he had, but that Mr. Suydam had not receipted the mortage; he said he had paid it off in gold and silver.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham.—I have been examined upon this question before Justice Conover; I think I mentioned the name of Suydam before the Justice; I took Robinson to be a sober and steady man.

The Court here adjourned for a short time.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Elias J. Thompson, re-called.— [The receipts found in the house of Robison were shown to the witness.]—I believe these receipts to be in the hand-writing of Mr. Suydam.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham.—I did not know Robinson; I believe I employed him once as a carpenter.

William Robinson, sworn,—I am the brother of the prisoner. [An agreement between Peter Robinson and Abraham Suydam, relative to the building of Robinson's house, was shown to the witness.] I signed that paper; there was no duplicate made of it.

John W. Cortelgan, sworn.—I knew Mr. Suydam in his life time; I am a silversmith and watchmaker; I have frequently seen the watch that Mr. Suydam carried. (A gold watch was shown to the witness.) I was intimate with Mr. Suydam, and saw his watch often; I had it often to repair, and when I have a watch to repair I enter in a book the maker's name and number; I repaired it in October, 1836; I am certain this is Mr. Suydam's watch; it corresponds with the record in my book; I know it also, by its general appearance; I know the chain and key perfectly well.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham.—I was in the habit of regulating it; I do not recollect doing any thing to the watch within the last year; I cannot tell how often I have had it in my possession within a year; I think, within six months.

By the Court.—I believe it to be the watch that Mr. Suydam wore for four years.

Henry Evans, sworn.—I am a silversmith; reside at Newark; I have seen the prisoner at the bar; I saw him a week after the thanksgiving; he came to my store, and I believe offered a watch, and stated that it was very thick. (A gold watch and appendages was shown to the witness.) I believe this to be the watch from its general appearance; I knew that it was jewelled, and had a screw balance; I did not take the number of it; he gave me the name of William Brower when he left the watch; I put the name on a piece of paper, which I put in the watch. (A piece of paper was taken out of the watch.)

This is the paper, he was in my store about an hour; he looked in my case and saw a number of watches there, and I showed him a number of them; we made an exchange of watches; after that I asked him where he got the watch; he said at New York about nine months previous; I asked him where he had been to work; he said he had worked for a man out of town putting up a hand railing; I then asked him if he knew several caspenters whom I named; he said "no;" he said he had got through his job and was going to New York or Jersey City; he said he had the ague; I prescribed for him a little porter; he said he could not do that as he was a tee-totaller; (another watch was shown to the witness;) this is the watch I exchanged with the prisoner; I put a private mark on this; I gave him this watch; the key he bought and gave me two dollars for it; I think he told me he gave $100 for it at auction, for the watch he exchanged; we exchanged even; the chain on his watch he was going to put on the watch he exchanged, but said he had a sister that was about to be married in New York, and he would like to get some spoons for her; he told me to weigh the chain and guess the value of the key; [the spoons were produced in the Court;] these are the spoons; I have no doubt of it; the next day he came in, took out his watch, and said it was two or three hours out of time; I told him some one perhaps had been trying the key; he said perhaps it was so; I then asked him how his sister liked the spoons; he said she thought them too light, I told him if they were not scratched I would exchange them; he then picked out another set of spoons worth $8 and a shilling; he gave me the initials P. A. R. to put on them; those initials I put on the spoons; he bought a pair of sugar tongs at the same time; [the tongs and spoons were produced in Court] these are the articles; he never returned for the last set, nor did he bring the first set back.

Cross examined by Mr. Graham.—This person of whom I have been speaking was twice in my store; I do not recollect how he was dressed; I do not recollect what the color of the hat was; I did not notice his person particularly, or his clothes, or his hat; he was in my store about an hour the second day; I never saw him afterwards until I saw him before the justice. Robinson was brought in before the examination commenced; I do not recollect whether the person had whiskers on.

John W. Cortelgan recalled.—When I examined the watch I found it to correspond with the marks of the one in my book.

Lewis Carman recalled.—[A gold watch was shown to the witness.] This was Mr. Suydam's watch; Mr. Suydam, when he had engagements, generally placed the watch before him; I know it by the keys.

MURDER.—The feelings of this community have been shocked by a most horrid murder, which was perpetrated in the vicinity of this place, on Sunday evening last. Miss Rachel Whitacre, who has resided for the last twelve years with one of our citizens, was on a visit to her brother-in-law's, about two miles from this place, and on Sunday, about four o'clock, told her sister that she would take a walk. She did not return, and, altho' diligent search was made, her body was not discovered until Monday evening, about a fourth of a mile distant, with her skull broken. Suspicion has rested upon a young man named Kem, of a most respectable family. He is now confined in the county jail. We do not feel at liberty to give publicity to the many reports which are in circulation, as he will be tried by the laws of his country.—Richmond (Ia.) Palladium.

SMALL NOTES.—The Council of Wilmington, (Del.) have passed an ordinance for issuing bills or drafts of a less value than one dollar.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Correspondence of the "Journal of Commerce."

WASHINGTON, March 15, 1841.

Reconciliation between Mr. Clay and Mr. King.—After the Senate opened this morning, Mr. Preston rose and remarked upon the deep regret felt by himself and others at the collision which had lately taken place in the Senate between two of its most distinguished members. But he believed that the difficulty had arisen from a misconception on the part of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Clay) as to what was said by the Senator from Alabama (Mr. King.) He had it from an undoubted source that there was no intention on the part of the Senator from Alabama to wound the feelings of the Senator from Kentucky. He expressed a hope, therefore, that the unhappy difference might soon be settled to the mutual satisfaction of both parties.

Mr. Clay then said that although he had misconceived the tenor of the remarks of the Senator from Alabama, and had acted on the belief that there was an intention to wound him, yet being more prompt to repair than to repel an injury, he would say that he was now convinced that the Senator from Alabama had no design to insult him; and he now cheerfully took back all that he had said in reply.

A burst of applause followed Mr. C.'s remarks.

Mr. King rose and stated in substance, that he hoped his course here had been always marked by forbearance and courtesy; and, in reference to this matter, he would, after the frank declaration of the Senator, say that he had never meditated or uttered any thing intended to be insulting to him or disparaging of him.

Mr. Clay then advanced toward Mr. King and offered his hand, which was most cordially received. The galleries and lobbies then set up a shout of applause, which was not checked.

A GOOD ONE.—A very good widow lady who was looked up to by the congregation to which she belonged, as an example of piety, contrived to bring her conscience to terms for one little indulgence. She loved porter, and one day as she was receiving a half dozen bottles from the man who brought her comfortable beverage, she perceived (O Horror!!!) two of the great elders of the church approaching her door. She ran the man out the back way, and put the bottles under the bed. The weather was hot, and while conversing with her friends, pop went one of the corks.

"Dear me!" exclaimed the good lady, "there goes the bed cord! it snapped yesterday the same way!—I must have a new rope provided."

In a few minutes, pop went another, followed by the peculiar hiss of the escaping liquor. The rope wouldn't do again but the good lady was not at a loss.

"Dear me!" says she, "that black cat of mine must be at some mischief there. Scat!"

Another bottle popped off, and the porter came stealing out from under the bed curtains.

"Oh, dear me," said she, "I had forgot it's the yeast! Here Prudence, come take away these bottles of yeast!"—N. O. Pic.

SLAVE FACTORY DESTROYED.

Monrovia, Dec. 4—We have the pleasing intelligence to communicate to our readers, of the seizure of the buildings and property of that notorirus slave mart at Gallenas, which for years has been carrying on a horrible traffic in human beings. The particulars of the affair we have from the lips of the master of an American Brig now in our roadstead, who was at Gallenas at the time, on shore himself, and thus became acquainted with the whole transaction.

It appears that a preconcerted plan of arrangements had been entered into between the commanders of H. B. M. armed vessels, the Wanderer, the Saracen and the Rolla. On a certain day, as if accidentally, they all dropped anchor one after the other off Gallenas bar, and began to man their boats for an attack on the establishment on shore. The Rolla fearing that she would not arrive in time had early in the day sent her quota of men and boats to join the Wanderer, so that although she did not get to anchor until three or four P. M. her boats all manned, were prepared for the attack. As soon as all things were ready, 11 boats carrying 120 men, well armed, pushed off from the sides of the Wanderer and Saracen, and steered directly for the bar; passing through which they entered the river and began to near the field of action.

It appears that Don Pedro Blanco's establishment, is situated on a handsome little island, a short distance up the river and so surrounded by trees, as to prevent their seeing very distinctly the approach of any boats, unless from a kind of observatory which on this occasion was not occupied. Lieut. Denham, who took the command of the expedition, proceeded therefore unobserved, until the alarm was at last given, and the fears of the Spaniards were aroused. At first, however they supposed it was only a party of pleasure designing to pull about the river and then return on board. But soon the nearing of the boats directly towards the factories, told the whole tale. In a momen all was affright and consternation. No the least resistance was offered—not a musket fired. The slavers, had just time enough, and but that, to secure their papers, and taking the slaves they had on hand, made their escape to the bushes where they remained concealed. The British officers and men landed, took possession of the establishments, destroyed a quantity of property, but had not burned the buildings when captain —— left It was supposed they would pursue them and leave a small force to occupy the premises.

ANOTHER SLAVE FACTORY GIVEN UP.

Monrovia, Dec. 15th. 1840.—Mr. Editor.—In your last Luminary you gave your readers an account of the destruction of Don Pedro Blanco's slave establishment at the Gellenas river. That "slave factory" has long been a serious injury to the prosperity and growth of the colony of Liberia.

The Gallenas river is said to be about forty miles North from Monrovia, and it was at the mouth of this river that Blanco commenced and prosecuted the slave trade, with unparalleled success for a period of upwards of twenty years.

Since the breaking up of Blanco's establishment it is said that there are now no slaves taken from the whole of the coast between this place and Sierra Leone

I perceive I have greatly digressed my object in addressing you was to give you the substance of a report which has reached this place, and believe to be authentic: concerning the slave factory at the New Cess river.

New Cess is a river some twelve or fifteen miles below Bassa Cove, and has long been known as a principal slave mart.

New Cess, is in the territory claimed by the colony of Liberia, but has never been formally purchased; therefore, the proprietors of that place leased it out to Canot, for a slave establishment.

Canot has long been known on this coast as a veteran slaver, who periled life and liberty for the persecution of his favorite employment.

It appeared that on hearing the fate of Gallenas, he wisely concluded to compromise; and when H. B. M. men of War visited him they found him favorably disposed to negociate upon the following terms. He agreed to give up to the men of war all his stock of slaves, to discontinue the slave trade, to enter into a legitimate trade, say in ivory, palm oil cam wood, gold dust, &c. &c. &c. Upon these conditions it is said he was spared and left to repent for former misdoings

It is also further reported that he has applied for, and is to receive the protection of a British subject.

I sincerely hope that all is true, and that the time may soon come when the wicked shall cease from troubling this devoted continent.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT.—The steamboat John Randolph, on her way up the river last night, struck a snag in the Bend above Carrollton, and sunk soon after.—Loss of property estimated at 150,000 dollars—supposed to be mostly insured. Insurance on the boat 30,000 dollars.—She had on board a large quantity of coffee and other merchandise, besides about three hundred hogsheads of sugar. It is said twenty-two persons were drowned whilst another rumor makes eight missing. It is said that another steamboat disaster happened higher up the river.—N. O. Free American.

ITEMS.

Don't give your children too much advice. You may water the young seed with such a stream of words as to wash it quite away.

Not one Baptist negro in the Island of Jamaica, has been convicted of crime since the passage of the Emancipation act.

Hon. J. Phillips Phœnix has been nominated for Mayor by the Whigs of New York. Alderman Purdy will probably be put in nomination by the Democrats. If Mr. Ex-Recorder Morris is nominated, he will be beaten by an overwhelming majority. The people of New York will never indorse his infamous act of seizing private papers and thus violating the best privilege of a freeman.—New World.

UNITED STATES BANK NOTES.—Bicknell's Reporter says: "We learn that three or four banks are willing to make some arrangement to keep the notes of the Bank of the United States at par with other Philadelphia Bank notes, but the majority are adverse to this measure.—Something should be done if possible. The depreciation of the notes in question, is one of the worst and most injurious features of the times."

FATAL DUEL.—The Cincinnati Republican states, that a duel was fought at Alton, Ill. on the 4th inst. between Judge Smith, of the Illinois Supreme Court, and Mr. McClernand, late Secretary of the State of Illinois. They fought with rifles, distance fifty paces. Judge Smith was the challenger, and was killed on the spot.

NEW JERSEY.—The Legislature of New Jersey at their late session passed an act to prohibit tavern keepers, store keepers, confectioners, and hucksters, from entertaining minors under the age of 21 years, at colleges, academies, and schools for the purpose of instruction, and from selling to them strong drink.

THE AMISTADS.—It was reported at New Haven, that provision had been made for the protection of the Africans of the Amistad, by placing them in a position for their own support in an interior town. The Herald states that 'the order for their release has been communicated to the Marshal, and a guardianship taken out, from the Probate Court, in behalf of the three little girls.'

FROM HARRISBURGH.—We have nothing definite yet as to the probable course of our Legislature. We fear that no satisfactory measure will become a law. The suspension of the Banks will be legalized in all probability, but the prospect for small notes is not favorable.—Bick., 23d.

AN ACTIVE TRADE.—The official custom house returns show a remarkable increase in the direct trade between New Orleans and the Adriatic, owing in a great measure to the recent change in the Austrian quarantine regulation. The average annual amount of Cotton exported from New Orleans to Trieste from the year 1830 to1839, inclusive, was 1,561,014 lbs. But for the year 1840, the exports of Cotton from New Orleans to the same place amounted to 7,422,934 lbs.—ib.

MICHIGAN.—A letter from Detroit under date of the 11th, says, "A bill passed the Legislature to-day giving the debtor the privilege of turning out property to the creditor at two-thirds its appraised value; it applies to all mortgages and executions and judgments now standing. So you see no man in Michigan is obliged to pay a debt.—ib.

Accounts from the West, says the New York Express, are of a most gloomy character. Instances are known at Chicago of farmers selling their wheat at 40 cents per bushel, and afterwards selling the money which they received for it at 25 and 30 cents discount, bringing the actual price of the wheat to 15 cents per bushel.

PARDONED.—Gov. Richardson, of South Carolina, has pardoned Geo. W. Jones, who was lately convicted of making, but not issuing, a forged check for the sum of twenty dollars, and sentenced to be hung. Jones is to remain in prison for some time in expiation of the crime of grand larceny, of which he also stands convicted, and for which he has received several public whippings.

One of the Boston papers calls public attention to the fact that their fine harbor is becoming gradually filled up by the discharge into it of all sorts of rubbish, including the ballast of vessels in port. It also states that there is no existing law to prevent this.

NATIVE STEEL.—The Albany Evening Journal of Friday of last week contains a report by Prof. E. Emmons to the Legislature on the steel mine discovered in Franklin county. The Report is able, evinces a scientific investigation of the subject, and seems to prove incontestibly that native steel, to an indefinite extent, can be dug "out of the bowels of the harmless earth" in our own State. This discovery is of far greater value than the finding of a hundred gold mines.

TEMPERANCE.—The Cleveland, Ohio, Herald of the 13th inst. says that the Rev. Mr. McLaughlin, of the Catholic Church in that city, administered the temperance pledge to about ninety of his congregation the day before, and that he is laboring zealously among the people of his charge, in the temperance cause.

THE FRESHET.—The Savannah Republican of the 17th says: The waters from the country above have finally reached the latitude of this city. Yesterday afternoon the low grounds in Carolina opposite the town, were entirely submerged, and presented from the window of our office, the appearance of an immense lake.

ANOTHER VETERAN GONE.—Mr. Wm. Gillespie, whose chivalric conduct, while serving under Gen. Washington, during the Revolution, won from the chief great praise, and several commissions, died at his residence at Belleville, Richland co., Ohio, a few weeks since, aged 104 years.

The bill to abolish imprisonment for debt failed in the Council of New Jersey.

By the President of the U. S. of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS sundry important and weighty matters, principally growing out of the revenue and finances of the country, appear to me to call for the consideration of Congress at an earlier day than its next annual session, and thus form an extraordinary occasion, such as renders necessary, in my judgment, the convention of the two Houses as soon as may be practicable, I do, therefore, by this my Proclamation, convene the two Houses of Congress, to meet in the Capitol at the City of Washington, on the last Monday, being the thirty-first day, of May next. And I require the respective Senators and Representatives then and there to assemble, in order to receive such information respecting the state of the Union as may be given to them, and to devise and adopt such measures as the good of the country may seem to them, in the exercise of their wisdom and discretion, to require.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the United States, to be hereunto affixed, and signed the same with my hand.

Done at the city of Washington, this seventeenth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty one, and of the independence of the United States the sixty-fifth.

[L. S.] W. H. HARRISON.

By the President:
DANIEL WEBSTER,
Secretary of State.

We alluded in our last to an effort then in progress by certain banks of this city, to induce the Bank of the U. S. to make some arrangements calculated to keep her notes at par with those of other Banks. The matter has not yet been abandoned, though we fear the prospect of success is not particularly favorable. It seems that the only Banks which are exerting themselves very earnestly, are those which hold large portions of the post notes of the Bank of the United States. It will be remembered that those notes were taken in exchange for the ordinary notes of the Bank of the U. S., and with the object of assisting resumption. The condition of the Bank of the United States was examined by a Committee appointed by the other Banks, and the Committee asserted that with a specified amount of assistance, including the five million loan, the Bank of the United States could resume and with success. The assistance was obtained, but the resumption failed, for reasons heretofore described in our columns. The moment the last suspension took place, the other Philadelphia Banks held a meeting and decided not to receive the bills of the monster.—This was a rash decision, inasmuch as they themselves held five millions of dollars of post notes, and they thus discredited their own property.—The consequence is that the notes of the Bank of the United States are sadly below par.—Bicknell.

From the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle.

CONVICTION OF PETER ROBINSON FOR THE MURDER OF ABRAHAM SUYDAM.

New Brunswick, March 25, 1841.

About an hour after the close of my letter of last evening, Attorney General Molleson concluded his remarks to the Jury, and Chief Justic Hornblower delivered his charge. This was a quite an able and comprehensive review of the whole trial, and occupied more than two hours in its delivery. At half-past 8 o'clock the Jury retired, and returned again into Court at fifteen minutes before 10 o'clock, with a verdict of Guilty of Murder in the first Degree.

Neither of the prisoner's counsel were present, but in compliance with a request from one of them, Mr. Graham, the Jury were "polled," when each gave again the verdict previously returned by all.

Robinson received the verdict with composure, exhibiting the same callousness of feeling which has marked his conduct throughout the trial. His sentence was postponed until this morning, at half-past 11 o'clock, of which I will transmit you a report to-night. Yours, R.

ROBINSON'S SENTENCE.

New Brunswick, March 25, 1841.
Six o'clock in the Evening.

Robinson was brought into Court this morning, shortly after 11 o'clock, and received his sentence. He is to be executed, according to the laws of the State, in the County Jail, between the hours of 10 o'clock, A. M. and 2 o'clock, P. M., on Friday the 16th day of April next. He stood up as composedly as usual while this judgment was pronounced, and appeared to be little affected by the impressive and solemn ceremony. The Chief Justice exhibited a great deal of feeling, and seemed completely overwhelmed by his emotions when he pronounced the concluding words of the sentence.

It is said that Robinson offered to assist in erecting his scaffold this morning, and asked the sheriff if he did not intend to give him half the fees, as he would have to perform the hardest duty at the execution. He is a hardened wretch, and it is quite likely that this report is true.

Yours, &c.

CANADIAN LIBERTY, RIOT AND DEATH. We copy the following from the last St. Albans, (Vt.) Messenger.

By a gentleman direct from Henrysville, (Canada) we have an account of the most disgraceful and bloody riots, at the now pending elections, which we hasten to give, just as we are going to press.

From our informant we learn that at the close of the polls on Thursday, the radical candidate was 84 ahead of his tory opponent. Upon this being stated, the tories made an attack upon the radicals, in the school house where the polls were held, and the radical candidate, Franchere, was compelled to escape from the windows in order to save his life. The radicals retired and the tories perceiving that they had no arms, went to a hay rick, broke it up, and provided clubs for those of their party who were destitute, and pursued the radicals, and upon overtaking them, commenced an indiscrimate attack; two men seated in a sleigh were felled with blows from clubs on the back part of the head. Many others were seriously injured.—One in particular was knocked down by a blow across the back, and he fell out of the road; his assailants passed on, and the man arose on his knees, when others came up—the Canadian begged for mercy, but his assailants immediately knocked him down again with clubs, and beat him afterward till he was senseless! Among the assailants were several of the military, dressed in citizen's clothes.

On Wednesday, the polls were again opened, and at noon the radical candidate was 120 ahead, notwithstanding the efforts of the tories to brow-beat and force the radicals from voting. The number so exasperated the tories that a severe contest ensued, and the radicals being poorly prepared to defend themselves were severely injured. One or more of the latter have died, and many are so badly hurt that there are no hopes of recovery. The radical candidate has entered his protest and withdrawn from the canvass, and possibly the riotous scenes have ended for the present.

It is reported that three have been killed, but we do not credit it. In our next we shall have farther particulars.

BANG! POP!! BANG!!!—The editor of the Montreal Herald, after a hearty dinner on bombs, congreve rockets, and Paixhan cannon, sat down to his desk and penned the following article:

"Now is the time to strike an efficient blow, and dictate terms to our republican neighbors. Great Britain is strong, and the United States are miserably weak, defenceless and exposed. They have neither Army or Navy worth speaking of; Commissariat they have none; and they are equally deficient in fortifications. The republic is bankrupt, and has not the means of even commencing hostilities, far less for continuing them for any protracted period. Yet the press in the United States basely panders to the popular excitement in favor of a war, which must, in the end, dismember the Union, and exhibit the termination of the most successful republic which the world ever saw."

It is a wonder that he did no dislocate his wrist in the excitement of writing such a fire and brimstone article. We advise our volunteer companies to clean their muskets, provide themselves with cartridges, pick their flints, and sleep with one eye open, for fear this tremendous writer may take it into his head to march through our country, 'solitary and alone,' with a big sword, and six pair of Colts' repeating pistols. Peleg—shut the door and double-lock it, for we are already trembling with apprehension of danger. Phil. Chron.

ATTEMPT TO BURN A WHALING SHIP.—We are informed by the Newport, R. I., Mercury, that a letter from Capt. Griswold, of the whaling ship, Audley Clark, of Newport, to its owners, dated St. Catherines, January 4th, 1841, states that he had put into that port to put on shore three men, for the Consul to send home for trial, they having attempted to burn up the ship. One of the men, named Wm. Rankin, alias Bowlan, confessed before the Consul that he put fire to the train of combustibles at the instigation of Wm. Maxfield and Henry Wood, two seamen belonging to the ship. The fire was communicated through the hole in the forecastle bulk-head, but was fortunately discovered before it had done much damage, and was extinguished in about fifteen minutes. The only reason given for their diabolical conduct was that they wished to get clear of paying large bills which the ship had against them.

RECORD YOUR MORTGAGES.—The Cincinnati Republican says:—"In a case decided on Thursday last in our Superior Court, it appeared that Mr. Aaron G. Gano being the owner of one of the immense Pork Houses in Cincinnati, mortgaged it to the Commercial Bank for $19,000, to secure a bona fide debt. The mortgage was correctly drawn up, executed and acknowledged according to law, but was not immediately recorded by the bank. Before it was recorded, the Bank of the United States obtained a heavy judgment in Cincinnati against Mr. Gano, without notice of the mortgage. The Court (Judge Este) decided that the judgment was the prior lien on the lot and buildings, and thus, for want of recording in due time, the Commercial Bank has been cut out of $19,000. Such is the law of our State, vide Statutes of Ohio, vol 29, page 349."

THE FRESHET.—The Savannah Republican of the 27th says: The Southern Mail which left yesterday morning, returned to town at 5 o'clock, P. M. It was found impossible to cross Ogeechee River on account of the freshet. The water was nearly three feet higher at the bridge yesterday, than it was at the freshet last May. At the ferry house, we learn it rose a foot and a half above the first floor of that building. The bridge had not been carried away when the stage left.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE.—Great excitement exists in Kensington, N. H., in consequence of the sudden and unaccountable absence of a wealthy, respectable citizen, and a State Senator, from his home, he having been absent upwards of five weeks, and no intelligence obtained from him whatever, although the most unremitted exertions to that effect have been made by his friends.—Phil. Chron.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

CONNELSVILLE, PA., MARCH 23, 1841

Br. Springer: For the encouragement of the lovers of Christ and His cause, we would say through the medium of your paper, that we have a very encouraging state of things in this place. Scores of sinners have been seriously awakened to see their fearful condition, while living without God in the world during the last three or four weeks, and many have found peace in believing. The good work commenced among our brethren of Baptist church. Many were made the subjects of converting grace during a protracted meeting held by them. We do not know the precise number received and baptized, but suppose between thirty and forty.

Our second quarterly meeting commenced March 5th in this place; we were disappointed in our anticipated help.—The meeting began under rather inauspicious circumstances, yet we resolved to trust in God and do our duty, and it was not long until it was apparent to all that the God of Jacob was with us. A great number were powerfully awakened and we trust converted. The interest of the meeting has been rising gradually from its commencement until the present, and during its progress very many were made the subjects of converting grace.—It is now eighteen days since our meeting began, and from present appearances, it might be protracted a week or two longer with great advantage. The altar of prayer is still crowded with broken hearted penitents. Thirty-eight have united with us since the beginning of the meeting, among these are young men of promise, old men also, who have spent the chief of their days without religion, but we have grounds to hope they will yet become pillars in the church of Christ. Some also of the principal citizens of the place have united with us. Our unstationed brethren, I. Frances and S. Catlin, have labored zealously and successfully during the meeting. Br. Clarke, sr., came to our aid on Saturday and is still with us. We have labored for the conversion of sinners and have made but little exertion to swell our numbers—most of those who have united have professed peace. We are all worn out.—Oh, for help, and oh, that God may carry on the work.

Yours, &c., JAMES ROBISON.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP
CALEDONIA.

TWENTY-TWO DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

The Atlantic steamer arrived at Boston on Saturday, and we are indebted to private hands for Liverpool papers to the latest dates, namely, to the 4th March—London to the 3d, and Havre of the 2d.

The news of the suspension of specie payments by the United States and other Banks, had been received in England. The effect was not so disastrous as had been expected—but time enough had not elapsed to test its results. As far as known, however, the expression of American securities was great—United States Bank being quoted at low and merely nominal prices.

The bills drawn by the United States Bank on the house of Morrison & Co. had been accepted. One difficulty therefore, that had been anticipated, seems to be removed.

No news had been received overland, either from India or China. We have therefore, no later dates from the East, than have been already published.

Lord Cardigan had been tried in the House of Lords, on accusations arising out of his duel with Capt. Reynolds, and acquitted. The occasion was one of imposing solemnity. A portion of the public seemed to be much dissatisfied with the result.

The general aspect of European affairs was pacific—but it was said that England and the Allied Powers intended to remonstrate against the warlike demonstrations of France.

An extensive mercantile house had failed in Liverpool.

A War Movement in France.—In the Chamber of Peers, Marshal Soult had presented a bill for the levy of 80,000 men; and for increasing the term from 7 to 8 years. The deputies had already adopted the measure.

An animated debate had taken place in the Chamber of Deputies, on a proposition to vote a large sum for secret service money. The result was favorable to the Ministry by a large majority.

The Plague at Alexandria.—Many victims had already fallen, and the plague still raged violently.

The Caroline Affair.—We have contradictory accounts in relation to public opinion in England as to the Caroline affair.

A Dreadful Accident.—The ship Governor Fenner, bound from Liverpool to Boston, was run into by a steamer near the English coast.—Shocking to relate—upwards of 100 persons perished, and a vast amount of property was lost in the ship, which sunk in a few minutes.

Church Rates.—Mr. Easthope, member for Leicester, had given notice in the Commons, of his intention to bring in a bill to abolish Church Rates in England and Wales.

Large arrivals of wheat, oats and oatmeal, had taken place from Ireland. American Flour in bond, had sold on the 2d inst. at 35s. 6d. to 25s. 9d.

More of the Caroline.—We have just seen another paper containing Parliamentary Debates, in one of which we observe Lord John Russell said, in reply to a question from Sir J. Graham, that the pension to be granted for Lieut. McCormick, was recommended for wounds received in the "cutting-out" of the Caroline.

It was rumored in Paris, that the French Government had offered to mediate between England and the United States, in relation to the McLeod affair.

The "Acadia" arrived out in 15½ days.

Tea in London.—On the 2d, 3700 packages of tea were sold at better prices than on the sales of the 25th ult. The "Mail" states that the Tea Trade was very firm on the afternoon of the 1st.

A Great Failure.—The great failure at Liverpool mentioned above, was of a house engaged in the Dry Saltery and Turpentine distilling business. The amount is stated at between £70,000 and £80,000.

The American Chamber of Commerce in Liverpool.—At a recent meeting of the American Chamber of Commerce in Liverpool, resolutions were adopted in favor of some change in the commercial relations between Great Britain and the United States, and urging that sound policy calls for the admission of American grain, flour and rice, at a moderate fixed duty; and that the practical exclusion of American timber operated most injuriously on the British shipping interests, the manufacturers and the community at large.

More of the Dreadful Catastrophe at Sea.—Since publishing our "extra," we have perused the painful particulars of the loss of the "Gov. Fenner." It appears that she was run into by the steamer "Nottingham," and supposed to have been cut in half—as one portion of the wreck was afterwards fallen in with about 16 miles west of the "Skerries." Two men were seen in the rigging, and a boat proceeded instantly to take them off—but both were dead! All the accounts agree, that only the captain and mate were saved. The entire number of lives lost was 124!—Singular to relate, the passengers on board the Nottingham steamer were impressed with an idea that she would go down, and yet they made every effort to get on board the sinking ship—but fortunately they could not succeed, and so their lives were saved.

Burned to Death.—Two hundred and forty-five children have been burnt to death during the past year in the city of Westminster, and the eastern division of Middlesex.

FLORIDA WAR.

SPEECH OF MR. GIDDINGS, OF OHIO,

Upon the proposition of Mr. Thompson, of South Carolina, to appropriate 'one hundred thousand dollars for the removal, subsistence, and benefit, of such of the Seminole Chiefs and Warriors as may surrender for emigration.'—Delivered in the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Feb. 9, 1841.

Mr. Giddings said he rose to congratulate the country upon the prospect of bringing this unhappy war to a close. I am, (said he,) however, in some degree incredulous as to its speedy termination, by the means proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, (Mr. Thompson.)

While I would go as far as any member to bring this war to an immediate close, I think it important that we should carefully examine the causes that brought it on; the reasons of its repeated renewal and continuation, in order that we may be able to adopt such measures as will ensure peace at the earliest possible moment. I think that the plan proposed is defective in one particular; and before I take my seat I intend to offer an amendment, which, in my opinion, will correct the omission.

This war has become a subject of deep interest to the people of the nation. It has continued to occupy the attention of the Government and the efforts of the army for more than five years. Our officers and soldiers have fallen victims to the climate, and to the hostile tribe with whom we have been contending. Near forty millions of the national treasure have been swallowed up in this most unfortunate contest. The attention of our people has often been called to these facts; while few, very few, of them have been fully informed as to the original exciting cause of this war, or the manner in which it has been renewed and conducted. Our army has been defeated; and I fear that our national honor has not remained altogether untarnished. "Rumor, with her thousand tongues," has whispered of transactions which, if real, ought to be known; if not, these rumors should be forever silenced. The able speech of the gentleman from Vermont, over the way, (Mr. Everett,) in 1836, gave us some ideas of the manner in which the Indians with whom we are now contending were treated. Our own violations of the treaty with them, while we required a rigid observance on their part of all its terms, were clearly and ably expressed by him. It is not my intention to review our treaties with those Indians, or to speak of the manner in which those treaties were effected, or of the great injustice done to the Indians, except where these subjects have manifestly conducted to the disastrous war now under discussion. It is, however, my purpose to call the attention of the committee to the causes which led to these hostilities; to that policy which has involved us in the vast sacrifice of life and treasure, expended in Florida during the last five years; and to the effect which that policy has had upon the rights and the interests of the free States. I also propose to examine, for a few minutes, the manner in which this war has been conducted, as well as the effect which the conduct of our high officers of Government must have upon the feelings of the people of the free States, and upon the honor of our nation. In doing this, I intend to test the constitutionality of that policy, by those plain and fundamental principles of our Government to which I think we must all yield assent. In claiming for my constituents and the State which I in part have the honor to represent, as well as for the free States generally, the rights and privileges which I think belong to them, and which I think should be held sacred by every officer of Government, I shall rely upon no principle that has not been frequently asserted by the slave States, and by both of the great political parties. Indeed, I intend to assert no principle but such as will command the assent of every member on this floor.

I have made these preliminary remarks in order that the committee may the better understand what I intend to say hereafter: and, having stated my premises, I will enter upon an investigation of the causes which led to the Florida war. Before I do this, however, I will take occasion to say that the lands occupied by these Indians formed no inducement for us to enter upon this war. General Jesup says, "thousands would not pay for the medicines used by our troops while employed against the Indians." The Seminole Indians, by the treaty entered into at Payne's Landing, on the 9th of May, A. D. 1832, agreed to emigrate west of the Mississippi upon certain conditions. I shall not inquire whether those conditions were performed on our part, or whether the Indians were or were not morally bound to the observance of this stipulation. It is well known that they refused to emigrate, and that such refusal induced General Jackson to order the military force of the United States to Florida to compel them to emigrate. This attempted compulsion brought on the hostilities, which still continue. The important question now proposed, and which I intend to answer, is, why did they refuse to emigrate? The answer, however, may be found in executive documents of the 24th Congress, at its first session, (House doc. No. 271, p. 8.) in an official letter of Wiley Thompson, Indian agent, to Wm. P. Duval, Governor of Florida, dated January 1, 1834, nearly a year previous to the commencement of hostilities. Speaking of the unwillingness of the Indians to emigrate, General Thompson says: "The principal causes which operate to cherish this feeling hostile to emigration are, first, the fear that their reunion with the Creeks, which will subject them to the government and control of the Creek national council, will be a surrender of a large negro property, now held by those people, to the Creeks as an antagonist claimant."

Thus, sir, we have official intelligence that the principal cause of the war, was the fear of losing this "negro property." And we are led to inquire into the history of these conflicting claims to the "negro property" between the Creeks and Seminoles.

In the letter above quoted, General Thompson speaking further on the subject, says: "The Creek claim to negroes now in the possession of the Seminole Indians, which is supposed to be the first cause of hostility to the emigration of the latter tribe, grows out of the treaty of 1813 between the United States and the former." We have now traced the original and principal cause of this war, as given by the Indian agent, to the treaty of Indian Spring, made on the 8th January, 1821. This is the official report of an accredited officer of Government, who had long mingled in the councils of the Indians, and who was most familiar with their views, and whose word, I presume, was never doubted. I will now ask the attention of the committee for a moment, while I relate some of the historical facts that brought about this treaty of 1821.

We are all aware that Indians frequently commit trespasses upon the property of their white neighbors. In 1802, Congress passed a law by which the people of Georgia received pay for all such trespasses committed subsequently by the Creek Indians from the public treasury, and the amount thus paid was retained from the annuities or other monies due the Indians. By the treaty of 1821, an attempt was made to obtain for the people of Georgia, pay for slaves who had left their masters and taken up their residence with the Indians prior to 1812; and an agreement was obtained from them, consenting that the U. S. should pay to the people of Georgia the amount found due them for such losses prior to 1802, and retain the amount thus paid out of the money due the Indians for the lands sold to the United States; provided the sum thus found due should not exceed $250,000. The indemnity sought for the slaveholders of Georgia by this treaty, was for losses sustained twenty years prior to the treaty, and extending back an indefinite period.

Under this treaty the Creek Indians were compelled to pay for slaves that had left their masters forty or fifty years prior to the date of the treaty. Nor were they compelled merely to pay for slaves that lived or had taken up their residence with the Indians; but they were charged for the value of the slave when shown to have left his master without proof that he was with the Indians, or had any existence in their country. I speak upon the authority of Mr. Wirt, late Attorney General, as expressed in Executive Doc. No. 128, 1st session 20th Congress.—Nor were these abuses unaccompanied with others of equally flagrant character. Mr. Wirt, in the same communication, assures the President that the price allowed for a slave was two or three times his real value. Yet, after paying for all the slaves that could be shown to have left their masters, at two or three times their real value, together with other property taken or destroyed by the Seminoles prior to 1802, it was found that the whole amounted to but 101,000 dollars, leaving in the hands of Government 149.000 dollars belonging to the Indians. This money however, was not returned to the Indians, but was retained by Government until 1834, when the owners of the fugitive slaves petitioned Congress that it might be divided among them.—This petition was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Chairman, an honorable member from Georgia, (Mr. Gilmer,) reported in favor of dividing the money among the owners of the fugitive slaves as a compensation for the offspring which the slaves would have born had they remained in bondage. This plan, which I think sets at perfect defiance all Yankee calculations, was rejected by Congress. But a bill was subsequently introduced, providing for a division of this money among the owners of those slaves by way of interest, in direct violation of the treaty, and notwithstanding they had previously received two or three times the real value of their slaves; and this soon passed in a law. These slaves had, most of them, united with the Seminoles or runaways in the peninsula of Florida, and the Creeks, (from whom the Seminoles had formerly separated,) having paid to the people of Georgia two or three times the value of those slaves, now claimed them as their property. The Creeks had mostly gone west of the Mississippi, and their agents were in Florida demanding these negroes of the Seminoles. The Seminoles, in the mean time, it is said, had intermarried with the negroes, and stood connected with them in all the relations of domestic life. If they emigrated west, their wives and children would be taken from them by the Creeks as slaves; if they remained in Florida, they must defend themselves against the army of the United States. With them, sir, it was war on one side, and slavery on the other. This state of things was entirely brought about by the efforts of our Government to obtain pay for fugitive slaves of Georgia.

This interference of the Federal Government in behalf of slavery in Georgia, appears to have been the origin of all our Florida difficulties.

[Mr. Warren, of Georgia, called Mr. Giddings to order on the ground of irrelevancy.

The Chairman, Mr. Clifford, of Maine, decided that the remarks of Mr. Giddings respecting the origin of the Florida war were in order; and Mr. G. proceeded.]

I think this interposition of our Federal Government unconstitutional and improper, and will assign the reasons of that opinion.

[Mr. Habersham, of Georgia, called Mr. Giddings to order, and stated that the gentleman from Ohio had intimated his intention to offer an amendment to the proposition before the House, and was proceeding to make a speech pretty freely interlarded with abolition, while this committee were yet uninformed as to the terms of the amendment he intended to offer.

The Chairman stated that the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio had reference to the proposition before the House, and were therefore in order.

Mr. Habersham desired to hear the amendment.]

Mr. Giddings resumed. I arose, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the Florida war, and I intend doing so, and cannot be drawn off upon any collateral points, nor frightened from it by the cry of abolition.

I will, however, say to the gentleman from Georgia that I have not said, nor do I intend saying, one word upon the subject of abolition, although I may perhaps touch upon the doctrine of State rights and strict construction.

I hold that if the slaves of Georgia or any other State leave their master, the Federal Government has no constitutional authority to employ our army or navy for their recapture, or to apply the national treasure to repurchase them. We possess no constitutional power to do either. If however, gentlemen of the South, who hold to a strict and rigid construction of that instrument, will point me to the clause of our constitution containing such authority, I will confess my obligations to them. Such power would necessarily include the power to tax the free States to an indefinite extent for the support of slavery, and for arresting every fugitive slave who has fled from his master, within the several States of this Union. Such power I deny most distinctly and emphatically. But, sir, we have as much right to do this directly as we have to do it indirectly. We have as much power to employ our army and navy in re-capturing fugitive slaves as we have to make a treaty with the Indians to retake such fugitives, and then employ our army and navy to compel the Indians to do it. We have as much power to tax the free States and apply the money directly for the purchase of fugitive slaves as we have to tax them to carry on a war for the purpose of compelling the surrender of such slaves; or even to apply the national treasure to the the holding of such treaties.

In truth, sir, we have no power whatever over the subject or institution of slavery within the several States of this Union. We have neither the power to sustain nor abolish it, to create nor destroy it. I mean, sir, that we have no such powers delegated to us for any purpose whatever. We have not the power to sustain it in the South, or establish it in the North. I know it is said, and repeatedly asserted, that a portion of the people of the free States hold that we have power to abolish slavery in the States. I can only say that I have never met with any intelligent man who has advanced such doctrine in my hearing.—For my own part, I believe we have as much power to establish slavery in the free States as we have to abolish it in the slave States. I say nothing of the constitutional power of Congress over the slave-trade between the States. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to believe that any gentleman on this floor will urge the right of taxing the freemen of the North for the holding in slavery the colored men at the South.

I would not use those distinctions of North and South, could I avoid them. Yet I think no apology is due from me on this point, as I have constantly heard them used, and repeated, and reiterated by gentlemen from a certain portion of the Union, during the three years I have had a seat in this hall.

But, sir, I wish further to look into this power, or rather want of power, in Congress over slavery within the States of this Union.—In December, A. D. 1838, the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. Atherton) introduced in this House, a resolution expressing the sense of the House in regard to this power,

[The Chairman informed Mr. Giddings that the discussion of those resolutions would not be in order.]

I had, Mr. Chairman, no idea of discussing those resolutions. I merely refer to one of them, as expressing the views of the North and of the South on the subject. It speaks the voice of all the hundred and ninety-eight members who voted for it. It reads as follows: "Resolved, That this Government is a Government of limited powers: that by the constitution of the United States, it has no power whatever over the institution of slavery in the several States of this Union." This resolution received the almost unanimous support of this House. There were one hundred and ninety-eight votes in favor of it and but six against it. I voted for it myself, because I deemed it correct. Every member from the slave States voted for it. I shall be slow to suspect that any of those gentlemen will now change their position, and say that we have power to sustain slavery; and that in voting for the resolution, they only intended to say that we have no power whatever over the subject to abolish it. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that the Federal Government has at times interposed its influence to obtain for the citizens of slave States, compensation for slaves taken by Indian tribes and Great Britain. But this fact furnishes no argument against the position I have assumed. The cases alluded to were merely the acts of the Executive, interposed by common consent, without discussion or objection, for the purpose of obtaining from such tribe or Government, a compensation which we have uniformly refused when demanded of ourselves; for I believe it to be well understood, that we have never in any instance paid the owner for the loss of a slave, even when such slave was pressed into public service, and killed while thus in the employ of Government. The Florida war, having its origin in attempts on the part of the Federal Government to sustain slavery in one of the States of this Union, is so far unconstitutional, and is directly opposed to the doctrine contained in the resolution above quoted, which received the unanimous support of the slave States.

And now, having called the attention of the committee to the remote and principal cause of this war, I will ask their attention to some of the more proximate and immediate causes. On the 21st of May, 1836, this House adopted a resolution calling upon the then President for "information respecting the causes of the Florida war." On the 3d of June, the President transmitted to the House sundry papers relating to that subject; among which may be found an address or petition of nearly one hundred gentlemen, said to be among the principal inhabitants of Florida, calling on the President to interpose the power of the General Government for the purpose of securing them in the possession of their slaves. These gentlmen, speaking of the Seminole Indians, say; "While this indomitable people continue where they now are, the owners of slaves in our Territory, and even in the States contiguous, cannot for a moment, in any thing like security, enjoy this kind of property."

This was a plain, direct, and palpable request for the President to interpose the strong arm of the nation in behalf of slavery. Nor did the President remain deaf to such request; but he immediately endorsed an order on the back of the petition, directing the Secretary of War to make inquiry, and, if the charges were found true, "to direct the Indians to prepare forthwith to remove west of the Mississippi." Soon after this, the treaty of Payne's Landing, having remained nearly two years unnoticed by the President, was sent to the Senate for their sanction; and every preparation was made to compel the Indians, by physical force, to remove west of the Mississippi. A correspondence was carried on with the officers of our army; and all the military force that could well be brought to Florida, was concentrated there, for the purpose of compelling the Indians, at the point of the bayonet, to emigrate. This was done without even laying the subject before Congress, or asking for any legislative sanction.

It is not my intention to enlarge on this point, or to comment upon this very extraordinary interposition of Executive influence in favor of slavery, without constitutional or legitimate sanction. Neither have I time to comment upon the manner in which the treaty of Payne's Landing was obtained from the Indians; nor upon the extraordinary terms of that treaty; nor upon the still more extraordinary method of enforcing the Indians to an observance of the compact by the use of the bayonet, without consulting the legislative authority, in defiance of justice, and without precedent. But I desire to examine into the causes of this war, and discover how far it has its origin in attempts by the Executive to support and maintain slavery at the national expense, and in violation of the rights of the free States. In doing this, I shall speak from no vague conjecture, or uncertain suspicion; but what I say shall be "from the book;" from documentary evidence and official reports.

The address to which I have called the attention of the committee, estimates the number of negroes among the Seminole Indians at that time at more than five hundred; and they declare it as their belief that four-fifths of them are fugitive slaves. On the 20th January, 1834, Governor Duval, in a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, says: "The slaves belonging to the Indians, have a controlling influence over the minds of their masters, and are entirely opposed to any change of residence. It will be best at once to adopt firm and decided measures; such as will demonstrate to the Indians the determination of Government to see the treaty justly and fairly executed. This cannot be done until the bands of outlaws, (fugitive slaves,) mentioned in the agent's report, are arrested and broken up: so long as they are permitted to remain, every Indian that is unwilling will seek their protection." No man, perhaps, possessed better knowledge of these facts than Governor Duval, who assures us that the negroes controlled the Indians, and that the Indians sought the protection and support of fugitive slaves. He further assures us that nothing could be done while those fugitive slaves were permitted to remain in Florida. If gentlemen will bear this advice in mind, they will better understand the policy that subsequently guided our army against the Indians.

In a letter dated January 26, 1834, Governor Duval says: "The slaves belonging to the Indians must be made to fear for themselves before they will cease to influence the minds of their masters." "You may be assured (says he) that the first step towards the emigration of these Indians must be the breaking up of the runaway slaves and outlaw Indians." Thus we are informed that the war must be first waged against the fugitive slaves. Perhaps I ought to explain that slavery among the Indians is very different from what it is among the whites. It is comparative independence. Hence the slaves of the Indians have a perfect horror of slavery among the white people. Of course the fugitive slaves and the Indian slaves become intimate friends, and act in concert for the liberty of all.

[E. Campbell, of South Carolina, called Mr. Giddings to order, and stated that the member from Ohio was evidently assailing indirectly an institution which, by the rules of the House, was not liable to be assailed.

The Chairman said that the gentleman from Ohio had expressed his intention to discuss the Florida war, and he had understood the remarks as having reference to that subject. The Chair could not attribute a different motive from that expressed by the gentleman himself. I am (said he) therefore constrained to say the gentleman from Ohio is in order.]

Mr. Giddings resumed. I was not aware, Mr. Chairman, that our rules protected from discussing any institution whatever. I will, however, assure the gentleman from South Carolina that I shall only allude to the subject of slavery so far as it has been the means of drawing forty millions of dollars from the public Treasury, and most of it from the free States; I intend to assail it and no further. Gov. Duval says "these slaves must first be made to fear for themselves." The war was first to be waged against slaves, for reason that they influenced the minds of their masters in favor of liberty. In other words, the war must be directed against the right of a slave to express his mind to his Indian master on the subject of human rights. Sir, these slaves were made to fear for themselves in pursuance of these intimations of Gov. Duval, as I will now endeavor to show this committee. On the 28th October, 1834, Gen. Thompson, in a letter addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, says: "There are many very likely negroes in this nation, (Seminole.) Some of the whites in the adjacent settlements manifest a restless desire to obtain them, and I have no doubt that Indian raised negroes are now in possession of the whites." Thus, sir, it seems that kidnapping was not unknown in that country. This same Gen. Thompson, the accredited officer of this Government, on the 9th January, 1835, advises Government, "that an expedition should be set on foot for the double purpose of DRIVING the Indians within their boundary and to capture negroes, many of whom, it is believed, are runaway slaves." And, sir, our army was put in motion to capture negroes and slaves, as we shall find in the sequel. But I wish to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to the manner in which these slaves, in the words of Governor Duval, were "made to fear for themselves." On the 28th July, 1835, John Walker, one of the Appalachicola chiefs belonging to the Seminole band, wrote General Thompson, Indian agent, as follows: "I am (says he) induced to write you in consequence of the depredations making, and attempted to be made, upon my property, by a company of negro stealers, some of whom are from Columbus, Georgia, and have connected themselves with Brown and Douglass. I should like your advice how I am to act. I dislike to make any trouble or to have any difficulty with any of the white people. But if they trespass upon my premises, and my rights, I must defend myself in the best way I can. If they do make this attempt, and I have no doubt they will, they must bear the consequences. But is there no civil law to protect me? Are the free negroes and negroes belonging in this town to be stolen away publicly, and, in the face of law and justice, carried off and sold to fill the pockets of these WORSE THAN LAND PIRATES. Douglass and his company hired a man who has two TRAINED DOGS for the purpose to come down and take Billey. He is from Mobile, and follows for a livelihood catching runaway negroes."

This, sir, is the language of a savage, addressed to his civilized neighbors. He called in vain for protection. A few days after the date of this letter, he was robbed of all his negroes: so says the report of the United States attorney, addressed to the Secretary of War, and dated April 21, 1836. But of the number of freemen kidnapped at the same time, we are not informed. At all events, "the slaves were made to fear for themselves," as Gov. Duval advised. Can we wonder that these Indians were driven to acts of desperation?

Here, sir, is the first mention I have met of the use of "bloodhounds" in this Florida war. They were used by "negro stealers," for the purpose of catching the colored people of Florida, and our officers have copied the example.—But I intend giving further examples of the use of bloodhounds before I close. I have, however, no time for comment. My object is to place facts before the people of this nation, and let every man make his own comments, and draw his own conclusions. I will give one more example of the mode of "teaching slaves to fear for themselves." E-con-chattimico was also an Indian chief of the Seminole band, living upon the Appalachicola river, and was, perhaps, one who signed the treaty at Camp Moultrie in 1832, by which we solemnly pledged the faith of this nation to protect the Indians in the enjoyment of their lives and property. The chief is said to have owned twenty slaves, valued at 15,000 dollars. These "negro stealers" were seen hovering around his plantation, and their object could not be misunderstood. By the advice of the sub-agent, he armed himself and people for the purpose of defending themselves. When the negro stealers learned that E-con-chattimico's people had armed themselves in defence of their liberty, (for they considered Indian slavery liberty, compared with white slavery,) they raised a report that the Indians had armed themselves for the purpose of uniting with the hostile Seminoles, and murdering the white people. On learning this, E-con-chattimico at once delivered up his arms to the white people, and threw himself upon their protection. Disarmed and unable to defend his people, they were immediately kidnapped, taken off and sold into interminable bondage. E-con-chattimico now calls on us to pay him for the loss he has sustained in the violation of our treaty, in which we solemnly covenanted to protect him and his property. Robbed, abused, insulted, and deceived, he emigrated to the West and now looks to us for a redress of the wrongs he has sustained. I give the substance of his statement, as related by him in his petition, and communicated by General Thompson, Gov. Duval, and the District Attorney of East Florida, and sworn to by several witnesses.

But, sir, this transaction, and others equally abusive, were soon known throughout Florida.—The Indians and negroes were thus admonished of the necessity of uniting their efforts and energies in defence of their liberty and lives. Gov. Duval, speaking of this transaction, in a letter to the Secretary of War, dated the 23d May, says "it was an outrage well calculated to rouse the Indians to hostility." These are the acts that have led us on, step by step, until we have found ourselves in the midst of a most disastrous war.

The men who committed these robberies, and kidnapped these negroes, were well known, for the acts were committed in open day; their names and places of residence are distinctly mentioned: but I have yet to learn that any one of them has been punished in any manner for this warfare against the liberty of the blacks and the rights of the Indians. Indeed, it seems to have been an object with some of the officers employed in Florida, to induce Government itself to enter into the business of capturing and selling slaves. J. W. Harris, disbursing agent of Government, in a letter to the Commissary General of Subsistence, dated, December 30, 1836, says: "I would respectfully suggest that you recommend to the honorable Secretary of War, that the annuity due to the hostile Indians be retained to defray the expenses of this war; and that the slaves who shall be captured, whom I believe to have been generally active instigators to our present troubles, be sold at public sale, and the proceeds appropriated to the same object." This is the first official proposition that has come to my knowledge, for the Government to enter into competition with the "negro stealers," by capturing and selling slaves. At the time this suggestion was made, we were engaged in open war with these people, who had sought liberty in the wilds of Florida. If they were captured, they would be prisoners of war; and for us to sell them as slaves, would be as much a violation of our national honor as it would have been for them to have sold, as slaves, such of our people as they were able to capture.

I may, perhaps, be permitted to remark, that among the people of the free States, nothing is regarded with so much disgust and abhorrence as the buying and selling of men, women, and children, and that this feeling is common among all classes and all political parties.

Mr. Chairman, I have called the attention of the committee to what is officially announced as the first and principal cause of this war, and also to some of the proximate and immediate causes. I think no man can doubt that it originated in the attempts of the Executive to support slavery by the influence and efforts of our national Government, in violation, as I think, of the constitution and of the rights of the free States. I propose to investigate the subject a little further, and to examine into the cause that led to its renewal and continuance.

On the 6th day of March, 1837, General Jesup entered into a conventional arrangement with the Seminole Indians, by which it was agreed that hostilities should immediately cease; that the Indians should emigrate west of the Mississippi; that they should be secure in their lives and property; and "that negroes, their bona fide property," should accompany them. By the terms of this compact, no negroes were included except those who were called the "bona fide property" of the Indians, although Gov. Duval, Gen. Jesup, and the Indian agent, all unite in saying that the Indians were controlled by the blacks. These blacks comprised both fugitive slaves and free people of color, who were connected with the Indians by marriage and consanguinity.—The attempt to separate them appears to me to have been hopeless.

The Indian who had married a fugitive slave, and reared a family of children, would not, in my opinion, quietly fold his arms and view his offspring and their mother marched off into interminable slavery, while he himself should go west. Nor do I believe that will ever be done. They are all the enemies of our country, fighting in arms against us. They have already cost us much treasure and the blood of many freemen.—If they surrender themselves "prisoners of war," I would send them all west together. No person can doubt our perfect right to do so; and I think justice to the nation and to the Indians requires it; General Jesup's attempt to separate them failed, and I believe all further attempts of that kind will fail.

This compact between General Jesup and the Indians bears date on the 6th March. On the 18th of the same month, a solemn remonstrance against this arrangement was signed by a number of gentlemen of high standing in Florida, and transmitted to the Secretary of War. These gentlemen totally objected to any pacification that did not provide for the re-capture of their fugitive slaves. They objected to the Indians going west until they should take and return to their owners the slaves who had escaped from their masters in Florida. The remonstrance may be found at 55th page of executive document of the House of Representatives, No. 225, of the 3d session of the 25th Congress. It is an interesting paper, but of too great length for me to read at this time. It shows, in a most palpable light, the views entertained by those gentlemen in regard to the cause and object of this war. Whatever others may have thought upon that subject, it is clear that they supposed the war to have been commenced and carried on for the purpose of aiding them in holding their slaves; and they declare it incompatible with the honor and dignity of the nation to permit the Indians to emigrate until they shall bring the slaves back to their owners. I have no doubt they felt that they were correct in their views; nor do I believe they entertained a doubt of the justice and propriety of taxing the free States to any extent in support of slavery. There was, however, a cessation of hostilities, notwithstanding these remonstrances. The Indians ceased for a time to plunder the defenceless families of Florida, to burn their cabins, and murder the defenceless women and children; but, sir, the fugitive slaves remained yet hidden in the swamps and everglades of that untraversed country. Peace on such terms appear to have been unacceptable to the people of Florida. I will not speak the conclusion of my own mind, however, on this subject, but will give you the words of a high officer of Government, who was on the spot, and who spoke from positive knowledge. I refer to General Jesup, who, in a letter dated 29th March, 1837, and directed to Colonel John Warren, speaking of the anxiety of the Indians to maintain the peace agreed upon, says: "There is no disposition on the part of the great body of the Indians to renew hostilities; and they will I am sure, faithfully fulfil their engagements, if the inhabitants of the Territory be prudent. But any attempt to seize their negroes or other property would be followed by an immediate resort to arms."

Thus we have the authority of General Jesup for saying that the Indians were anxious to maintain peace. That he was at the same time apprehensive that the people would attempt to seize the Indian negroes, I know not. He certainly exhibited fears upon the subject. For on the 5th April, being seven days subsequent to this letter to Col. Warren, we find that he issued a general order in the following words: "The Commanding Gen. has reason to believe that the interference of unprincipled white men with the negro property of the Seminole Indians, if not immediately checked, will prevent their emigration, and lead to a renewal of hostilities." The order goes on to prohibit any person not connected with the public service from entering upon the territory assigned to the Indians. In this order we have official intelligence that the whites did in fact interfere with the Indian slaves, or, in other words, they began to rob the Indians of their slaves almost as soon as hostilities ceased. As to the outrages committed upon the free blacks during the suspension of hostilities we have no information in this order, and are left to infer the course pursued towards them from the evidence I have previously given. If these people were sufficiently rapacious to rob the Indians of their negroes under such circumstances, it is easy to form an opinion as to the safety of the free colored people found with the Indians. How many of them, if any, were made slaves we know not. On the 18th April, twelve days after the date of his letter to Colonel Warren, General Jesup wrote to Governor Call, saying: "If the citizens of the Territory be prudent, the war may be considered at an end. But any attempt to interfere with the Indian negroes would cause an immediate resort to hostilities. The negroes control their masters, and they have heard of the act of your legislative council. Thirty or more of the Indian negro men were at and near my camp on the Withlacoohie late in March. But the arrival of two or three citizens of Florida, said to be in search of negroes, caused them to disperse at once, and I doubt whether they will come in again. At all events, the emigration will be delayed a month I apprehend in consequence of the alarm of these negroes."

The embarrassment into which General Jesup was thrown is quite apparent, notwithstanding his order of the 5th April. The people were anxious to hunt for slaves. The negroes, it would seem, were under constant apprehension, and fled when a slave catcher came into their vicinity. Whether the Indian negroes had cause for that fear, we are unable to judge, except from the documents before us. Between the Indians and our army, it appears, there was no difficulty whatever. But the difficulty appears to have been between the Indians and negroes on one side, and those who sought to rob the Indians and enslave the blacks on the other. It is also quite evident that some of the people of Florida were restless under the order of the 5th of April, prohibiting them from entering the Indian country. When intelligence respecting that order reached St. Augustine, it seems a public meeting was called and a committee appointed to procure its repeal, in order that the white people might enter the Indian country for the purpose of seizing slaves.

This committee, said to be composed of men of high standing, addressed a long letter to General Jesup, in which they say, speaking of the people of Florida: "While they believe that the accomplishment of a certain pacification must, as it ought, be an object of primary importance in these negociations, they persuade themselves that the preservation of the negro property belonging to the inhabitants of this desolate country, must be seen by him to be an object of scarcely less moment."—It is a most undeniable fact, borne out by every part of these official documents, that the people of Florida suppose that the great object of the war was to aid the slaveholders in capturing and recovering their slaves. This same protest goes on to recount facts, in regard to their slaves having run away, and finding a place of refuge in the Indian country, and the concluding of an armistic by General Jesup, without getting their slaves back and then the signers add: "Against such course, a course so destructive of their rights and interests, the citizens of St. Augustine, and others, in public meeting assembled, for themselves and on behalf of the inhabitants of East Florida generally, do most solemnly protest." This, sir, is the solemn protest of the citizens of Florida against any cessation of hostilities upon other terms than that of getting back the slaves, or rather of permitting them to enter the Indian country to obtain their slaves.—The horror with which the negroes, both Indian slaves and free blacks, regarded those who came within their territory for the purpose of catching slaves, is shown by the letter of General Jesup just quoted; in which he states that thirty Indian negroes, in and about his camp, at once ran away when they heard that two men were in quest of slaves.

With these people, the great importance, and absorbing subject appears to have been slaves, not peace. Indeed, we have their solemn protest against extinguishing the flames of war, or stopping the torrent of blood which had so long flowed, until they should have their slaves secured to them. They were unwilling that the treasure of the nation should cease to be poured out until they should have their fellow men brought back into bondage. But, sir, I should fatigue the committee too much were I to refer to a tenth part of the documentary evidence which I have before me on the subject, or to that part which goes to prove the attempts of our Government officers to get back the slaves who have escaped from their masters; or the manner in which that object entered into the plans of the War Department. Nor have time to give any considerable portions of the evidence showing how this object of capturing slaves and supporting slavery entered into the designs, and was carried out in the movements, of the army. The time which may reasonably be claimed by me will only permit me to glance at the subject, and lay before this committee and the people of this nation a small portion of the facts which I wish I were able to present to them. It will be sufficient in this place to remark, that immediately after these protestations against peace—these official communications showing that the Indians had no desire to renew the war and that the only danger to be apprehended was the unlawful interference by the people of Florida with the Indian negroes, the flames of war were again lighted up; our troops were again put in motion; the Treasury of our nation was again placed under contribution; and the blood of defenceless women and helpless children again flowed, in order, as it appears, that slave holders might recover their slaves. I speak, sir, from official documentary evidence. These facts and those which I intend to refer to are on record in the archieves of our nation, and will descend in all coming time to give character, to this unholy war.

It would appear, from a perusal of the documents before me, that Gen. Jesup was unable to fulfil his covenant with the Indians, to protect them, and the negroes connected with them; but on this point we have no direct evidence.—Certain it is, that he was unable to bring the negroes to terms of submission. I use the term negroes, because he says, officially, that "the negroes controlled the Indians." Being unable to subdue the enemy, his troops falling a prey to the unhealthy climate in which he was situated, the citizens being murdered, their habitations burned, and his army discouraged, he issued the order No. 160, to which I will now call the attention of the committee. That part to which I particularly refer is in the following words: "All Indian property captured from this date will belong to the corps or detachment making it."—The sense in which the term property was used in this order is fully explained in a letter of Gen Jesup to Col. Warren, dated a few days subsequent, in which, speaking of the Seminoles, he says: "Their negroes, cattle and horses, will belong to the corps by which they are captured." This order bears date the 3d of August, 1837, and may be found at page 4 of the documents communicated to this House by the Secretary of War on the 27th day of February, 1839. I think that history will record this as the first general order issued by the commander of an American army in which the catching of slaves is held out as incentive to military duty. I mention this fact, and bring it to the consideration of the committee with feeling of deep mortification. As an American, I feel humbled at this act, which cannot be viewed by the civilized world otherwise than dishonorable to our arms and nation. That this officer, entrusted with the command of our army and the honor of our flag, should appeal to the cupidity, the desire of plunder, and the worst of human passions, in order to stimulate his men to effort, is, I think, to be regretted by men of all parties, in all sections of our country. Our national flag, which floated in proud triumph at Saratoga, which was enveloped in a blaze of glory at Monmouth and Yorktown, seems to have been prostituted in Florida to the base purpose of leading on an organized company of "negro catchers." Sir, no longer is "OUR COUNTRY" the battle cry of our army in their advance to victory; but slaves has become the watchword to inspire them to effort. No longer does the war-worn veteran, amid the battle's rage, think of his country's glory, and nerve his arm in behalf of freedom; but with eagle eyes he watches the wavering ranks of the enemy, and as the smoke rises from the battle-field, he plunges amid their fleeing cohorts to seize upon the sable foe that he may make him his future slave.

CUPID'S ARROW.

g Cupid went storming to Vulcan one day
d besought him to look at his arrow:
useless," he cried; "you must mend it,
I say;
s'n't fit to let fly at a sparrow.
e's something that's wrong in the shaft or the dart,
it flutters quite false to my aim:
un age since it fairly went home to the heart,
d the world really jests at my name.

ve straighten'd, I've bent I've tried all, I declare,
e perfumed it with sweetest of sighs:
eather'd with ringlets my mother might wear, d the barb gleams with light from young eyes;
t falls without touching—I'll break it, I vow,
r there's Hymen beginning to pout:
complaining his torch burns so dull and so low,
at Zephyr might puff it right out."

e Cupid went on with his pitiful tale, ll Vulcan the weapon restored.
ere, take it, young sir; try it now—if it fail ill neither ask fee nor reward."
urchin shot out, and rare havoc he made;
wounded and dead were untold;
no wonder the rogue had such slaughtering trade, r the arrow was laden with gold.

MUNICATION FROM THE BOOK COMMITTEE.

For the Western Recorder.

he Book Committee have seen with h surprize and regret, an editorial of Western Recorder in which the edi- f the Methodist Protestant and the k Committee are noticed in terms of g and unqualified censure. They n it an act of justice to Bro. They have at any time or under any circumstan- dictated any article or paragraph ch he has published editorially; nor e they suppressed,or claimed the right ppress, any article he has prepared publication.—The committee regret any difficulty should have occurred ween the editor of the Recorder and editor of the Protestant, as they are assured that no insult or offence was nded by the remarks of Bro. Reese ch gave rise to the discussion between n.

o far as the committee, themselves, concerned they have only to say, that executing the trusts confided to them the General Conference, they have nestly endeavored to keep the church er free from local feeling and sectional judice; and to advocate the great princi- s of religious liberty without giving cause of offence to any with whom y might differ in sentiment. Designing to pursue this course, they hope, rein, to receive, as heretofore, the ap- bation and support of such as love gion better than controversy, and general prosperity of the church her than the success of party. Br. Springer is respectfully requested publish in the Recorder, the above ex- sition of Bro. Reese's official relations th the Book Committee; or to return the me as early as practicable to

THE BOOK COMMITTEE.

Upon this communication we wish to remark:

1. We have no personal acquaintance with of this committee, whose names are append- above, except the two first. Br. Williams, chairman, is an unstationed minister of fine ents, as worthy a citizen as Baltimore con- ns, and few men have done more real drudge- and service for the Methodist Protestant urch than he. Beside he was among the first rtyrs for religious liberty in the M. E. Church. will believe us to be sincere when we say that entertain a high opinion of his character and vices. Brother Clark is a lay member of the urch, and from the slight acquaintance we have th him, we believe him to be as much of a istian and gentleman as the "Monumental y" affords. Though not acquainted with her of the other members of the committee, are willing to admit their standing is equal the two brethren above named. Nor are we nscious of any unkind or unchristian feelings wards either of the committee; and we wish at we shall say upon this subject to be under- od, in relation to these brethren, in accord- ce with the character we here give of them. at, notwithstanding, we suppose them to be, e ourself, and all the rest of the specie, liable err. And we think it probable, when they me to reflect a little more upon the sentiments d bearings of this extraordinary communica- on, they will be ashamed of it.

2. We understand the Book Committee to fully endorse all the Protestant has said and done in relation to us; and this was probably their object in writing. For, after telling us how much confidence they had in the 'piety and judgment' of the editor when they appointed him to the charge of the "organ," they add: "we have since had no occasion to question [the propriety of] either his motives or his actions." So then, when the editor of the Protestant charges us, in substance, with "impropriety," "coarseness and rudeness," it was all right in the estimation of the committee; when he represented us as "proving from scripture the propriety of abuse among christians," a charge which is palpably false, and otherwise misrepresented us, and then refused us an opportunity to be heard in our defence in the columns of his paper, all this is now fully endorsed by the Book Committee; for they have seen no cause yet to "question his actions."—From this declaration of the committee we learn two facts: 1st, in their estimation we are a "coarse," "rude," imprudent man, capable of perverting scripture, &c., &c., &c., to answer our own end: and 2dly, we learn the true character of the Protestant;—it can be used for the purposes of detraction, and the persons assailed in its columns will not be permitted to be heard in their own defence, only at pleasure.

3. We ask,—what right had the Book Committee to interfere between Br. Reese and us? We consider the committee and the editor two distinct persons, and the one not responsible for the acts of the other until he endorses them.—If we have made any allusion to the committee, we hold ourself responsible to them, to the church and to public opinion for what we have said, or may say about them. And so far as we referred to them they had a right to see to their own matters. But their letter seems to be sent up, not so much on their own account as to the relief of the editor of the Protestant.—Why this officious and official interference between us and another? Is it not clearly inferable, therefrom, that they consider their man in rather a bad predicament, and that sympathy for him has induced the committee to disregard the rules of prudence, and to expose themselves in the manner they have done in this very singular document.—But reader, look at the magnanimity of my opponents; eight Baltimorians, surrounded by the imposing splendors of a distinguished city, rendered formidable by the insignia of office, all at once attack one poor Buckeye editor, surrounded only by the woods. Really they must be valorous men. Had they lived in the days of Don Quixotte they could not fail to have been recorded in the annals of chivalry.

4. The committee say,—"they have not at any time, or under any circumstances, dictated any article, or paragraph, which he has published editorially." Now, are we to understand them as here saying that they leave the press untrammelled and free? The Rev. T. H. Stockton informs us, at the 23d page of the "Christian World," that this said committee passed a "resolution" dictating to him what he should publish in the "organ," and that he "declined" the editorship in consequence thereof. So that when the present editor took his situation he understood himself perfectly well. He knew that he had to be the tool of this committee, or do as his predecessor, take his walking papers and be off. It is not at all necessary, under the circumstances, for the committee to assume a dictatorial attitude, to accomplish what they want. Let an influential member write an article making invidious allusions to his neighbor, and simply hand it to the incumbent, that is sufficient, he has to father it of course, or else his "piety and judgment" would be very soon called in question. And thus the committee are saved the responsibility of official action.—And though they have done the thing de facto, they can parade themselves before the world, as on the present occasion, and with a flourish of names, officially deny the deed. Dear brethren, of the committee, you are not to suppose that we Buckeyes are so soft as our name imports.—Some of us can see jist a far into the mill stone as the feller who is picking at it.

5. The committee say they "have constantly endeavored to keep the church paper free from local feeling and sectional prejudice." We are willing to admit their honesty of intention on this subject, but then we cannot but deplore their want of success. When they passed a resolution to exclude the discussion of the slave question from the columns of the "official paper," a large portion of the church considered this act as surrendering the "organ" to a "local" "section," at the expense of an important principle,—the right of free discussion. And now having explicitly and fully adopted the uncourteous and invidious editorials under notice, what could be more calculated to excite "local feeling?" Although we admit the general application of Solomon's maxim—"in the multitude of counsellors there is safety,"—yet we must believe, in this case, if the matter had been left by the General Conference in the hands of Br. Stockton, without any control from the committee, things would have been managed to better general satisfaction than they are at present. But then life is uncertain—his health was precarious, and the conference was under the necessity of creating an executive committee, to exercise its powers in its absence. And need there be a stronger argument against a "general organ" than this necessity of committing so important an instrument to an irresponsible committee for four years. Good men are liable to err and bad men are disposed to do wrong; in either case the church might be essentially injured before the remedy could be applied. We are really astonished that the Book Committee would take upon themselves the responsibility they have in displacing Br. Stockton from the editorship, by dictating terms to him which were rejected by the General Conference. We will submit to themselves to say, whether in thus doing, they have not placed themselves above the General Conference itself. This matter forcibly brings to our mind an incident in the history of the church in days of yore. It bears that an old cardinal used to complain very vehemently of the usurpations of the pope; but it so happened in the revolutions of fortune, that he was ultimately placed in the papal chair himself, and when in possession of power he used it, if possible, more freely than his predecessor.—Upon being reminded of his former declarations, he responded, "O! grace has greatly strengthened me since God has placed me in this office."—So, when we recollect the denunciations of arbitrary power, made by some of this committee in the days of other times, we conclude, that, from some quarter or other they must have been greatly strengthened to do such deeds.

6. Our brethren further add,—"they hope to receive the approbation and support of such as love religion better than controversy, and the general prosperity of the church [illegible] the success of party." Now this, if it means any thing at all, is an invidious insinuation that we are fonder of controversy and the promotion of party than we are of doing good. The pen, we should judge, which dictated the exceptionable articles of the Protestant indited the sentence above; for it is precisely the same exhibition of disingenuousness. But that a dignified and official committee, could consent to stoop so low as to adopt such insinuations, is, to us, rather humiliating. The committee appear to be just like the editor of the Protestant, they are the clever fellows and all they do is right. Now, dear brethren, do let "others praise thee and not thy own lips." As it respects our efforts to promote the interests of party we are willing the public shall judge how far they are commendable or censurable. And in relation to controversy we rarely engage in it when it can be avoided; we war on this subject only as in the present case—on the defensive.

7. But, to us, the most exceptionable part of this strange letter is the swell of self-confidence with which the committee refer their actions to the General Conference of 1842;—the cool and indeferent assurance they express of being sustained by that body. This spirit argurs ill. It evinces more official arrogance than we thought could possibly belong to the committee.—Now, gentle reader, we have conducted you to a place, whence you can have a prospective view of the effect of the doings of the Book Committee, when they passed a resolution to exclude the freedom of discussion from the pages of the "church organ." It seems, from their closing sentence, above, that they will submit their actions to the General Conference for "approval or censure." We are no prophet, nor alarmist, but we will take it upon us to pledge our judgment, in the matter, that, let a resolution be acted on,—unless public excitement shall have greatly abated within one year from now, in that body, to sustain the committee in muzzling the press, and we care not which way it be decided, it will rend the church. If the committee be sustained, a portion at least of the free States will go; if they be not sustained, the South will go. Here, my brethren of the committee, you see the predicament in which your action has placed the church; this you ought to have scanned before you done the deed. However, our hope is (for it would grieve us to see the church divided) that on more mature reflection, the committee will take the responsibility of their own act upon themselves and will not ask the conference to endorse it for them. And we predicate this hope on the fact that they are God fearing men, and willing to bear their own burdens.—We shall take occasion here to state, that, although we disapprove of this act of the committee, yet we know how to make suitable allowance for their doings in relation to this vexed question, and we should not have alluded to it if we had not been compelled in self-defence.—But probably it is all providential, and for the best, that these things should be uncovered, and that this subject should be discussed.

8. But the most amusing part, of this famous manifesto, is the note appended requesting us, if we do not publish, to "return" it to the "Book Committee." A neighbor of ours, who occasionally gives us a call, alluded to our controversy with the Protestant;—we stated to him that the editor never wrote those exceptionable articles; we were satisfied they were written by some member of the Book Committee,—that we had no evidence though of this but the internal; but that we should unmask the committee, by placing their creature in such a situation, that if they had any honor or sympathy they would have to come out to shield him. How well we have succeeded the event has shown. But our expectations have been more than realized, by being favored with the revelations of the committee for our own columns, where we have a fair opportunity of exhibiting "Br. Reese's official relations with the Book Committee." We are certainly under no obligations to publish any thing for the committee on this subject, inasmuch as they have determined the editor of the Protestant did right when he excluded us from its columns, but we wish to do good for evil. However, if the committee think this document will be of any benefit to either themselves, or any connected with them, in the estimation of our readers, we can assure them they have reckoned without their host.

9. We say to the committee they cannot possibly feel more "surprise and regret" for us, than we do at the conduct of the Protestant and the position of this imprudent document before us. And we "regret" to be under the necessity of stricturing the parties so severely, but as they have put themselves in our way we cannot avoid it. The Protestant invidiously attacked us, and when we rebuked it for this offence, instead of apologizing for its indiscretion, it attempted to silence us with scurrilous language, and now the Book Committee has indorsed the whole. They ought to be ashamed of it and probably will when they take time for reflection. We much admire the prudence of our Br. Webster, who made it convenient to be absent to avoid signing such an instrument. Most of the parties, however, are, as we think, rather to be pitied than otherwise,—for it is highly probable that some old gray fox among them, likely in his dotage, and somewhat inflated with official dignity, having committed the first aggression, and not being able to summon magnanimity enough to acknowledge his error, has imprudently led the whole into this difficulty. If so, we hope his compeers will be careful how they are led by him in future.

Now my octavo brethren, we can assure you upon honor, that this kind of conflict is disagreeable to us, and we never engage in it unless duty impells. But if you feel disposed to continue it, we have came to the conclusion to go with you to the end of the chapter, and shall endeavor to put the whole of you to school awhile, and learn you a lesson or two that may be of service to you in a future time. Meantime, [illegible] assurance, that, let our mode of opposition, to what we esteem your errors, be as it may, we shall still regard you as christians and worthy citizens.

THE PROTESTANT.—As the editor of the Protestant has called to his assistance the "Book Committee," who, with quite a dignified official flourish, have come out in his support, and as we have no official dignitaries at our elbow to sustain us, he certainly will not object if we should give him the sentiments of a few individuals on this subject. An intelligent layman writes us from Indiana on the 13th ultimo: "I have read your last notice of the Protestant and am well pleased with your manner of treating the subject. Your views in relation to a 'general church paper,' or bishop paper, I think will be calculated to arouse some of the old folks who imagine they cannot get along without a main spring or regulator. My humble opinion is, you have nothing to fear so long as you continue to conduct your paper on fair and honorable principles."

An itinerant minister, whose appointment is some fifty miles out, writes us from Steubenville, O., March 19;—"I am well pleased with your last reply to the Protestant. The editor's impertinence and uncalled for intermeddling has been treated in the right way. Your friends here and other places where I have been, are of a similar opinion."

Here follows the communication of a man, on this subject, whose age and talents command respect. We could cheerfully sit at his feet and learn the lessons of wisdom and experience. It is gratifying to us to know that we have the approval of such men.

THE PRESS.

Mr. Editor:—The press has been spoken of as a "mighty lever"—and such it surely is, either for good or evil—for weal or woe to the human race. Like all other good things (not even excepting revealed truth) it is liable to abuse. If wielded upon the pure principles of evangelical truth, true liberty, real patriotism, sound philosophy and genuine philanthropy—who can calculate the good it might accomplish? Numbers would be inadequate to tell. But when avarice, faction, despotism or self-interest manages the helm, it may be not only a mighty, but a fearful lever. In no form is the press so potent in church or state as that of "Official"—and perhaps, in no form are its encroachments on private interests and equal rights more insiduous, or of more dangerous tendency, than in the imposing form of "official organ." Designing ecclesiastics, and wily politicians are ever ready to avail themselves of such advantages. Give to a periodical the style, authority, influence and patronage of Church or State, and a ground is laid to foster monopoly—claims to superiority, and the infraction of private rights—the tendency of which is, to check individual enterprise. The periodical press, in this form and with these advantages, is aristocracy, if not despotism in embryo—and may contravene those sacred principles embodied in the constitution of these United States—and the bill of rights adopted by the M. P. Church. These views and apprehensions are not visionary—they are based on principle—the nature of man—the nature of things—and the developement of facts. A shrewd observer once remarked "the world is governed more by sound than sense"—and the more plausible and fascinating the sound, the more readily are the credulous and ignorant carried away.

I was an observer of men and things when periodicals were rare; and the press was confined to narrow limits. I witnessed the rise and progress of an "official organ"—which promised to be harmless and useful. Its style indicated charity, benevolence, peace on earth and good will to man—all which was inferable from the term "Christian." It happened, however, to be engrafted on a stock which had acquired great strength, at the seat of aristocracy. It was soon apparent that "profits," policy, and monopoly, over balanced charity, benevolence, and liberality. A sectional paper in the east, and another in the south must be merged into the "official," to increase its patronage, give it power and influence and to multiply "the loaves and fishes," for wily managers! Doing good—spreading religious and useful knowledge by means of the press, was the ostensible object—"pure charity," in the use of the "profits" sounded well, and few, if any, apprehended that it was an "uncertain sound," a splendid delusion! The publishing of useful books at a fair price—affording to the people religious and useful knowledge, at a cheaper rate, was a heinous offence, as it went to curtail "profits"—and the offender must be proscribed and bespattered in the "official organ." Sectional papers were too republican and came in contact with selfish avarice and priestly dictation—"The Gospel Balance" and "The Western Methodist" must be put down and their editors victimized—all under the guise of "pure charity!" But the people wanted sectional papers—and the current was too strong for the aristocracy—but policy devised a plan—branches of the "great official" will meet the demand—speak out of the same mouth—promote the same interests—subserve the [illegible] crush private genius, and [illegible] enterprise, and secure a dominion as absolute as popery.

Names and specious pretences are little to be trusted—they change not the nature of man.—The term "Protestant," sailing under the flag of "mutual rights," is not an infallible guarantee, to keep men, and especially "official" men, within the prescribed limits of first principles—and to guard against official arrogance is not so easy. The attack on you, and another uncalled for attack from the same quarter is evidence of this. To bear and forbear, are christian duties—but there is a point beyond which we are not called to go and cannot go consistently with essential principles, and justice to ourselves and the cause of equal rights. I admire your firmness and independence, tempered with christian moderation.—for honest bluntness and plainness of speech, is perfectly consistent with christianity. I trust you will be sustained by the friends of liberty and equality.

"Man's inhumanity to man, Makes countless thousands mourn."

The newspaper press, a short time since, announced the horrible fact of the freezing to death of a prisoner in the jail of the City of Richmond, Va. More recently we are advised by the same authority, of the cruel whipping, with a cowhide, of a man under sentence of death until in the opinion of a physician he was unable to bear any more. This last disgraceful act of cruelty was perpetrated in South Carolina, on an unfortunate fellow being, whose crimes were larceny and forgery, for which latter offence he is under sentence of death. The prisoner in the Richmond jail, was perhaps only a debtor, at least we are not advised that he is even charged with any heinous offences; and it is highly probable—yea, certain, that hundreds of more guilty scoundrels are running at large, than either of the men who have been thus cruelly treated by their fellow men. In the South a man can murder his fellow with impunity, by way of trying the temper of his Bowie-knife, but if he unfortunately commits forgery, he is hung! And if he had perpetrated a petty larceny, why then, forsooth, he must be whipped as much as he can bear without killing him! It would not do to whip him to death entirely, because that would prevent the exhibition on the gallows! Oh! shame where is thy blush!

Such acts of cruelty I did not suppose could be perpetrated in a christian county, in the nineteenth century of the christian era, and in republican christian America—in the land of Bibles—of Sabbaths—of churches—of benevolence—of philanthropy. I blush with shame, as an American, that in my country, in this enlightened age—this age of philanthropy and benevolence, such scenes of barbarity are tolerated—tolerated too in chivalrous Carolina and Virginia. States which contribute largely to the fund, for the support of missionaries in heathen lands, when themselves are guilty of cruelties which would be a disgrace to cannibals. Better civilize themselves, and learn to practice humanity and charity towards their fellow—offending fellow being though he be, he bears the image of our Common Father and is one of our Creator's offspring. Our face should crimson with shame at the thought that one of our race, who bears the human face divine, should be permitted to freeze to death in a jail, and another be nearly whipped to death, while under a sentence to be hung, and that too for a comparatively trivial offence!

CALCULATIONS FOR TOBACCO-CHEWERS. There is a prudential maxim which advises men "to look before they leap." Tobacco chewers, we think, can hardly have regard to the teachings of this sensible saying, or they would not enter upon the practice of using tobacco. A youth who is a member of the College, amused himself one evening with the following calculation:

It is a light calculation that a common chewer of tobacco will use two inches of light plug in a day, which in forty years supposing he began at twenty years of age and lived till sixty, would make one mile of plug tobacco consumed by a single individual. Now if a new beginner were to be placed at the one end of this mile of tobacco, and told that in his life time he must eat to the other end, he would certainly have an appetite for the weed as the abominable tobacco worm itself, if he did not immediately abandon the habit.

Suppose the smoker uses three cigars in a day, each three inches long, in the course of a life-time he would have smoked four miles of tobacco, and if each cigar produced a volume of smoke one yard square and one foot thick, he would emit from his mouth a sufficient amount of the fumes of tobacco to cover the city of Cincinnati with a cloud so thick that it would shut out from one half the city the rays of the sun. In the course of a life-time this destruction of the tobacco weed would cost the consumer, at the rate of six cents a day, which is certainly a moderate calculation, the sum of about one thousand dollars; a larger sum, if we remember rightly, than [illegible] Doctor Franklin to found the Philadelphia Library, and an amount sufficient to support a missionary three years among the heathen.—*Cin. ORIGIN OF THE CANADIAN BOAT SONG.—Some curious information is given in the preface to the second volume of Mr. Moore's collected works respecting that noble melody the "Canadian Boat Song." We have heard that Mr. Moore was the real author of the melody in its present shape; and it now appears from the notes of the original song, which have been preserved as he took them down, that in his hands it assumed quite a new character. The following is his account of the matter:—"A few years since, while staying in Dublin, I was presented, at his own request, to a gentleman, who told me that his family had in their possession a curious relic of my youthful days, being the first motion I had made, in pencilling, off the air and words of the Canadian Boat Song, while on my way down the St. Lawrence, and that it was their wish I should add my signature to attest the authenticity of the autograph. I assured him, with truth, that I had wholly forgotten even the existence of such a memorandum; that it would be as much a curiosity to myself as it would be to any one else, and that I should feel thankful to be allowed to see it. In a day or two after, my request was complied with and the following is the history of this musical 'relic.' In my passage down the St. Lawrence, I had with me two travelling companions, one of whom, named Harkness, the son of a wealthy Dublin merchant, has been some years dead. To this young friend, on parting with him at Quebec, I gave, as a keepsake, a volume I had been reading on the way, Priestly's Lectures on History: and it was upon a fly leaf of this volume I found I had taken down, in pencilling, both the notes and a few of the words of the original song, by which my own boat-glee had been suggested."

"THE VILLAGE GIRL."

I sat lost in thought, on the bank of a little rivulet that came murmuring down the hill-side, and flowed away to the broad river that spread its blue surface beyond the plain towards the setting sun. A dew drop, scarcely perceptible to the human eye, faintly sparkled on a leaf that bent from an overhanging bough. And in my half waking, half dreaming reverie, I thought I saw myriads of these little drops collecting, and descending on the hills, and in the valleys, forming the bubbling rivulets that flowed, one after another, until their united streams swelled into mighty rivers sweeping on through the deep valleys of the land, hundreds of miles, and terminating in fathomless oceans that rolled their resistless currents around the world.

From amid the mist that rose above the mingling waters, there came to my side an old venerable man, wrapped in a sea-green cloak, and while with one hand he pressed the moisture from his flowing hair, with the other he held to my eye a curiously wrought tube of glassy transparency, and bid me mark the lesson it would unfold. I looked, and beheld before me a pleasant village, in the midst of a rich and teeming landscape, in the sweet and mellow season of June. The bells are ringing, and groups of children are gathering to the school house. It is the Sabbath, and that is the Sabbath School. Yonder, at the end of the lane, is a village girl. She stops a moment to look at some boys at play. She approaches, hesitates, and turns away, and then approaches.—Now she speaks to a little ragged boy that has quarrelled with his playmates. He seems about to fight with one of them, and he swears horrid oaths. She takes him by the hand:—see how earnestly she talks to him:—she points towards the beautiful blue summer sky, and a tear glistens on her cheek.—Now she has said something which has made an impression on that rude and ruined boy, and he has turned and walked away with her. They go towards the school:—he stops a moment at the door, but see she has persuaded him in.

Just then the old man touched a hidden key, and all was changed. In the scene which slowly followed, I saw at the foot of a rugged mountain, an old and miserable log dwelling. The windows were broken, the chimney had partly fallen down, the wretchedness of hopeless poverty was marked on every feature of the scene. A lean, half-famished dog sits by the door, and gives a faint and melancholy recognition to his master, who came staggering up the glen, intoxicated and in rags.

But yonder, through the opening vista, in the far distance, is seen the outline of the lovely village we have left, and there, coming slowly up the path, I see the very boy who was led in the morning to the Sabbath School by the village girl. He is reading as he walks. It is the Bible. A present from his young friend, the teacher. The scene shifts like a moving panorama. The shades of night fall upon the scene, and now the bright morning breaks over the mountain tops, and the birds sing in the trees. The family are gathered in a group, in the cottage, and that little boy is reading from his book. They all listen, but still the scene is shifting. Days, weeks, and months seem to be passing. I see the little boy takes his brothers and sisters to the village school. The whole family goes to the church on Sunday. A great reform has been effected. And the scene begins to wear a cheerful and happy aspect. Now if I have counted the changes right, it is three summers removed to a comfortable house in the borders of the village. It is a farm-house, and is surrounded by pleasant fields. What a wonderful change! But it is gone, and there is another scene.

That boy has grown to manhood, and is mingling with the crowds of men in a great city. By his example and his eloquence, he is giving tone, and shape, and direction to the current of many thoughts. An energy, untiring and resistless, marks his progress. Benevolence, expansive as the world, characterizes all his efforts.

New scenes of active enterprise are presented—new fields for effort are opened, and the tides of moral influence are going forth, over a vast continent. Still another scene. That untiring man is there. He sits in a green verandah, beneath the shade of a palm tree. A strange land and sky are around and above him. He is translating into foreign tongues the sublime morality of heaven, and opening to millions in all future generations, new views of life, of obligation and of duty. He has left his home forever, armed with the glorious panoply of truth to war with the errors of superstition and infidelity—to scatter light in darkness, and reclaim a degraded race! Years upon years are passing. The change is not more visible and marked in the alterations of the seasons then in the change of men. A new era has dawned. And as that man goes at last in grey old age to his grave, the power of his influence has been left to the remotest shores of time. Good men bless his memory, and millions rejoice that he has lived.

"But where," I asked, "is the little village girl?" "You shall see," answered the mysterious visitor. And touching another key, I looked, and beheld again before me the retired little village, the same, after half a century, lying in its quietude and rural beauty: an old hooded woman passed, leaning in decrepit age upon a staff, habited in the garb of rustic simplicity. I knew that face again. The peace the world gives not, and cannot take away, was there—unnoticed and unknown, she was about closing her long and unassuming duties, with scarce a consciousness that she had been useful in the world.

The old man pointed to the dew-drop —the rivulets—the distant river, and away to the far off ocean. "Thus," said he, "the dew-drops raise the tides that roll round the world, fit emblems of that moral influence, which, from the humblest efforts flow on increasing in power only to develope there immeasurable results in eternity!"

Late from Florida.—The St. Augustine Herald of the 22d says, we learn 60 Indians have positively come in at Fort Fanning, and been sent down to Tampa; and also that Gen. Armistead has actually made a shipment to the West. There is an uncommon proportion of women and children among those who have surrendered, and the whole number is but a fairing to what there are in the woods. With all our boasting we have not yet found out all their haunts, nor do we yet know what will be the effect of money and negociations upon the larger parties.

From Mexico.—Letters received at New Orleans from Matamoras and the city of Mexico, &c., state that General Arista has succeeded in two "pitched battles" in chasing the Cumanche Indians beyond the frontiers, capturing all the horses, money, &c., which they had robbed from the department of Coahuilas, and releasing forty-two captives the savages had carried away prisoners. Arista arrived at Matamoras on the 14th February, and was received by the inhabitants with every demonstration of joy.

Catholic.—The Cincinnati Chronicle states that Bishop Purcell has purchased a large lot in that city, on which are to be erected a new Catholic Cathedral, Orphan House and Hospital. A church for the accommodation of German Catholics is also to be commenced this season at Cincinnati.

Geological Survey.—The fifth annual report of the Theological Survey of the State of Pennsylvania, has been made by Henry D. Rogers, esq., State Geologist. It comprises a vast amount of useful information, and still further developes our mineral riches.

THE DREADFUL LOSS OF THE SHIP GOV. FENNER, OF BOSTON, NEAR LIVERPOOL.

In addition to the particulars furnished in our correspondent, we obtain the following from the Liverpool papers. The Albion gives the account as stated by Captain Andrews:

"We sailed from Liverpool on Friday last at noon, with the wind at S. S. W.—The crew consisted of seventeen, and the passengers in the steerage amounted to one hundred and six. We had a full cargo of manufactured goods. On Saturday morning, at two o'clock, the wind blowing fresh from S. S. W., and when the ship was under double-reefed topsails, the gib, spanker, and mainsail in, saw a steamer to windward on the larboard bow.—The ship's helm was instantly put hard a-port. The steamer crossed our bow, and struck her right amidships. From the force of the collision, it was evident that either the ship or the steamer would sink, or perhaps both. Instantly I felt that the ship, the bows of which were stove in, was sinking. I cried out to the crew (all the passengers were below) to endeavor to save their lives. They, instead of running forward, through fear ran aft. My first object was to endeavor to save the crew and passengers; but so sudden was the sinking of the ship, I found it impossible to do anything to accomplish that object. I and the mate then ran forward, and, finding the ship fast sinking, I tried to jump on the steamer.—Failing in my first attempt through a momentary faintness, I made a second, and just as the ship was at the water's edge, succeeded in grasping a rope which was hanging over the steamer's side. The mate saved his life by jumping from the fore-yard arm on to the steamer's deck. In one minute the ship sank, with sixteen of her crew and all the passengers, amounting together to one hundred and twenty-two souls. The steamer's boat was instantly lowered for the purpose of making an attempt to save such of the crew and passengers as might be floating but it unfortunately swamped alongside."

The mate, Mr. Carter, also furnished the following, according to another paper, but some of the statements have been since disavowed.

After corroborating the captain in his account of the sailing, &c., about five minutes past two o'clock on Saturday morning we saw the lights of a steamboat. It was my watch on deck, and I immediately called the captain. The steamboat came up at about a point and a half on our weather-bow, we having at the time our larboard tacks on board. We thought she was coming on head to us. We had no light but that of the binnacle on the quarter deck; and, I believe, it is not considered necessary or prudent for sailing vessels clear of the land to carry a light. We waited as much as five or six minutes, to find out which way the steamer was really coming, and then the captain ordered the man at the wheel to put the helm hard-a-port, so as to give her a clear birth. If the steamboat had done the same we should have gone clear of each other a long way, perhaps a mile. The captain, as soon as he ordered the wheel to be put up, went forward to look out. I then looked over the larboard side, abaft the main rigging, and saw the whole bulk of the steamer.—I said to the man at the helm, "She is on board of us." This was a quarter past two o'clock. The vessels came in contact notwithstanding our ship paying off. When the crash took place I heard the captain call out several times, "For God's sake save yourselves, the ship is sinking." The jibboom of the ship struck the funnel of the steamer, and her bowsprit afterwards rested upon her. On the third surge she gave, I believed, down she went bow foremost. The taffrail was the last thing we saw of her. She filled very quickly. She had on board a heavy cargo, including a quantity of iron and other heavy goods. The watch on the deck at the time consisted of seven men, the captain and myself. All the others on board were asleep below.

The captain also sang out to the man at the helm to leave the wheel, His name was Munroe—he was formerly mate of the Belvidere, came on board to work his passage to America, and we intended to make him second mate of the ship next day. All the men at first went forward with me to the captain, who was standing between the nightheads, but they afterward went aft as the ship sunk, to be, as I suppose, on the higher part of her hull. I stood some time, and attempted to go aft with a view of endeavoring to save my wife and others by lowering a boat. She, however, sunk so fast, that I was obliged to give up the idea in despair. I left the captain, and went to the starboard side. I stood there a few seconds, till the water was perhaps two feet deep, as far aft as the mainmast, and was fast gathering still further aft, her head being then nearly under. I scarce know what afterwards occurred. I got up somehow into the fore-rigging, and thence on to the larboard foreyards, which then crossed the steamer. When the ship sunk so far that I was from six to eight feet from the steamer's deck, I let go, and dropped down amongst some sheep. I lay some time rather confused, and did not attempt to rise, as I thought I might become entangled in a rope which passed over my shoulders, and, as I thought, was part of the bowspirit running rigging of the ship. I then got up. The cry on board the steamer was, that she was sinking, and I believe a passenger on board lowered the boat left on the davits on the larboard side; but she unhooked from the tackles when she touched the water, and the painter not being fast, she drifted away from the vessel. All the lights they could muster in the steamer were lighted for some time. The engineers and others then went below, and found that though she was leaky they could keep her free. She had her fore and aft sails and foretopsail set at the time.

I was on board about three-quarters of an hour before I found that the captain of the ship was there, I had seen my wife, who was a little sea-sick, about 20 minutes before in her berth, and gave her a drink. The captain, when I first saw him in the steamer, was without his hat, and on seeing him (informant) he said, "Good God, is this you; is there any of the crew saved?' I said, "I do not know. I did not know what became of you after I missed you off the ship's bow." Her hull was under water before I got off. The foreyard from which I dropped was broken on the steamer as she was going down; and also, I believed, the topsail yard, as our foretopmast studdingsail-boom, which was rigged out at the time, (the wind having been for some time fair in the evening,) was left on the steamer's deck. I afterward looked, but could see nothing of the ship or her masts. The last time I observed the watch on deck, they were on the starboard side of the quarter-deck.—One man sung out, "For God Almighty's sake save me." I did not hear the others. I had a quantity of my own clothing and other articles on board, worth about £50. All were lost. [The wife of the informant was a daughter of Mrs. Morgan, of Queen Anne street, Brunswick Dock.] The captain had on board two valuable chronometers, charts, and other property, and all was lost. We were at the time of the accident seventeen or eighteen miles, as I reckon, to the northward and westward of Holyhead. We were steering upon a wind at the time W. by N., and the steamer about E. S. E. The second mate's name was William Shelston, and he was below at the time. The captain was as cool as possible at the time, and extremely anxious that as many as possible should be saved. If we had chanced to go aft instead of forward we should also have been drowned.

The account of the catastrophe given by those on board the Nottingham is in substance as follows:

"About a quarter past two o'clock on Saturday morning, when about fifteen miles to the westward of Holyhead, the weather calm, but rather thick, one of the men on the watch saw a ship bearing down upon the Nottingham. She had no light at her mast, while the steamer had three. He reported the fact to the second mate, who was then at the wheel. The second mate hailed the ship, and was answered. He desired her to starboard the helm. This, they thought, was not done. A voice from the ship, which was supposed to have been that of the captain, requested the steamer to starboard her helm, as he could not bring the ship over, she not answering her helm. At that instant the Governor Fenner struck the Nottingham amidships. In less than five minutes the ship filled with water and disappeared. The steamer became quite motionless after the shock, and the people on board of her were unable to make the least attempt to succor those on board the ship, which sank bow foremost. The cries of the people on the wreck were heart rendering, but they soon ceased, and all was still. The steamer's starboard side was completely stove in; the paddle shaft and wheel were shivered in pieces; the starboard engine was broken, and the tunnel carried away. Seventeen cows were killed; seven beasts and seventy-eight sheep were thrown overboard, and eleven died before the vessel reached port.

The Nottingham did not get ten miles from the place where the collision took place during the whole day, and at five in the afternoon was taken in tow by another steamer from Ireland. She was brought into the Clarence Dock, and was so much shattered on the starboard side that hundreds of persons congregated on the quays to see, were all absorbed in the melancholy event which had caused the destruction. Her paddle-box had almost entirely been carried away, and a part of the 'skeleton' on the wheel—the cast iron work of the "spokes" being broken in pieces, and the beaten iron rings of the wheel crushed up almost close to the vessel's side. She presented, indeed, the appearance of a wreck, in the effecting of which it is extraordinary that no person on board was killed or thrust overboard and drowned.—Much of the upper timber was reduced to mere match-wood by the collision. A boat on the starboard quarter was cut in two, and one part of her only remained on deck. The after paddle-beam, a bulk of hard wood, of about twenty inches square (and which was a main support of the box and wheel,) is broken close to the ship's side, and turned in a diagonal direction, aft—held by the toughness of the fibres from falling off, and even yet of sufficient strength to support the weight of several persons upon it. The strong iron stay or pillar, supporting it in a downward direction to the side, some feet below, is also driven sternward from its position.

The passengers were all below in their berths when the collision between the ship and the steamer took place. The shock caused by it would, of course, rouse even those who might then have been asleep. No doubt they would make a rush toward the deck: the interval which elapsed, however, between the shock and the sinking was so short, scarcely five minutes, that very few, if any, could have succeeded in reaching it. So that, in all probability, most of them perished in their berths. The mate had been married only a few days before the ship's sailing: the captain had given his wife a berth with her husband in the cabin. When the fate of the ship became inevitable, he attempted to run aft to rescue her. Time failed him, the instinct of self-preservation became strong, he sprung up the shrouds, and reached the steamer, as we have already stated, by jumping from the fore-yard arm.

From the New London Advocate of March 17.

Singular Delusion and Excitement.—Some time in the autumn of 1831, a Captain Loomis, of Lyme, who had been successful in southern coasting, built a centre board schooner in this district, which was designed for the southern trade. The schooner was called the Alabama, and commanded by Capt. Loomis. She sailed from New London to New York, and thence for Mobile, but never arrived out.—Capt. Loomis had his wife on board, and a considerable number of passengers, all of whom were from this town or vicinity. No certain intelligence was ever received of the fate of the vessel, but, as a very severe gale visited our coast a few days after her sailing, in which many vessels were lost, it was supposed that she foundered at sea, and that all on board must have perished. This supposition was corroborated by a report from the captain of a New Bedford ship, who a few weeks after the sailing of the Alabama, fell in with the wreck of a schooner fully answering her description. No doubt was left on the part of those interested, as her crew and passengers were numerous, and all from this neighborhood, a deep gloom pervaded the community. One of the crew was a lad of the name of George W. Warren, a son of E. R. Warren, Esq., of Lyme, who was a neighbor of Capt. Loomis, who had yielded to the solicitations of his son, in permitting him to enter on the voyage.

No shadow of hope remained with Mr. Warren's family, or others interested in the fate of the vessel, that any could have survived the wreck, until last week, when a sailor, whose name, no doubt, is Seth W. Chase, presented himself at the City Hotel and claimed to be George Warren, the brother of Mrs. Bacon, the wife of Mr. E. R. Babo, one of the proprietors of the hotel, who married a daughter of E. R. Warren, Esq. The man was evidently intoxicated but managed to put on such an air of mystery, as for a time to deceive those who listened to his account, and soon a crowd of persons was collected, many of whom were desirous to believe his story, hoping that their own friends might also have survived. Chase affected great agitation and mystery, and declined to answer any questions until he could see his father. As Mr. W. lived some miles from the town, the crowd and excitement increased until he was sent for and arrived. After a very short interview, he decided that the man was an impostor, and that nothing appeared on which to found the slightest hope that he was his son. In the meantime a merchant, who, by means of false pretences, had been induced to furnish Chase with a suit of clothes, obtained a writ, and had him committed to jail, where he remained through the night—and as the matter had become bruited about, he was visited in the morning by hundreds, many of whom, whether from credulity or the love of mischief, professed to recognize him as George Warren. By this time the unlucky wight, having become sober, insisted that he was not Geo. Warren, but, alas! it was too late; the crowd then insisted that it was George, and they were not to be thus imposed upon.

Many of his early associates could now recogize every feature, scar and mark, and the neighborhood was full of proof of his identity. In vain the unhappy man told his place of birth, parentage and history from his youth upward—none would believe him—and at length, joining the current of opinion, he said he was and must be George Warren. Bets were made pro and con, and for two days our usually quiet streets were filled with excited disputants. Even the adjacent towns caught the infection, & scores were in from Waterford, Lyme and Montville, discussing the grave question whether it were George or no. At last, to calm the effervescence, Mrs. Warren was persuaded to call upon the impostor, and became fully satisfied of the cheat. This last proof would certainly appear conclusive, but it was not so—many still doubted, and we find that Mr. Chase has now made solemn affidavit, before a notary, that he is veritably and truly Seth William Chase, and no other. This affidavit is printed and in circulation, but we still doubt whether he will be permitted by the sagacious physiognomists and genealogists of the other opinion to get off so.

To those who have been really deceived in the matter, no blame can be imputed, but we do not doubt that many stories in regard to marks, scars, and other proofs, have been manufactured by interested persons, with the view to making bets, or have been set on foot from sheer mischief making designs. To the scoundrel who could originate a plan to harrow up the feelings of a respectable and amiable family, we would mete out a full measure of punishment; but it may be questionable whether the excitement in the present instance has not been fed and sustained principally by that credulity and love of the marvellous, which are often found to exist in minds otherwise balanced.

In the preamble to the affidavit alluded to, it is assumed that Chase had certain marks, and related certain circumstances, proving him to be the son of Mr. Warren. This, Mr. W. pronounces to be untrue, and says, that there is nothing about the man bearing the slightest resemblance to his son.

Probable settlement of the McLeod Case—Arrival and Departure of the Attorney General.—Mr. Crittenden, the Attorney General of the United States arrived in town on Thursday evening, from Albany, and leaves to-day, on his return to Washington. Mr. Crittenden, in conjunction with the Attorney General of this State, has examined all the testimony and other facts in the case and has arrived to the conclusion that there is no evidence to convict McLeod of a participation in the destruction of the Caroline. He will be able, it is supposed, to establish an alibi, and thus put an end to the whole matter.

Meantime, McLeod will remain in custody until the trial comes on, and the case will go through the forms of law, without interruption from any quarter. A perfect understanding subsists between the General and the State Governments, in relation to it. Under this state of facts, Mr. Webster will reply to Mr. Fox presenting all the grounds in his accustomed clear, comprehensive, and forcible style, and it is believed this will be satisfactory to the British Government, until the liberation of McLeod by due process of law in October next.—N. Y. Herald.

Power of Eloquence.—A striking illustration occurred at Mr Vandehoff's last lecture in New York. Mr. V. was reciting a scene in Byron's "Cain," and picturing the frightful remorse of the murderer, when the dreadful truth of Abel's death flashed upon his mind, and in an agony of soul he summoned around him his father, mother, and wife, and the thrilling exclamation—"Father! mother! Ada! Zillah! come hither!—Death is in the world!"

This passage was given with an energy of truth so fearful as to send a thrill of horror to the very soul: and one young man who had been gazing intently and kindling to a pitch of uncontrollable excitement, as the last clause—"Death is in the world!"—was uttered, fell senseless to the floor!

Wiskonsan.—Congress has officially settled the orthodoxy of this fine territory laying between the Mississippi river and Lake Michigan, to be Wiskonsan—in conformity with the pronunciation that prevails in the territory, the accent being on the second syllable. Mr. Doty, its Representative, is making an effort to secure an appropriation to open a steam boat navigation through it, from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi, by a canal only 7,739 feet long,* to connect the Wiskonsan and Fox rivers. This would open a water communication from New Orleans to New York, making a charming summer route. Wiskonsan will soon make a State.

The Freshet in the South.—A letter dated Savannah, March 16th, gives still further particulars of the flood in the South. The whole town of Hamburgh has been inundated, and very considerable damage sustained. Some of the streets in Augusta were under water. A stage, in crossing the Ocmulgee in a flat boat, was swept down the stream, the boat snagged, and threw the stage and horses out. The driver and the horses were drowned. The passengers, among whom was Gen. Ward, of N. Y., swam to an island, and were compelled to climb up trees. The Hon. Mr. Holt, on his way home from Washington, was also among the number.

Pity the Poor Girl.—A young girl, a German, died lately at Baltimore, under circumstances deeply affecting. She was engaged to be married to a young man of Philadelphia, who, for reasons best known to himself, communicated to her a short time since, his intentions of abandoning her. On receiving this information she became a child of sorrow and despair for ten days, when reason left its seat, and became an awful maniac, unceasingly calling on her lover to "come to her." On the evening of her death, she ordered her "wedding garment to be prepared," saying that she "wished to be dressed in white," and that she "was to be married at ten o'clock," the precise time of her departure to a world of spirits!

Freshet.—The papers state that on Monday, the Susquehanna, at Harrisburg was upward of fifteen feet above low water mark, being higher than it has been since the remarkable high freshet in 1786, with the exception of 1833, when it was a foot higher on that. Floating timber, plank and boards, had passed the capital, showing that the work of destruction had begun above. Apprehensions existed that a disasterous freshet had occurred, as it was stated that all the small bridges between Harrisburgh and York Haven, had been carried away by the rapid rise of the streams tributary to the Susquehanna. Our correspondent confirms this.—Phil. Chron.

More Rioting in Kensington.—The Kensington folks, on Monday evening, renewed their hostilities against the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad Company. A meeting opposed to the road took place at the Hall, when a number of persons assembled, and soon collected a force by building large fires with tar barrels.—The mob then proceeded to tear up the rails along Frankford Road, which they effectually accomplished. One of the rioters, we understand, had his arm accidentally broken.

The authorities of Boston have offered $2,000 reward for the arrest of the burglars that infest that city.

FROM WASHINGTON.

CIRCULAR.

Department of State, March 20, 18

To the Hon. Thos. Ewing,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Sir: The President is of opinion th it is a great abuse to bring the patrona of the General Government into confl with the freedom of elections; and th this abuse ought to be corrected whe ever it may have been permitted to exi and to be prevented for the future.

He therefore directs that informati be given to all officers and agents in yo department of the public service, th partisan interferences in popular electio whether of State officers or officers this Government, and for whomsoever may be exercised, or the payment of a contribution or assessment on salaries official compensation for party or electi purposes, will be regarded by him cause for removal.

It is not intended that any officer sh be restrained in the free and proper e pression and maintainance of his op ions respecting public men or pub measures, or in the exercise, to the f lest degree, of the constitutional right sffurage. But persons employed und the Government, and paid for their se vices out of the public Treasury, a not expected to take an active or officio part in attempts to influence the min or votes of others; such conduct bei inconsistent with the spirit of the Cons tution and the duties of the public ager acting under it; and the President is solved, so far as depends upon him, th while the exercise of the elective franchi by the People shall be free from und influences of official station and autho ty, opinion shall also be free among t officers and agents of the Government.

The President wishes it to be furth announced and distinctly understood, th from all collecting and disbursing office promptitude in rendering accounts, a entire punctuality in paying balance will be rigorously exacted. In his opi ion it is time to return, in this respect the early practice of the government, a to hold any degree of delinquency on t part of those entrusted with the publ money, just cause for removal. He deem the severe observance of this rule to essential to the public service, as eve dollar lost to the Treasury by unfait fulness in office creates a new charge u on the people.

I have the honor to be, sir, your ob serv't, Daniel Webster.

Pennsylvania Legislature.

The bank bill of Mr. Spackman, whic last week passed through the committee the whole in the Legislature, containi the following provisions:

Sec. 1. All provisions for the forfei ure of charters, in cases of suspension repealed.

2. Laws prohibiting the issue of sma notes, repealed for five years.

3. Prohibits all loans to cashier clerks, tellers and other persons, in th employment of banks, exclusively.

4. All directors, officers, &c., are t be sworn before an Alderman, or justic of the peace, before entering on their du ties.

5. Dividends allowed during suspen sion.

6. Quarterly statements of the condi tion of the banks, required to be mad under oath.

7. Penalties required against officer who neglect their duty.

8. False entries, issues. &c., to b punished with fine and imprisonment.

McLeod.—It is stated that in the Sta of New York that the individual who i now in Lockport, charged with being concerned in the destruction of the Caro line, is respectably connected in tha city, and studied for the ministry, bu was expelled for want of a moral charac ter. He then studied medicine in Phil adelphia, and went to India as a surgeon of a merchant vessel; and finally returned to Canada, his native country, with hi usual Munchausen vice in full operation and has got into this scrape, and nearly got our country into a scrape likewise Some of the Montreal papers say if Mc Leod had not been so unwise as to have visited Lockport, making a vain, glo rious boast of his having been concerned in the expedition which was ordered to destroy the Caroline, the great difficulty which he has occasioned would never have occurred.

To Western Merchants—Pennsylvania Canals.—The water has been let into the Pennsylvania State canals, and it is stated the whole rout from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia, is now in navigable order, except at the new aqueduct near Huntington, which will be in order in a few days.

The Hidleburg War again.—The accounts are confirmed, that the Hidlebergers of Van Renselaer's manor, in the State of New York, are again in arms against the laws; and it is reported that the power of the county is about to be put in requisition against them.

They have had over thirty-one snow storms at Bangor, Maine, since the 19th of November last, and uninterrupted sleighing most of the time since. The nice times that the young ladies and gents. have had in sleighing, are represented to have exceeded anything of "bygone-days."

The plague is raging on the banks of the Nile. It threatened to become very bad.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

...NESDAY, ... APRIL 7, 1841.

E PROTESTANT STILL.—Since the outer ...f this paper was worked off, which contains ...mmunication of the Book Committee and ...marks thereon, the Protestant of the 27th ...ame to hand, which contains the following ...recious article:

"HE WESTERN RECORDER."—Our first in...on was to write an article upon this subject ...he following may suffice. We have higher ...olier objects before us, than the cultivation ...rife. Besides, self-respect forbids our colli...with any man who could make so ungener...and unfounded a charge against us, as that ...ined in the last number but one.

...e editor will learn from an official source, ...r his insinuations respecting us are correct. ...course was taken without any solicitation ... We, therefore, entertain the hope, that ...ll have magnanimity enough to correct him...nd his readers. A noble mind is as ready ...ake acknowledgment of error, as it is willing ...convinced of truth.

We learn here that the editor has become ... religious since we began to labor with him; ...ems he now has "higher and holier objects ...ew than strife." Pity he had not possessed ...measure of grace at the outset, he would not ... have treated us so indecorously, and would ... saved both himself and us all this trouble.

He talks about "self-respect;" rather too ...now to shield yourself behind your dignity. ... ought to have thought of that a little soon...

You accuse us of "making an unfounded ...ge against you," and ask us to "correct our..." yet you do not inform us what that charge ...nd we have made several against you. A ...specimen of popery this, to require a man to ...at without pointing out his transgression. ... say we "will learn from an official source," ... If you allude to the communication from ...Book Committee, on the first page, it does ... touch the points at issue between us ... so far as to endorse in the gross what the ...or of the Protestant has said and done.—...efore, before we can perform this act of ...gnanimity" in correcting "ourself and our ...ers," you will have to inform us what is to be ... We have a very "noble mind," and as ... as an explanation shall make us satisfied of ..."error" we are prepared for its "acknowl...ent."

The editor has not published our last de... in his paper, as we requested him. NORTHERN ADVOCATE.—We alluded ... few ...eks since to this paper; the second number is ...w before us. It is a fine specimen of Yankee ...erprise—an elegant looking sheet. It is to ...published weekly at Auburn and Geneva, N. ..., by the Rev. John S. Robie, (Rev. F. G. THE WEATHER.—It continues so wet the ...rmers cannot get at their ploughing—many of ...hem have not struck a furrow yet. Spring work ... very backward.

☞The Philadelphia Chronicle of the 19th ...arch reached us on the 3d of April. From ...me cause or other there is much irregularity in ...e mails latterly.

☞Br. Ragan, President of the Pittsburgh ...onference, requests the publishers of the Meth...dist Protestant to send their paper to him, "New ...bison, Columbiana, Ohio."

☞J. D. Garmow, an unstationed minister, ...rites from Monroe county, Ohio; he says twen...y-two have recently been added to the Metho...dist Protestant Church in his field of labor.

☞The sixth Anniversary of the Ohio Anti...slavery Society will be held 2d of June, at Mt. ...leasant, Jefferson county, Ohio.

The following is from the "Star of the West," a Universalist paper published in Cincinnati Ohio:

BR. ATKINSON—REMOVAL.—Br. Atkinson, formerly of the Methodist Protestant Church, but now a good and zealous preacher of free grace for the world, has concluded to settle with the Universalist Society in Mason, Ohio—twenty-one miles from Cincinnati. Heretofore, he has devoted only a part of the time to the ministry, but we rejoice to know that he will now give himself wholly to the work; and we have no doubt that he will prove himself an able preacher of Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

Some years since the Rev. B. W. Johnson, of the Methodist Protestant Church, attached himself to the Universalists, and if we mistake not they said to the effect that in getting him, they had gotten one of the most talented ministers of the church whence he came. Br. Johnson has since given up the charge of his congregation, and says he has became satisfied that it is not right to preach the doctrines of Universalianism. Will the Star be so good as to insert this article for the information of its readers. We have published its article for the benefit of our readers, and ask the favor to be reciprocated.

☞We cut the following from the New York Luminary, of the 27th ult.

"We observed, an evil which, if unchecked, must exert a delirious influence among us. We allude to the disposition of a minority to evince a spirit of insubordination—setting up private opinion in opposition to the will of a majority, and threatening a withdrawal from conference, unless every thing went in precise accordance with their views."

Some people seem to think that religious liberty means for them to have their way in all things. We have had some such in our quarter, but we believe they are few at present. We do not pretend to say that majorities are always right, but wherever a man is always setting up his opinions against the decisions of the majority, it is a sure indication that he is a tyrant, no difference under what flag he sails.

NEW YORK CONFERENCE.—The New York and New Jersey Annual Conferences (united) of the M. P. Church, held their annual session in the Attorney street church, New York, on the 19th ult. The stations of the preachers is the principal part of the minutes given. The Rev. W. W. Wallace is continued editor of the Luminary. He states he will occupy that situation no longer than he is "permitted to discuss fearlessly all matter connected with the general good."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Unless you write your manuscripts plain, and fit them for the press, there will be no assurance given of their publication. If they should only want a slight attention they have often to lie on the table for weeks before we can find time to give them even that, such are the burdens which daily rest upon us.—Well prepared MSS. will always receive early attention, and such communications also as relate to the immediate interests of the church, let them be written as they may.

☞Br. Burns, of Allegheny city, writes, "I send you the name of as honest a man as lives between here and your office. He is poor, and has but little more employment than supports his small family, but says he must have the Recorder." He then gives us the name of Henry Williams with two dollars cash in advance for our paper. And yet we hear some saying, who are able to buy a farm every few years, that "the times are so hard they cannot afford to take a paper."

LADY'S BOOK.—The April number of this magazine is before us. It is embellished with a steel engraving—Stray Kitten, by Dick—Fashions, four figures, colored—Pleasing Experiments, two cuts. This periodical is considered, we believe, at the head of its kind. Forty-eight pages monthly; three dollars per annum in advance. Address L. A. Godey, 211 Chesnut street, Philadelphia.

FUGITIVES.—It is denied that the fugitives cast into jail in Loraine county, to which we recently alluded, were taken therefrom by the people from without. It is stated that they, assisted by some white prisoners, sawed through the bars of the grates and made their escape without any external aid.

FAST.—Gov. Davis, of Mass., has proclaimed the 8th inst. a day to be observed in "fasting, humiliation and prayer" by the State over which he presides. This Proclamation contains more of the spirit of the gospel than any thing of the kind we have noticed.

☞The editor of the New York Luminary calls on us to say "yea or nay" to the proposition for a union of the seceding branches of Methodists. He will find in our 81st No. an assent to the proposition for a convention in view of that object.

☞The thirteenth Annual Conference of the Boston district of the M. P. Church met at Staughton on the 11th ultimo. Rev. T. F. Morris, editor of the Olive Branch, was chosen president for the ensuing year, and Rev. Wm. Tozer secretary. Nine ministers and two lay delegates were in attendance. Rev. Mr. Tozer, on behalf of the "committee of publication," says "on the whole we think a new impulse is given to the Methodist Protestant reform in New England, and we trust and pray that under the blessing of Almighty God, the good cause may be destined to prosper and prevail."

The preachers are stationed as follows:

T. F. NORRIS, President.
Boston Circuit—John McLeish.
Staughton Station—Jos. S. Eldridge.
Taunton Station—James Wheaton.
North Rochester—P. Brett.
South Rochester—N. S. Clark.
Pocasset Station—J. H. Watten.
Milford Station—Wm. Tozer.
Cumberland Circuit—Calvin Cummings.
Pelham Circuit—J. Shelling Superintendent, John Craig, Assistant.
Marlborough and Winchester, N. H., referred to the President to be supplied.
Middleburgh Circuit—to be supplied.

GALLIPOLIS BANK.—It is stated to be ascertained that the amount of the paper taken from the Bank was $387,000; but it is probable a considerable amount of this sum was in the hands of the swindlers when the Bank failed.

FIRE.—We learn from the last Pittsburgh Christian Advocate that the Episcopal Methodist Church, at Akron, Ohio, was consumed by fire on the evening of the 18th ult.: cause unknown.

We have sent a list of dues, embracing the principal part of what is owing to us within the bounds of the Ohio Conference to Br. Bassett.—Our subscribers will please hand over to him, or to any of the itinerant preachers. Or almost any post master would remit for them if asked.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, April 7.—Flour $3; wheat 50 cents.

BALTIMORE, March 27.—Flour—The prices of Flour have advanced a fraction since our last report; not from any improved demand abroad but from the very small stocks on sale in this market, it being impossible to fill a reasonable large order at this time, of any description. Sales of Howard street have been made this week from store at 4,37½, 4,40 and 4,44 per bbl, cash; at the latter, 565 bbls. in lots; but that price could not have been obtained yesterday for standard brands, and unless to "fill up," not probably over 4,37½. For a uniform brand, 4,50 has been paid for a lot of 100 bbls. The car and wagon price is 4,25.

Provisions—There have been important changes in this market, and we reduce our quotations to conform to present prices. We have heard of no sales of Mess Beef except in small lots for ships' stores, and they at our quoted rates, with the exception of one transaction which was at 11,50 per bbl. A sale of 50 bbls. each, & Prime No. 1, at a price to be established. A lot of 75bls. Mess Pork has been sold this week at 13,00 per bbl. and another parcel of uninspected at 12,00. The last sale of Prime, reported to us, was at 11,50, at which price it is now held. The transactions in Bacon were somewhat extensive early in the week and at a decline of ¼a¾ ct. per lb. for Western; but the demand has since fallen off, and sales are difficult to effect at these reduced rates. The transactions extended from 70 to 80,000 lbs. assorted, in lots of 5 a 10,000, and in one instance 20,000 lbs.; 50,000 lbs. were disposed of by one house at 6¼a6½ cts. Baltimore cured Hams in lots of 100, have sold at 10 cts. per lb. A lot of 2000 Joles sold on terms not public.—Lard has improved in demand and a shade in price, and between 2 and 3000 kegs of prime Western, part for export, but mostly on speculation, have been sold during the week, chiefly on Monday and Tuesday—at first at 7¼, but subsequently, at 7¼a7¾ cts. per lb., the lower price for cash; the others, cash and 4 mos. It is now held at 7 cts. Sales of Roll Butter in bbls. at 8 cts. for rather inferior quality; and Western No. 2 and 3 are held at 8a7½a6½ cts., but we have heard of no takers, 6 cts. being the best offer made. Ohio and New England Cheese is held at 6a9 cts. for good to prime quality.

The Home Market—The number of Beef Cattle in market this week amounted to 250 head, about 100 of which were taken by city butchers at 6a7,50, averaging a little over 6,75 per 100 lbs.; and of the remainder 85 were taken to Washington City, and 55 to Philadelphia. Transactions in Hog show a slight decline; but we continue our quotations of last week, 5,50 a 5,75, the latter for choice lots.—Lyford.

NEW YORK, March 27.—Flour, Ohio per bbl. 4,81¼; Troy 4,81¼ a 487½; Western Canal 4,87½ Michigan 4,75; Philadelphia 5,00; Balt. Howard street 4,68¾ a 4,75.—Bicknell.

PHILADELPHIA, March 27.—Flour—A decided improvement has taken place within a few days in the Flour market; sales to the extent of 8 a 9000 bbls have been made at 4,56½—but most of the factors to-day are fair at 4,62½ per bbl; sales of Rye Meal at 2, 87½; Corn Meal is steady.

Provisions—The receipts from New Orleans have been to some extent; Porks continues low, but holders look for an advance. New Bacon, the hog round (loose,) 7½ cents. Considerable sales Western Lard, in kegs and bbls. at 7 a 7½ cents per lb. Butter in kegs at 7 a 8½ cents, as in quality. The two latter articles are quick and improving.

ITEMS.

THE FOREIGN MONEY MARKET.—The New York Express remarks that the public securities in England have of late been in a comparatively passive state, and business in the money market flat.—Railway shares had also partaken of the depression, and been in very little demand, and lower prices generally obtained. The inactivity on the stock exchange might be accounted for in the prospect that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would soon negociate another considerable loan. The revenue had not been deficient by the last returns, as compared with former quotations, yet it was much short the current expenditure of the country.

OHIO BANK STOCK.—From the report recently made in the Legislature of Ohio, it appears that the stock of the banks of the State is owned as follows: More than one half is in the hands of females, minors, and descendants estates, aged persons retired from business, savings institutions, physicians, and clergymen; about one-fourth by farmers, mechanics, and merchants; about a sixty-fourth part by lawyers, and about one hundred and twenty-fifth part by brokers.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.—A committee of stockholders who have been examining the affairs of this Bank, since January give notice that they will report on the 5th of April. They ought to give the names, dates, and particulars of sundry matters in which the bank has been concerned, in such shape as the people can understand. The stockholders have understood sufficient by this time to cure them of any lingering fancy for fancy stocks.

Lieut. Albertis, who so gallantly cut his way with 17 men through 100 Indians in Florida, and reached Port Russell, with only one man killed and one missing, is a practical printer. He was a few years ago editor and proprietor of a paper puplished at Martinsburg, Va., but afterwards received a commission in the army.

The Legislature of Massachusetts have resolved to loan the credit of the State to a further extent of $700,000 to the Company engaged in the construction of the Western Rail Road, connecting Boston with Albany.

A St. Petersburgh letter says, that on the 20th ult,, the cold was so intense there, that several sentinels were found frozen to death, at their posts; and in consequence of this, the men have to be relieved every ten minutes.

Not one of the respectable London papers speaks of the McLeod difficulty as likely to lead to a war between England and the United States.

The amount of loss occasioned by the recent inundations in the south of France, has been officially estimated at upwards of £669,000.

DR. ELDRIDGE.—Judge Barton last week decided against the dismissal of this notorious individual.

ACCIDENT.—In Annapolis, Md., on Saturday last, an interesting child of James Murray, Esq., the Secretary of State, aged about twelve years, was accidentally shot by one of his playmates, and survived the wound but a short time. Another warning to such as leave firearms in the way of children.

ASSAULT ON A FATHER.—A young man was sentenced to twenty years imprisonment, last week, at Middleton, Ct., for an assault and battery, upon his father, with intent to kill.

LIGHT.—The Councils of the city of Albany, N. Y., are debating the propriety of lighting the streets with gas.

REMARKABLE.—For more than eight months there has not been fifty dollars worth of property destroyed by fire in Albany, N. Y.

CANADA.—The Canada elections having terminated, the Parliament will meet at Kingston, lower end of Lake Ontario, in May or June next. As this will be the first Parliament held since the union of the Provinces, their first movements will be interesting both to England and this country.

A DREADFUL AND COWARDLY MASSACRE. A letter to the St. Louis Republican, from Fort Levenworth, gives an account of a most cowardly and bloody massacre committed by some Kansas upon some Pawnees.

The dastardly Kansas, 65 in number, took advantage of the absence of the Pawnee warriors from their encampment and massacred all but 11 of the women and children found in it.

The "Utica," the first steamboat of the season, arrived at Albany from New York on Friday.—Bick., 30th inst.

GEN. JACKSON.—Gen. Jackson visited Nashville, Tenn., on the 4th ultimo; and his general health, the Nashville Union, says, seems to be as good as it has been for several years.

CAUGHT.—It is stated in the Richmond, Va., Star, on the authority of private advices, that the Assistant Post Master at Abingdon, in that State, John W. Stevens, had been detected in plundering the Post Office at that place. The accused has hitherto borne a very high character, and the discovery of his villainy has created a great sensation among those who knew him. His daughter, it is stated, has gone deranged.

OUR TRADE.—Our State Canal is opened. Leech & Co. have despatched several boats to Pittsburgh. The first left Harrisburgh on the 24th.—Bick., 30th ult.

FROM WASHINGTON.—One or two members have already reached Washington with the view of attending the Extra Session. The members of the Cabinet are very busily employed, and find it no sinecure even to read over the various letters and petitions that are daily sent them in relation to applications for office. The latest despatches from England in relation to the McLeod case are pacific. J. C. Montgomery has been appointed Post Master of Philadelphia, and J. W. Tyson, Esq. Collector of the Port. It is probable that the other offices will be distributed among Messrs. Badger, Todd, Morris, Sergeant, Ottis, Connell, and one or two other prominent whigs.—ib.

INSURANCE.—A letter from New Orleans says:—"The business of insurance in this city has been very disasterous. That on the river has been peculiarly bad, and the losses on open Cotton policies, and policies on steamboat hulls have been immense, notwithstanding an advance in rates for both risks. Four Companies have retired from the field bankrupt and ruined during the last two years, and those that remain, from the fact of having no tariff rates, are daily working each other's destruction."

QUAKERS.—An eastern periodical expresses a decided opinion that the Friends or Quakers, both in this country and in Great Britian, are rapidly breaking up as a distinct body of christians, and uniting with other denominations.—Cross & Jour.

More than three hundred communicants were added to the Baptist churches in New York city within six weeks ending on the second Sabbath in March.—ib.

REVIVALS IN ILLINOIS.—The Rev. J. M. Peck baptized seventeen at Rockspring, March 6th. On the fourth Sabbath in January, Brother Weston baptized ten at Carthage. In Warren co., over thirty have been baptized and the work was still going on. A new Baptist church was constituted at the county seat of that county, January 21st.—ib.

REVIVALS IN KENTUCKY.—To the Baptist church at Glasgow, twenty-nine persons were added about the middle of February. To the Mt. Tabor church, fifty-seven were added about the first of March.—ib.

The Baptist Triennial Convention will hold the next session in Baltimore, on Wednesday, the 28th of April. During the same week are to be held the annual meetings of the American Home Mission Society, and of the American and Foreign Bible Society.—ib.

A WILMINGTON WHALER.—A Wilmington journal says, "Capt. Stephenson of the barque Globe lying off Duck Creek, reports that he spoke the Wilmington Whaling Company's ship Ceres, off Penambuco, bound home.

GETTING BETTER.—The Hon. Henry Clay is yet at Barnum's. His health is improving. On Monday he was enabled to leave his bed and walk across the chamber.

The number of chartists in prison in England, and Wales, from June 1839 to June 1840, amounts to 443.

MORTALITY.—The deaths in New York, the last week, were 135—in Boston 81.

FLORIDA WAR.

SPEECH OF MR. GIDDINGS, OF OHIO,

Upon the proposition of Mr. Thompson, of South Carolina, to appropriate 'one hundred thousand dollars for the removal, subsistence, and benefit, of such of the Seminole Chiefs and Warriors as may surrender for emigration.'—Delivered in the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Feb. 9, 1841.

(Concluded from our last.)

But I intend to pursue this subject further. I shall now show that this Government—this nation, composed of twenty-six States, some holding slaves, and some denying the right of man to hold his fellow man in slavery; has been made to deal in slaves; to become the owner of slaves; that this administration, now just going out of power, has dealt in "human flesh:" that the funds of Government, drawn from the pockets of free laborers, have been paid for the the capture of fugitive slaves, and the purchase of slaves captured from the Seminole Indians. And for that purpose, I refer to order No. 175, dated at Tampa Bay, September 6, 1837. It reads as follows:

"1. The Seminole negroes captured by the army will be taken on account of government, and held subject to order of the Secretary of War.

"2. The sum of eight thousand dollars will be paid to Creek chiefs and warriors, by whom they were captured, or who were present at the capture, in full for their claim to them.

"3. To induce the Creek Indians to take alive, and not destroy the negroes of citizens who had been captured by the Seminoles, a reward was promised them for all they should secure. They captured and secured thirty-five, who have been returned to their owners. The owners have paid nothing, but the promise to the Indians must be fulfilled. The sum of twenty dollars will be allowed to them each from the public funds.

"4. Lieutenant Searle is charged with the execution of this order."

This order, taking the negroes "on account of Government," bears date on the 6th September. From that time they were to be "held subject to the order of the Secretary of War." On the 7th October this order of Gen. Jesup was approved by the honorable Secretary of War, as may be seen by reference to page 43 of document just quoted. Thus, sir, we have official documentary evidence that the people of this nation, in their national capacity, became the "purchasers of human beings."—The money of our people, of freemen of this nation, was paid for the purchase of slaves.

This fund, most of it collected in the free States, and coming from the hard earnings of free whites, was appropriated for the purchase of Indian slaves; and of those who had sought freedom amid the swamps and everglades of Florida: while our most vital interests at the North are abandoned, and even the implements necessary to carry on our harbor improvements have been sold, and the money thus obtained placed in the common fund, and, perhaps, paid for the purchase of these slaves at the South. I hear it said, in an undertone near me, that the purchase of these fugitive slaves was justifiable and correct. I may differ with the gentleman as to the justice or honor of that proceeding; but I cannot enter into that subject at this time. I would merely say, if the slaveholders wish to have their slaves repurchased, I desire them to furnish the funds, Mr. Chairman, and not thrust their hands into the pockets of your constituents and mine to obtain the money to pay for them.

(Mr. Black, of Georgia, desired to be informed whether the member from Ohio alluded to the citizens of Georgia?)

Mr. Giddings resumed. I deny the right of members to interrupt me for the purpose of inquiring whether I allude to them, or to their constituents. If the garment does not fit them, why do they attempt to force it on? I alluded to the fact, that money is, and has been, collected in the free States, and used to buy up the fugitive slaves of the South, while our most important interests are abandoned.

I see gentlemen here who are tremulously sensitive if the word tariff, or harbor, or manufacture, is but mentioned; & I should like to compare the benefits to the nation, arising from the forty millions expended in the Florida war, with the benefits of the thirteen millions expended throughout the United States for harbor purposes; but I have no time to do it now.

I was speaking upon the subject of retaking fugitive slaves, and I think it due to the people of the nation that they should be informed of the assiduous manner in which our troops pursued the business of catching slaves.

In a letter, dated at Tampa Bay, 25th May, 1837, directed to Lieut. Col. Harney, General Jesups says: "If you see Powell [Oceola] tell him I shall send out and take all the negroes who belong to the white people. And he must not allow the Indian negroes to mix with them. Tell him I am sending to Cuba for bloodhounds to trail them; and I intend to hang every one of them who does not come in."

If the negroes, who appear to have controlled the Indians, had quietly suffered themselves to be trailed with bloodhounds, or to be hanged for their love of liberty, they would have well deserved to be slaves. Another important piece of intelligence we have here also. The expenditure of $5,000 for bloodhounds in Cuba was not, as he had supposed, for the purpose of trailing Indians. In this letter we have it officially announced, that they were sent for and obtained for the purpose of catching fugitive slaves. I desire the people of this nation to understand distinctly that they are taxed for the purpose of maintaining and supporting slavery in the slave States; that their treasure has been appropriated directly and publicly to that purpose; that our army—many of whose officers and soldiers were bred in the free States, and in the love of liberty—has been employed by the Commanding General, in pursuing and capturing fugitive slaves. Nor is that all.—The freemen of the North are taxed for the purpose of buying bloodhounds to act in concert with our army, in this degrading and disgusting warfare.

The taking fugitive slaves is regarded, by Northern people, as a most ignominious employment; so much so, that scarcely a man can be found who will do it publicly. Yet, it seems that our military officers in Florida were openly engaged in it.

I will call the attention of this committee to that portion of Gen. Jesup's order which fastens upon the people of this nation the character of slaveholders, and the purchasers of slaves; "by which this nation, boasting of its liberty and its regard for equal rights, became a dealer in human flesh." I refer to that portion of the order which declares the slaves to be "taken on account of the government, and held subject to the order of the Secretary of War." On the 24th September, 1837, Gen. Jesup wrote to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, saying, "The Seminole negroes are now all the property of the public. I have promised Abraham the freedom of his family if he prove faithful to us; and I shall certainly hang him if he be not faithful."

Mr. Chairman, I think the people of my district will be slow to admit that General Jesup possessed the constitutional power, or the right, to make them slaveholders. Some of them, I am sure, will disclaim all title to these slaves, and, like General Taylor, will refuse to have any concern or connexion with this transaction. They will, I am confident, deny the right of General Jesup, or of the honorable Secretary of War, to pay out their money for the purchase of slaves. Nor do I believe they will admit the justice or honor of selling the freedom of a man's family for the purchase of his fidelity, as promised by General Jesup to Abraham. If I understand the letter referred to, this Abraham was taken into the service of Government, for the purpose of acting as a pilot to lead our men to the habitations of other blacks, for the purpose of capturing more slaves and Indians. If he proved faithful to our troops and a traitor to his own kindred and friends, then his wife and children—the objects of his affection—were to have their freedom; but if he refused to betray his own people, he was to be hanged, and his family enslaved. Sir, I know not how other gentlemen view this transaction, but I am free to declare that it does not comport with my own views of honor or justice.

But, sir, where are those slaves? Are they set at liberty, or have they been sold into slavery? The purchase was certainly a very extraordinary transaction, and one that will excite inquiry.—The slaves remained at Fort Pike for many months. And, if I had time, I would read to the committee a curious correspondence respecting their being employed in such manner as to earn their living, and the like; but I will not detain the committee for that purpose.

The manner in which they were to be finally disposed of seems to have created some uneasiness with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.—In a letter addressed to the acting Secretary of War, dated May 1, 1838, speaking of the purchase of these slaves, he says: "I would respectfully suggest whether there are not other objections to the purchase of these negroes by the United States.—It seems to me, that a proposition to Congress to appropriate money to pay for them, and their transportation to Africa, could its authority for that course be obtained, or for any other disposition of them, would occasion great and extensive excitement. Such a relation assumed by the United States, for however laudable an object, would, it appears, place the country in no enviable attitude, especially at this juncture, when the public mind, here and elsewhere, is so sensitive upon the subject of slavery." Sir, I fully agree with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. This purchase of slaves by General Jesup, and sanctioned by the honorable Secretary of War, has placed the country in no enviable attitude; it has tarnished our national honor, and deeply wounded the feelings of the North. But this suggestion, as to the propriety of the purchase was made on the 1st of May, 1838, and, on the 24th of September previous, General Jesup, writing to Capt. B. L. Bonneville, commanding the Choctaw warriors, says: "In addition to their pay as soldiers, they (the Choctaws) will have all the Seminole property they capture. And those Indians (the Seminoles) are rich in horses and negroes. The Creek warriors received between fourteen and fifteen thousand dollars for their captures." Yet, it seems that, some eight months after the date of this letter showing that the Creek warriors had then received their pay, the propriety of the purchase was doubted. I think, however, that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had good reason to suppose that some excitement might arise from this transaction, by which you and I, and our constituents, as a portion of the people of this nation, became "slaveholders," and purchasers of our fellow men.

At page 74 of the document last cited, is a list of these Seminole negroes who were sent to Tampa Bay, after being received as "public property," by order of General Jesup, at the price of eight thousand dollars. The list contains the name, age, sex, and description of each person. I should like to present it to the people of the free States as a sample of the manner in which the slave trade is carried on under color of this Florida war. But as the list is of great length, I beg leave to give an extract only. It is in the following form:

Ben,	5 years,	Male,	Son of Elsy.
Molly,	3 years,	Female,	Daughter of Elsy.
Judy,	1 year,	Female,	Daughter of Elsy.

This short extract contain the names of three children, apparently of one family, and less than six years of age. These children were purchased by our officers as "public property." Sir, what do our people of the free States, or of the civilized world, think of this kind of "Government chattles?" I have no doubt that many a Northern lady will inquire for the mother of those children? This question I cannot answer. I find in the list the name of Elsy, aged twenty years, said to be the daughter of Fanny. I should judge that she was not the mother of the children, but such may be the case. I am led to believe that both father and mother escaped the fangs of the bloodhounds and the slave catchers.

But the question recurs, where are those slaves? I have, for more than a month, had a resolution lying in my drawer, calling on the Secretary of War for information respecting them; but to this hour I have had no opportunity of offering it in the regular course of business, and I felt no hope of success by offering it at any other time. It may not have been observed by many members, that in the last session of the late Congress, a petition was presented to this House from a Mr. Watson, in which he states that, in May, 1837, he purchased these same negroes, captured by the Creek warriors, of their agent, and paid for them $14,600, and he gives pretty good evidence to sustain his statement. This occurred in May, '38, while the order of General Jesup receiving them as public property was in September previous; and the confirmation of that order was on the 7th of October, prior to the time of Watson's apparent purchase. General Jesup's letter to Col. Warren, saying that these warriors had received between $14,000 and $15,000, bears date on the 17th of October, prior to Watson's suppose purchase. It will be borne in mind that these are official documents, transmitted at the time of their date. There is also a curious coincidence in regard to price. General Jesup said in October, 1837, that these warriors had then received "between fourteen and fifteen thousand dollars." And Watson says, and gives good evidence to prove, that he paid to these same warriors $14,600, in May following. Now, if these Indians got twice paid for those slaves, they were more fortunate in slave trading than they ever were in any other transaction with the white people. Another singular circumstance I will mention. On the 1st of May, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs suggested to the Secretary of War, that for the United States to assume the relation of slaveholders, might create extensive excitement, particularly as the public mind here and elsewhere was so sensitive on the subject of slavery; while Watson's bill of sales bears date only eight days afterwards. On the 9th of May, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs requests of the Secretary of War an order for the officer at Fort Pike to deliver these negroes to N. F. Collins, agent for the Creek warriors: while, from other communications, one would think that the United States never had owned the negroes, although they were taken into possession of our troops on the 6th of September, 1837, and kept at the public expense until, and long after, the supposed purchase by Watson.

Sir, this transaction is shrouded in mystery.—I have read to the committee a portion of its history; but the whole I think is not communicated by the documents before us. I have an opinion, and I express it as an opinion, founded on official papers, it is true, but it is nevertheless the conclusion of my own mind in regard to the matter. I then supposed that after the purchase of General Jesup, on the 6th of September, and the sanction by the Secretary of War, on the 7th of October, 1837, and after keeping these negroes at the expense of the public for eight months and transporting them to Fort Pike, the honorable Secretary began to entertain doubts whether the public would justify the transaction. He probably felt that my friend here from Vermont, (Mr. Slade,) or the gentleman from N. Y. over the way, (Mr. Gates,) might not remain entirely silent, "when" (to use the words of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs) "the public mind here and elsewhere is so sensitive upon the subject of slavery;" especially as it was ascertained that there must be an appropriation of money by Congress for the funds that would seem to have been paid long previously. Difficulties appear to have beset him on every side; and I think his feelings were well expressed in a letter to General Arbuckle, dated July 21st, 1838, in which, speaking of this transaction, he says, in every emphatic language, "the whole affair is a delicate and a difficult one." Just at this time, Mr. Watson, being at this city, was, it appears from his statements, persuaded by the officers of Government to purchase the negroes, being fully assured that the Indian title was good and valid. The contract was accordingly made, as it appears, with the agent of the Creek warriors, by which he, Watson paid the $14,600, and relieved the honorable Secretary from his embarrassment, and the nation from the purchase made by General Jesup. The purchase was effected in "this market," with the approbation of the high officers of State, and in the midst of a Christian community. Now, Sir in order that I may be understood, I will leave the purchase and sale of the slaves for a moment, and ask the patience of the committee while I relate the brief story of their travels and peregrinations. They were sent from Florida immediately after the order of the 6th of September, 1837, to Fort Pike near New Orleans. Here some sixty of them were detained by a pretended claim, set up by persons living in Georgia, who insisted that this "public property" was their own proper goods and chattles; while General Gaines, who appeared better versed in the law of nations and the military code than he is in the slave trade boldly claimed them "as prisoners of war." Yes, Mr. Chairman, these negroes, declared by one commanding general to be "the property of the public," were boldly asserted by another to be "prisoners of war." In the mean time, a Lieutenant Reynolds, was deputed to conduct the emigrating Indians to their home west of the Mississippi. Among the Seminoles where these slaves who had been the subject of capture and purchase, yet remaining at Fort Pike, all under the charge of Lieutenant Reynolds. To him Mr. Collins, agent for the Creek warriors, and acting, as Watson says, for him, also attended by Watson's brother, applied to get possession of the negroes, and presented the order of the Secretary of War for their delivery to Collins. There is some difference in the relation of Collins and that of Lieutenant Reynolds. Mr. Watson says distinctly that General Gaines and Lieutenant Reynolds both refused to obey the order of the honorable Secretary to deliver over the negroes. General Gaines appears to have declared them "prisoners of war," and ordered them to be sent to the place assigned the Seminoles west of the Mississippi; and Lieutenant Reynolds, punctilious in the discharge of his military duty, "took the responsibility," and started on his way with Indians and negroes, both slaves and freemen.—He landed his charge at Little Rock, in Arkansas, to which place he was followed or attended by Collins; who, faithful to his trust, determined to get the negroes. At that place he again demanded them of Lieut. Reynolds. But a difficulty now interposed, for that officer had not military force sufficient to hold the Indians in subjection, if irritated by an attempt to deliver over the negroes to Collins, to be bro't back as slaves to the white people. He, therefore, called upon the Governor of Arkansas for troops to enable him to effect that object. But Governor Roane, thinking the safety of the people of his State more important than the slave trade, refused all military aid, and required Lieutenant Reynolds to proceed forthwith on his way to the territory assigned to the Indians. In his answer to Lieutenant Reynolds, he says: "Had the Government intended to dispose of these negroes to the Creek warriors, it should have done so in Florida, and not bring Indians and negroes to Arkansas, the vicinity of their future residence, and irritate the Indians to madness and turn them loose upon our frontier when we have no adequate protection. The massacre of our citizens would be the inevitable consequence." "Your immediate departure will ensure peace, and avert the outrages you had such good cause to expect." Thus, Mr. Chairman, you see that we were brought to the verge of a war west of the Mississippi, by reason of the efforts of our officers to maintain slavery and slave trade. But Collins, who, so far as the public documents speak of him, was the agent of the Creek warriors, now applied to these same Creek warriors for possession of the negroes. This, sir, is another curiosity. The negroes were taken west among the very Indians who originally captured them, and in whose name the Government officers and Collins were trying to obtain possession of them. But these warriors, having received the 14,600 dollars in "the better currency," showed no disposition to interfere any further. Indeed, they said that they had sold the negroes, and that the United States had possession of them, and that the Creeks were under no obligation to interfere any further in the business: But Collins, ever faithful to his trust, remained in that country, and a correspondence took place between him and the honorable Secretary of War, and other officers of Government, in regard to the measure to be adopted in order to get these negroes back into slavery. Orders were sent to General Arbuckle, and councils of the Indians were called; the Indians, however, showed but little disposition to aid their white brethren in enslaving those who had gained their liberty by such a concatenation of circumstances. In short, sir, they showed almost as much insensibility to the claims of our slaveholders, as our more civilized friend, John Bull, has so often evinced; excepting, always, that the Indians civilly answered all questions on the subject, while I believe the British Government has never condescended even to hold any correspondence whatever for delivering up fugitive slaves. But, sir, while the Indians appeared thus insensible to the appeals made to them in behalf of slavery, the negroes themselves appeared perfectly callous to all entreaties. The Indians would not deliver up, and the negroes appeared to have become suddenly impressed with the belief that they could take care of themselves. They now felt themselves restored to that liberty of which they had so long been unjustly deprived. Indeed, it appears that the negroes were thoroughly convinced of the perfect safety and propriety of "immediate emancipation and of Western colonization." They, at all events, appeared determined to give to the world some practical demonstrations on these subjects; and, sir, I believe they are yet carrying out that determination.

Thus, you see, Mr. Chairman, that the efforts of our honorable Secretary of War, and of other officers of Government, failed to bring back those negroes to a state of slavery, and the agents of Watson were compelled to return the negroes.

But, in the meantime, Mr. Watson's money was gone and the negroes were gone also. He had bought the negroes, as he says, upon the assurance of the title held out to him by the officers of Government. These officers had exerted their utmost skill to get the negroes for him, but all had failed; and Mr. Watson then applied to Congress for compensation for his loss. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the honorable Secretary of War both recommend the claim to the favorable consideration of Congress, and urge us as to make the appropriation. Of the propriety of doing so, I shall say nothing at this time. I hope to do my duty on that subject when it comes before us. My object now is to show the manner in which the officers of this Government have attempted, not only to make us, in our national character, slaveholders and slave-traders, but to make the freemen of the North pay this purchaser for slaves which he could not catch. I will beg leave to give the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his own words. In a letter to the honorable Secretary of War, dated July 1, 1840, speaking of these negroes, he says: "Any attempt at enforcing a claim to them under the Creek warriors, would, perhaps, have resulted in a conflict; and, as the hazard of such an issue prevented the use of more than persuasive means, I think General Watson has a just claim on the United State for the money he paid, and interest."

This, sir, is the logic of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and that same opinion is endorsed by the Hon. Secretary of War. I have stated, and I think have shown from authentic documents that the war in Florida originated in attempts by our Executive officers to support and maintain slavery; that it has been renewed and carried on for that purpose; that the money of our nation has been paid for the purchase of fugitive slaves and of Indian slaves. To these I now add the fact that those officers deem it just that we should pay for slaves which the owners cannot obtain.

When I obtained the floor, I intended to have called the attention of the committee to the manner in which this war was renewed after Gen. Macomb's treaty of peace in 1839. But I have already detained the committee too long, and I will only say that, if the public papers are to be accredited, the people of Florida held meetings for the purpose of protesting against that treaty, for the reason that it permitted the Indians to remain in Florida; and they urged that the territory occupied by them would afford a barbor for runaway slaves. Of course the war was renewed, and continues, and like a mighty maelstrom, draws within its vortex and swallows up the immense resources of the nation. For a period almost equal to that of our Revolutionary war, the people of the Northern States have been taxed for the purpose of carrying on this contest, directed principally against the fugitives slaves in Florida. To this war the feelings, the principles, the intersets, the honor of the free States are opposed; yet, sir, they have been, and still are, compelled to furnish means for its prosecution. Revolting as the trading in slaves is to the feeling of our Northern people, they have been constrained to supply the means of purchasing their fellow beings. Holding, as the people of the North do, "these truths to be self-evident, that man is born free, and is endowed by his Creator with the inalienable right of liberty," they have been obliged to furnish money to pay for the recapture and re-enslaving of those who, fleeing from the power that oppressed them, had sought in the wilds of Florida those rights to which, by the laws of nature and of nature's God, they were entitled.

Sir, I am anxious to see a period put to those abuses of Northern rights. I desire to see this war terminated at the earliest possible moment; but I fear it will not be accomplished by the gentleman from South Carolina. My own opinion is that all attempt to remove the Indians and leave the negroes, will prove abortive. We are told that the negroes control the Indians. With those negroes, an unconditional surrender to us would be a voluntary separation from their relatives and families, and slavery for life. They will probably prefer death to such an alternative. Of course the war will continue until the murder of those people by our army shall proclaim peace to Florida, who refuses peace upon other terms. For one, I am prepared to send all who will surrender themselves as prisoners of war, to the western country, under the pledged faith of this nation to protect them in the enjoyment of their lives, their liberty, and their domestic relations; and for that purpose I have prepared an amendment, which I now send to the Chair.

PROSPECTUS OF A

RELIGIOUS PERIODICAL

To be published in Springfield, Illinois, and to be devoted to the cause of the METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, to the cause of CHRISTIANITY, LITERATURE and GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

In offering to the consideration and patronage of the community a new religious paper, it is becoming in its originators to set forth the objects it will aim to accomplish, and the principles upon which it will be conducted. Like the Methodist Protestant Church, under the auspices of one branch of which it will be published, it is designed to advocate and diffuse a knowledge of the moral and spiritual tenets of the Scriptures, as they are interpreted and understood by the great body of the Methodists generally; and at the same time to spread before the eyes of all, who may choose to see, those principles of reform, which we are laboring to engraft upon the Church Polity, or interweave with the Governmental Constitution and organization of old Methodism, and which we believe will improve both her appearance and efficiency, bring her nearer in similitude to the Primitive Church, make her better accord with the genius of our people, and with the spirit of the age in which we live.

As a religious sect we are often misrepresented, and as often misunderstood. To correct erroneous notions, therefore, respecting us, whether originating in excusable ignorance, open hostility, or cloaked maliciousness, and to cause our youthful but growing Church to stand forth in the view of the world, arrayed in that garb of comeliness and beauty, which so well befits her, and which legitimately belongs to her, will be one of the prominent objects of this paper. In endeavoring to accomplish this, the only "weapons of our warfare" will be truth, candor, fact and argument. We are of those who believe in the ultimate omnipotency of truth, and have no ulterior object, other than her ascendancy and triumph, and are willing to follow whithersoever she may lead. We are also convinced that ■ holy and righteous cause need not fear the eye of scrutiny, however close the analysis of investigation, however minute and searching, nor the battery or argument, however potent. Hence our columns will be freely open to communication from our old-side brethren, and others who may differ from us in opinion, provided they are characterized by a spirit of fairness, and as much courtesy and respect, as the nature of the case will admit, and as one christian brother may justly exact from another. While such communications will be cheerfully inserted, we reserve to ourselves in all cases, the right of reply, under such restrictions and limitations as we impose upon our opponents.

The doings of the Illinois and General Conferences, will be published in this paper, as well as extracts from the proceedings of other State Conferences, so far as these may be of a general nature, or of special interest to our readers.—Every thing, either nearly or remotely related to our common Christianity, that we may be able to gather from our varied resources, circulated to subserve the cause of the Redeemer, or interest his followers, religious revivals in our own or other churches, missionary intelligence, &c., will have an appropriate department in our paper.—Facts and essays, moral, literary, scientific, mechanical and agricultural, will all come within the legitimate scope of our periodical, and form proper subjects for insertion, review, criticism and remark. A summary of general intelligence will be given in each paper, embracing news, foreign and domestic; but most carefully abstaining from any intermeddling with the party politics of the country.

During the sessions of the Legislature of this State, one page will be devoted to a publication of its proceedings.

The above Periodical will be established and sustained by the Illinois Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and commenced immediately after the next session of said Conference in September next; provided a sufficient patronage can be obtained.

The paper will be issued semi-monthly on the largest sheet that can be afforded at one dollar and fifty cents, payable in advance.

The undersigned were appointed a committee, by the Illinois Conference, to ascertain the practicability of publishing a periodical in this district, and with that view now send forth this prospectus.

The series is used in the Boston Schools generally in the schools of New England, other parts of the United States, and have republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are may be judged of, in some degree, by such ces as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior in all the requisites called for in such a work any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will find in these extracts wherewith to regale him We can easily imagine how this fine writing cause the bosoms of talented children to ■ and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out ter of former selections; and we think we have little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted its design, than any other in the language Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of taste can look over this book without great light as well as instruction. The pieces are rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent expression, that they may be read again again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe that this book and the preceding have been highly thought of, as to be republished in England, ■ country from which, till within ■ years, we have been accustomed to borrow our books of this description."—*Charleston C.) ...give up my mother's look—my sister's kiss—
I can think of love—yet brook a death like this!
I can give up the young fame I burned to win—
All—but the spotless name I glory in!
Thine is the power to give—thine to deny—
Joy for the hour to live—calmness to die,
By all the brave should cherish—by my dying breath—
I ask that I may cherish—by a soldier's death!"

NO. V.

Not one point in my last communication, No. 4, has been noticed, much less refuted. We conclude then that we have settled the point as clear as the light of the sun that baptism ought to be preached to Gentiles for the remission of sins, for in the first instance that we have on record of Gentile conversion, it was done before baptism; therefore it must have been administered as a sign of pardon to the believer, emblematical of the restoration from death unto life, by the grace of God. This brings us 2dly. To notice more particularly the points connected with the conversion of Cornelius. 1. Though he was considered an heathen he had experienced all that could be experienced under or by the law, or in that dispensation,—yet all was not satisfactory—there being a veil over the conscience. Therefore he must believe in Christ. Faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of God. Therefore when Peter presented Him as the only Saviour, he did believe in Him, and the moment that he was brought under the threshold of faith the Spirit of God, the efficient cause of man's salvation, sealed the work of pardon upon his heart: he was then brought into the full enjoyment of the blessing of the gospel of peace. No man then could forbid water that these should not be baptised, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we (Jews) to administer the outward sign of baptism, to exhibit to the world that they had put on Christ—so must every man.

Those points that we have presented in this and our former communications, and which we have strove to defend, constitute the leading principles of the kingdom of Christ. Those rules working in this way there can be no deception; whereas on the other hand, though an individual may be baptised, or believe and be baptised, and after all he may miss of the pardon of sin, as in the case of Simon—Acts 8: 13. What, we ask, could have been his particular position? He believed and was baptised, and after all he was pronounced to be in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity. It would have done no good to have baptised him over again—this would have been mocking the institution, for if there had been any virtue he no doubt would have received it in the first instance. Therefore if there had been no other means for pardon other than baptism, he must have been lost to all eternity. It is true, as Christ had told us, in the commission, Mark 16: 15, 16, "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." If then baptism is necessary for the pardon of sins, it would have been, "he that believeth not and is not baptised shall be damned," because, according to the sense that the Reformers would put upon this commission, baptism is the means of pardon, therefore if the sinner neglects the means he must be condemned. But unfortunately for them, baptism is not a means of pardon, but faith is, therefore, he that believeth not shall be damned, for it is the only means that God hath appointed (with prayer and repentance,) for the forgiveness of sin. Baptism being an after duty, of course, he must attend to that in order to connect himself with the discipleship of Christ. It becomes us all so to explain the gospel as that no man shall cloak himself under our exposition, and by that means plunge himself into utter destruction, and be cast off at the left hand.

It is impossible for me to say that any man has passed from death unto life because he has been baptised. I can only judge by the fruit; therefore I nor no other man ought to rest our salvation on what others may judge of us. All this matter must be left to the spirit of God, and that holy affection, love to God and man of which John speaks, 1 John 3: 14; "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." The christianity of the present age is on this wise—we know that we have passed from death unto life because we have been baptised. Strange infatuation indeed.—Let every man take the course as did Cornelius, and there can be no mistake; they will not then want to purchase the holy spirit with money, for they will have the consciousness of the pardon of sin and the favor of God. A DISCIPLE.

ON PRAYER, NO. II.

In resuming the subject of prayer, it may be proper to inquire what are the things which we should pray for? If we will attentively peruse the divine records, we cannot fail to perceive that we have an almost unbounded liberty in approaching the Divine Being in acts of devotion, and in making known to him our wants in fervent supplication. The following declaration of our adorable Saviour seems to favor this idea,—I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree as touching any thing that they shall ask, that it shall be done for them of my father which is heaven. Although it is asserted that we have a very extensive license to pray to Almighty God, yet all of our requests should be in subordination to his will, and in the name of Jesus Christ.

The will of the Lord is to be known from his former dealings with mankind, and from his revealed and written word. We infer that all necessary temporal benefits comes fairly within the scope of our petitions. But we are not to expect these to be miraculously bestowed upon us, but by attending to natural means. Health, strength, the continuation of life, sustenance and apparel for our bodies, may all be prayed for in subjection to the will of God. But spiritual mercies appears to be the more prominent objects of our intense supplication, than those which are natural.

By spiritual favors we mean such as peace of mind,—the pardon of sins,—the image of God restored to our souls,—the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, given unto, us enabling us to love him with all the heart, soul, mind and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves; and that we may ultimately triumph over the snares and temptations, incidental to our probationary state, and be welcomed by the Divine Redeemer, into those mansions of joy and endless felicity, which he has gone to prepare for his humble yet triumphant followers.

These are some of the numerous blessings which we need, and are authorized to pray for. But should we confine our petitions to ourselves? By no means, we should pray for others—for our families—for the community in which we live—for the prosperity of the Church—the advancement of the Redeemer's empire and the conversion of the world. It is said in the New Testament, "we know that God heareth not sinners," that is impenitent sinners so as to answer their prayers, "but if any man be a worshipper of God and doeth his will—him God heareth." St. James informs us, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraided not," and "It shall be given him." Again, "is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the Church, and let them pray over them, &c. and the prayer of faith shall save the sick"—and "the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much."

Very many examples as well as precepts may be adduced from the holy scriptures, wherein we are instructed to pray and intercede with the Deity, in behalf of innumerable description of persons. Witness a few instances; and Moses besought the Lord his God, and said, "Lord why doth thy wrath wax hot against the people which thou has brought forth out of the land of Egypt, with great power and with a mighty hand." Samuel prayed for the people in his day. Jesus prayed for his executioners. "Father forgive them, they know not what they do." St. Stephen prayed for his murderers, and he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, "Lord lay not this sin to their charge." Further, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Indeed we should pray for all conditions of men. Governors and the governed, high or low, rich or poor. Saints or sinners. Not that every circumstance or condition of persons, should be prayed for in every act of devotion

If there be any case which we should not pray for, it must be such as is alluded to by St. John, "There is sin unto death I do not say he shall pray for it."—Whether this be the sin spoken of by the Saviour against the Holy Ghost, which shall never be forgiven in time or eternity, we know not. Commentators disagree as to what is meant by blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Some deny that any person now living, can commit this sin. But if we knew positively any person or persons who had committed this unpardonable sin, it might from an exception to the general rule of prayer for all men. But we are pursuaded, if there be such cases in the world, we have no knowledge of them. The drift of the present remarks are to prove that all men who are in a savable condition are fit subjects of prayers, the heathen not excepted. It is true when we pray for the salvation of an impenitent sinner, it is supposed that there will be a process of grace upon his heart—he has to be enlightened; he has to become penitent.—Sinners must be convicted for sin before they can be converted or regenerated,—and when we preach to impenitent people, and pray for their salvation, it is that a spiritual work of grace may be affected in their souls, bringing them from the power of darkness and translating them into the Kingdom of God's dear Son through the means used, such as preaching both promises and threatenings of the Gospel.—Praying fervently to the great Head of the Church for the effusions of the Holy Spirit.

I trust then the ministers and members fathers and brothers of the M. P. Church in the Ohio district, will lift up their hearts in fervent prayer statedly and regularly to God for the manifestation of his divine power. He has said, call on me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.—We have had our day or days of trouble Expulsions, persecutions, desertions, defaminations, poverty, &c., none of these things move us. Our motto is onward and upward, and when these frail bodies of ours shall sink to their mother earth, may our happy redeemed spirits be caught up to paradise. Respectfully

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

JACKSONSBURGH, O., MARCH 27, 1841.

Mr. Editor: I attended quarterly meeting at Xenia, the first Sabbath in February last. We had seasons of refreshing, and two individuals were added to the society. Brethren Dobbins and Stephens remain in good cheer, finding that their labor is not in vain in the Lord.

The second Sabbath in February, attended quarterly meeting of Twin Creek circuit, at Liberty. Brethren Flood and Dalbey meet with encouragement in their work, seeing the Lord owns their labors. They have had some valuable accessions this winter. One new society established last season, at a thriving village has commenced the good work of building a house for divine worship.

The third Sabbath in February was spent at the quarterly meeting of Broad Ridge circuit, at Grants Lick, Kentucky, Br. Barnes accompanied me from Cincinnati to this meeting. The Lord was with us of a truth. Attended to the ordination of Brs. Daniel and Linthicum for the office of elder. Br. Williams, the superintendent, has been much blessed in his labors, and success has attended him. But he is out of health, and I fear that he may not long be enabled to continue in the field. He tells me that one new society has recently been formed, and he has added 40 or more members, in his circuit since last conference.

On the fourth Sabbath, attended a two days meeting at Ruddell's Mills. Had a season of some interest, and I trust, edification also. The meeting house here has been neatly finished by the two Methodist societies jointly, for their joint use and benefit. Our society here is much reduced by removals and otherwise, but there is yet a remnant. Br. Lamper, the superintendent, is faithful and punctual to his duties, as far as I could learn. At this place, he has had to struggle with peculiar difficulties, which have resulted in the separation of several from the church. With him, I visited and preached for the society on Beaver Creek, which is likewise under his charge, and appears to be in good condition. I rejoice that these brethren have erected a neat house of worship since I used to visit them in 1834. Here, Br. L. has added 10 or 12 members. We next spent a night in Carlisle, c. h. Nicholas Co. A Universalist friend, a member of the bar, kindly entertained us, and made arrangements for a meeting for us in the Presbyterian church.

March 5, I re-crossed the river at Augusta, and soon found myself at Higginsport, 3 miles above. Here we have no society, but our brethren, Dr. Newton, and D. Hannah have recently located themselves in the place. Preached twice here. Spent the first Sunday in March at Hamersville, embraced in Eagle Creek circuit. Old Br. Dobbins was so kind as to meet me here, in view of assisting in the labors of a two or three days meeting. But the superintendent of the circuit was not with us, and no appointment was made but for Sunday. The society here has been much revived and strengthened of late. I understand that Br. Euans is doing well, and has had an encouraging increase of membership since last conference.

Spent the second Sabbath in March, at a two days meeting in Highland circuit, at Mount Olive, Ross county. Two individuals joined society at this meeting. I deem it proper to say that Br. Edwards is well received, and is useful, as far as I could learn. I rejoice that he strives to be faithful in other duties of his calling besides the pulpit service. One thing gratified me much in the quarterly conference transactions. The unstationed brethren, Hughey, Rose, and McGinnis, by request of that body agreed to devote their labors in co-operation with the circuit preacher, so that most of the appointments can be supplied upon the Sabbath. This is, I think, a good idea.

Mr Editor: You may perceive that I have been enabled to accomplish an entire tour of the Ohio District, and have visited some 3 circuits a second time. Thanks be to God, 'who preserveth man and beast,' that he hath sustained his feeble servant through so many perils, and difficulties. Yours, A. H. BASSETT.

Ross Co., O., March 30, 1841.

Br. Springer: By the blessing of Providence we are yet living on Highland circuit. We had a two days meeting on the second Saturday and Sabbath of this month at Mount Olive meeting house. Brs. Bassett, Hughey and Rose were in attendance, who labored faithfully and whose labors were highly appreciated, and I trust will not soon be forgotten; though the weather was unpropitious, yet there was a good state of feelings among us. Religious excitement was not so high among us as what I have seen, yet taking all things into consideration, it was a good meeting. Two united themselves with us in church fellowship, one from the Methodist Episcopal Church and the other from the world. We have had this year some accessions, and expect more. Our congregations generally are respectable; some of our members on this circuit are in the spirit of building meeting houses. Oh, that the spirit might prevail among us all! We now have two meeting houses partly finished, one in the town of Bournville the other at Cove Run. We expect to complete them this summer coming, if it is possible, when these two are completed there will be four meeting houses on Highland circuit. Oh, that God would revive his work abundantly among us. Pray for your young brother who is only in his infancy in the ministry.

Yours, as ever, ISAAC EDWARDS, sup.

PERRYTON, MARCH 29, 1841.

Br. Springer: We held a protracted meeting, on the south east part of this circuit, in Br. J. Vandenbark's neighborhood, commencing on the 13th of this month, which was we think productive of considerable good; a number professed religion and 23 were organized into a class under the Methodist Protestant Discipline. This work was undoubtedly brought about through the instrumentality of the persevering efforts of Brs. J. Vandenbark and David Edwards, who covenanted with each other and with God some time last summer, to hold prayer meetings—and what ever of earth or hell might oppose prays for a revival of God's work until they should see their neighbors (some of them at least) converted to God.

This circuit is thought to be at least in as good condition as it was last fall when I came on to it.—The brethren do undoubtedly love one another, and I believe we are all in peace, at least I have no knowledge of any thing like discord among them. Yours, &c., I. THRAP.

OBITUARY.

DIED—On the 11th inst. BR. EBENEZER SHEPHERD, who has been an acceptable member of the Methodist Protestant Church from its first organization in the West, and for some time previous of the Methodist Episcopal Church; he was esteemed a good citizen, an affectionate husband and kind father. In fact his life, for a number of year past has been a practical demonstration of the truth and excellency of revealed religion. Br. Shepherd enjoyed not only peace but intimate communion with God in his last illness, and finally expired in the full triumph of faith and was no doubt gathered to his Father in Heaven. He has left a pious companion, and several children, with a considerable circle of relations and friends to mourn his loss—but they sorrow not as those that have no hope.

THE EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF PETER ROBINSON THE MURDERER—A PORTION OF HIS LIFE AND CONFESSIONS.

Now that this unhappy creature is condemned to die, the disclosure of whatever facts are known in connection with his history and his crime, cannot by any means be deemed improper.

Peter Robinson is now about 42 years of age, and was born in New Jersey, but raised in Reade street, New York. The old lady by whom he was principally brought up, is still living in this city, and, we believe, in Reade street. Robinson is not a carpenter by trade; but being a man of a very ingenious turn of mind, and skilful at mechanical work, he began to make looking glass frames about fifteen years ago; and since then has worked at all sorts of carpenter and cabinet work.

His mother is dead, but his father is still living in the poor house at New Brunswick. Peter Robinson has two brothers, William and James, both of whom are shoemakers, are married, and have families. William is a shrewd, sharp, and rather queer tempered fellow; but, has always been a hard working, industrious man, and has frequently employed several journeymen at a time. James is a young man, of very weak intellect, and at times appears quite silly, and had the appearance of an idiotic boy when testifying in court.

Peter married a very respectable yeoman's daughter in New Jersey, and she has three or four fine children by him, of whom but one boy, six or eight years old, is now living. He also had a sister, who is dead.

Such are the outlines of Peter and his family connections. Of course, now that he has been convicted of one brutal, cold-blooded, black-hearted murder, there are a thousand stories afloat relative to his former life, conduct and character. Some say he has committed many murders before this one, but for all that is known positively on the subject, perfect silence might as well be observed. And all that we heard speak of him in New Brunswick testified that he had always been a very sober, industrious, hard-working man. There was not a particle of evidence to the contrary produced in Court, and probably none could have been produced.

But still, as we before observed, there were all sorts of stories and rumors afloat relative to his former life. It is said, amongst other things, and believed by a great many, that he has previously murdered his own sister, poisoned two of his children, murdered a pedlar and a carpenter besides, for certain, and probably committed divers other miscellaneous murders. It is certain that last summer two of his children died very suddenly, under very peculiar circumstances, from taking some narcotic, and within a few weeks of each other. Dr. Van Dusen was called in to see one, and found him in the agonies of death, poisoned; and the mother said, the child had been eating the stramonium, or stink weed; it was taken ill in the morning, and died before night. The same was the case with the other child; the eldest was 8 or 9 years old; and the youngest 3 or 4; and Peter had whipped the eldest severely the day it died.

With regard to Peter's sister, the family say that she was known to have some money by her; that she was last seen in Peter's company and house; and that he said she left to go to some service; and that she disappeared from that time, and has never been seen since. And since Peter's arrest for the murder, his father has been to see him, and has said to him, "Now, Peter, did'nt you kill your sister?" which question he would not answer.

The story about the pedlar appears to be this:—Some few years since, a well known pedlar was in the habit of coming to New Brunswick and selling his trinkets around the city; he used to put up and board at various places. At last he took board at Peter's house. He disappeared in a day or two afterwards very suddenly, and has never been heard of from that day; and no inhabitant has ever seen the man alive since. It is also said, that about a week or two after the pedlar disappeared, Peter's wife was seen with his little box, and was selling the trinkets it contained. How true this is, we know not.

There was another mysterious disappearance in New Brunswick a few years since. Peter came home from New York with a carpenter, who was known to have $100 or more in his possession. The carpenter went to board at the house of Peter, and has not been heard of since. At that time Peter had just rented a house for a year; he suddenly moved out of it, and declared he could not live in it; and the persons who moved into it, declared the basement stunk so horribly that they could not use it for a year.

These are a few of the charges that are brought against Peter, either with or without sufficient foundation therefore.

He was never known in New Brunswick to be other than a very poor man. His wife once lived cook with Mr. De Graw, (who keeps the very excellent hotel called the Mansion House) and Peter used to eat and sleep there; whilst there he used to make little toys for Mr. De Graw's children, and do odd jobs about the house; but his avarice was always so great that he would charge four times as much as what he did was worth.

The history of his connection with Mr. Suydam is simply this: Mr. Suydam had been a dry goods merchant in New Brunswick, retired from business with a competency, was seized with the 1835 mania, and became a speculator in lots, an improver of farms, and by a very natural process, the president of any thing but a very sound bank. He bought forty acres of land on the outskirts of New Brunswick, divided it into building lots and was then on the look-out for mechanics and hard-working men, to purchase lots, and build houses thereon. In accordance with this view, he struck a bargain with Peter Robinson, who had a little money, and was a hard-working man. He sold him a lot which it is thought Peter paid for in part, or the whole. He then agreed to advance him the money to build his house as fast as he got each successive story raised; he then took a bond and mortgage on the whole property for the money advanced—got Peter to ensure the house for $1000, and transfer the policy to him, Suydam, and thus effectually secured himself against the possibility of loss by Peter.

As Mr. Suydam was known to be a man who drove a hard bargain, and who, (as the New Brunswickers say) would have his own, & was esteemed avaricious by some; Peter's fellow laborers and brother mechanics were eternally telling him that Mr. Suydam would foreclose his mortgage and finally get all his money, property and labor away from him, and leave him without a cent. Peter had invested every shilling, he had no prospect of being able to pay the interest of the mortgage, $700 or $800, had a note for $75 coming due in Mr Suydam's bank, and then, as he said, he had the horrors; temptation came over him, and to use his own words, he resolved to "fix the old covey off." An infamous story was raised against Mr. Suydam, that he had a letter with him to send to New York, to pay a note; and that he broke open the letter, took out the money, and substituted uncurrent funds for it. This is still asserted by some in New Brunswick, although we believe it to be an infamous falsehood. This, and other stories of the alleged avarice of the unfortunate and enterprising deceased, made Peter, it is alleged, less scrupulous about committing the murder than he otherwise would have been; although he did not want much urging to do it.

Peter has confessed to his counsel Mr. Wood, and to clergymen, that he did not contemplate the murder at first, and that Mr. Suydam had a struggle for the possession of the papers; that Suydam who was a strong muscular, thick set man got the better of him at the onset, and that they both fell; that he (Peter) seized a mallet, and hit Mr. Suydam on the back of the head with it, which stunned, but did not kill him; that he then took from him his watch, his wallet, with a large roll of money in it, the bond, mortgage, policy and note, besides a quantity of valuable papers, such as Camden and Amboy Railroad script, and notes &c., against persons in New York, worth $4000 or $5000. These latter he hid under the floor of the front room on the first floor, near the fireplace, where they were afterwards found by his direction and given up to the talented administrator of Mr. Suydam's estate, Mr. Blauvelt the Corporation Attorney. Peter says, that Suydam then came to his senses, and that he had great difficulty in dragging him down stairs into the front basement That he there tied and bound his half insensible victim, who begged hard for life, and promised to give all that he had taken, and not to punish him. He also says that Mr. S. groaned so horribly that he could not bear to hear him; he therefore gagged his mouth, and left him in that condition, from the Thursday morning, until the following Saturday morning, in a cold cellar on the bare ground in December. That on Saturday he went there early, dug the grave before his still living victim, threw him into it alive, and then struck him over the head with the spade, dashed in his scull, and thus killed him; and that he then covered the corse with earth, and left the place never to return there alone again!!!

All the accounts of the callousnss of the criminal are true. We had the following conversation with him a short time before the verdict was rendered:

Peter.—I see a good many fellows here taking likenesses of me. I should like to get one. I think I ought to have one.

Reporter.—I'll try to get one, Peter.

Peter.—I had a very handsome one, once; I gave $30 for it; it was quite small; and had my wife, myself, and two children on it. But it was stolen from me when I went to jail. I shall never see it again.

Such is the cold-blooded confession of this moral monster, and its details are unparalleled in the annals of cruelty and horror; and had not some officious fool already told this thrilling tale of horror to Mr. Suydam's distressed and amiable widow, we should never have mentioned it here. Mrs. Suydam could have testified to her husband having taken the papers out of his bureau the morning of the murder, and having his watch in his pocket when he left his own house at half-past nine o'clock. She was brought into the Court House one day for that purpose, but was not call on the stand. She was the second wife of Mr. Suydam, who was about 44, and she has four or five beautiful little children by him, the youngest of which was not six weeks old when the murder was committed.

Reporter.—You may.

Peter.—No, I shall be condemned, I suppose; and then there'll be another opportunity for some of you to write books about me; but I think I ought to share the profits.

Reporter.—Yes.

Peter.—If I'm condemned you'll see no difference in me; I shall be just as cheerful as I am now. I may as well be hung for a sheep as a lamb. But there's one good thing, the worst witnesses are past; and all they can say, they can't say one word against my character; they can't say I haven't always been a sober, honest and industrious man.

Reporter.—Ay.

Peter.—But if I had had a good lawyer at first I should have been better off; but my first lawyer came to me in prison, and the first thing he said to me was, "Make your peace with God." What kind of a way was that? Make your peace with God! that was no way for a lawyer to act.

Here the conversation, which is literally true, was broken off by the jailer.—N. Y. Herald.

Another Outrage by a British Cruiser.—The Salem Register informs us that letters have been received from the brig Richmond, Bates, of Salem, which states that this vessel has been overhauled by a British cruiser. The Richmond was on her passage from Salem to St. Helena, and thence to Mozambique; and a few weeks before her arrival at St. Helena, when off the Island of St. Thomas on the coast of Africa, she was brought to by a British brig of war her invoices and other papers were demanded and examined, and she was finally suffered to proceed on her voyage, nothing being found to justify a seizure. This is the fifth Salem vessel that has been searched by English cruisers within a few months.

The city of Paris has at length succeeded in procuring water from an Artesian well, which has for several years been in progress at Grenelle, at an expense of 160,000 francs. The boring instrument, after having reached the enormous depth of 560 meteres, (1837 English feet,) reached the water, which immediately sprang up in abundance to the top of the bore. This operation has resolved a highly interesting geological problem, and proves that a body of water exists under the green chalk strata which forms the bed of the environs of Paris.

Reward for the detection of the Burglars.—The Common Council of Boston have placed at the disposal of the Mayor the sum of $2000, to be by him appropriated in such manner as he may think proper, for detecting and bringing to punishment any or all the persons concerned in the daring burglaries recently committed in that city.

An able Judge once delivered the following charge to the Grand Jury: "Gentlemen of the Jury, in this case the counsel on both sides are unintelligible; the witnesses on both sides are incredible, and the plaintiff and the defendent are both such bad characters, that to me it it is indifferent which way the verdict is given.

Antonio, the only individual on board the Armistad, we believe, who, by universal consent, was a slave, has recently made his escape from New Haven, and some of our contemporaries have chuckled a good deal over the fact. It now appears that Antonio was in charge of the Marshal, who suffered him to be at large on patrol, as it were: but who, now that the negro has escaped, is likely to be held responsible for him?

The Legislature of Illinois adjourned without making any provision for the election of members of Congress, and the State, therefore, will probably be unrepresented in the extra session.

Virginia.—There seems to be a very general expression of disapprobation, throughout the country as well as in Virginia, of the course Ex-Governor Gilmer felt himself called upon to take when just as the Legislature was about to adjourn, he resigned his office of Governor. It is contended that he was wrong in refusing to deliver up to the authorities of New York a fugitive from justice, because the same requisition made upon the Executive of that State by Virginia, had not been complied with; and in support of this view, it is said that "two wrongs cannot make one right." Altho' a matter in which, perhaps, we should have nothing to say, we may be allowed to express our regret that Gov. Gilmer should have felt compelled to resign—either from a sense of dignity or from deference to the Legislature which appointed him, and by its resolution instructed him to pursue a different course from that which he had adopted. We think the question of propriety involved in the ground assumed by the Governor, a very nice one, and one in which all the sisters of our Confederacy are interested; and, without deciding that question of propriety, must confess we should have been pleased had he retained his office, and not have suffered himself to be instructed out by any action of the Legislature, as such, at a time when fifty of its members were not in attendance. In this we are strengthened by an intimation in the Richmond Whig, of which it promises an exposition, that Gov. Gilmer's resignation had been induced by "a low and execrable intrigue"—the Locofocos, who found themselves accidentally in a majority, desired to elect one of their own party in his stead.

After the resignation of Governor Gilmore the duties of that office devolved on Mr. John M. Patten, senior member of the executive Council, during the short remainder of his term of office, who immediately delivered over the individual demanded by the Governor of New York. Col. John Rutherford, a Van Buren man, being the senior member of the Executive Council after the expiration of Mr. Patten's term, is now acting as Governor pro tem.—O. S. Journal.

Religious Intelligence.—We learn that the Rev. Nathan C. Collins has been conducting a protracted meeting, for some weeks past, in the Baptist Church at Washinton, Pa., and that upwards of 30 persons have been added by baptism since the commencement of the meeting.

We are informed that between 30 and 40 persons were added to the New School Presbyterian Church in this vicinity, under the pastoral care of the Rev. S. Montgomery, on Sunday the 28th ult.—Mt. Pleasant Register.

One of the Rascals Arrested.—We learn that one of the rascals who have recently committed so many extensive robberies in Boston, has been arrested. He is an Englishman, had resided at East Boston, and had engaged passage in the Caledonia, which sailed yesterday from Boston for Liverpool. A part of the stolen property was found in his possession.

U. S. Bank.—Thomas Dunlap, Esq. President of the Bank of the United States, resigned that office on Wednesday, and James Lartin, was chosen President pro tem, but declining to accept, Mr. Drayton, of South Carolina, was yesterday elected.

Case of McLeod.—The New Yorker of Saturday, says that the trial of this case has been most unfortunately postponed, by a blunder of the Clerk in neglecting to give proper notice of the drawing of a pannel of jurors. So it goes over for two or three months. Hon. J. J. Crittendon, U. S. Attorney General, who had reached Albany on his way to Lockport to attend this trial on behalf of the United States, halted there on hearing of this mistake, and is now on his return to Washington. Gen. Winfield Scott has pushed on to the frontier.—State Journal.

ACROSTIC.

Weep! weep! for the Chieftian has gone to his home,
Immortal's the halo that hangs o'er his tomb;
Lo! deep in the warm beating bosoms that glow,
Lives the Patriot's name, unsullied as snow.
In perils he shrunk not, but barred his bold breast,
As a rock that yet stands with its billow lashed crest,
'Mid the heaving of ocean, oh! fearless he stood,
High as that rock o'er the dark surging flood.
E'en the foes that assailed him will honor his name,
No son of the free will tarnish his fame;
Record it, ye lovers of freedom and truth,
Ye silver crown'd fathers and hope blooming youth.
Hushed is that voice in silence and night,
And quenched is that eye lately beaming and bright;
Rest, warrior, rest, for thy warfare is o'er,
Rest, statesman, rest, on freedom's own shore;
In the loud acclamations of earth thou did'st share;
So may the patriot band greet thee there,
On the plains that are fadeless, where discord and strife
Never darken or redden the pure streams of life.

Gen. Harrison's Family.—The connections of General Harrison present in the Executive Mansion, at the time of the decease of their beloved relative, were the following.

Mrs. William Harrison, (son's widow.)
Mrs. Taylor, of Richmond, (niece.)
Mr. C. O. Coupland, (nephew.)
Henry Harrison, of Va. (grand-nephew.)
Finlay Harrison, of Ohio (Grandson.)

Singular Coincidence.—It is remarkable that Mr. Tyler, who now becomes President of the United States, should for the third time step into a high public trust by the death of the incumbent. He was made Governor of Virginia by the death of the Governor, he being Senior Councillor—he was made a Senator by the death of one before the time expired—and now he becomes President by the death of the only man under whom he could ever have been elected a Vice President.

The Funeral of the Late President.

In the Washington Globe, of Wednesday we find the following account of the funeral of the late President, William Henry Harrison.

The funeral of President Harrison was conducted with great propriety—with pomp and solemnity. A vast multitude attended. Uniform companies from the cities of Baltimore and Philadelphia, united with those of the District, and these added to several bodies of United States troops drawn in from neighboring posts, made a very imposing military display. Several bands of fine music led different sections of the military array, and with melancholy strains blended the sympathies of the people. The whole procession, including a large concourse of citizens from the neighboring States, filled the Pennsylvania Avenue to a great extent. The houses immediately on the avenue were for the most part hung with black drapery, and the windows were crowded with fair faces. The day was soft and beautiful, enabling the immense throng (a great many of whom were on foot) to attend the remains they honored to the place of sepulture, some two or three miles from the President's mansion. There, the last rites being paid, and the body deposited in the tomb, the scene was closed by the firing of cannon and volleys of small arms. Throughout the day minute guns were fired, and during the procession the bells of the city tolled.

DEATH OF HARRISON.

Waft, waft, ye winds, your rendering tale!
Go, bid the nation weep;
The Chief beloved, so lately crowned
With Freedom's honors, now lies bound
In Death's unconscious sleep!

The warrior-heart, in days of dread,
That felt the startling thrill—
That bounded when the battle's fires
Flashed o'er Columbia's freedom spires,
Is pulseless now, and still!

In war he won—in peace he wore,
Fame's rich, undying wreath;
But ah! that loved, that lofty brow,
Is wearing in its paleness now
The diadem of death!

Waft, waft, ye winds, with mournful speed!
Haste with your tale of woe!
Tell hearts now beating high for fame,
That like the soul, a deathless name
Alone survives the tomb!

AN ACT

To amend the act entitled "An act for the prevention of certain immoral practices," passed February 17, 1831.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That no person shall keep any shop, booth, tent, wagon or other carriage, vessel or boat, for the sale of spiritous or other liquors or any provisions, or other articles of traffic, whatever, or sell or expose to sale, give, barter or otherwise dispose of in or near such shop, booth, tent, wagon, or other carriage, vessel or boat, or in any other way or place, any spiritous or other liquors or any provisions or other articles of traffic, whatever, at, or within the distance of two miles from the place where any religious society, or people are collected or collecting together for religious worship, in any field or woodland; Provided, that nothing in this act, shall effect tavern keepers, exercising their calling, at the places named in their licenses, nor distillers or manufacturers or others in the prosecution of their ordinary calling or business from vending or exposing to sale the articles above forbidden, at their usual places of vending the same, or at their residences; nor any person who shall have a written permit from the person or persons having the oversight, charge or management of such religious society, to sell bread or other provisions, for the supply of persons attending such religious worship, their horses or cattle, such persons conforming to the legal regulations of said religious assembly, and to the laws of the State.

Sec. 2. That any person who shall be guilty of a breach of this act shall be notified by any one of the officers hereby authorized to make an arrest, or seizure, or by any other person, that he, she or they are violating the law, and if after such notice, such person shall continue in such violation he, she or they shall forfeit and pay for every such offence, a fine of not more than five nor less than fifty dollars, to the township where such offence shall have been committed for the use of common schools in such township; and any judge of cout of Common Pleas, sheriff, coroner or justice of the peace, of the proper county, or any constable of the proper township, shall, upon view or information, and without warrant, apprehend any person so offending, and seize such booth, tent, wagon or other carriage, vessel or boat, spiritous or other liquors, and other articles of traffic, and convey the same to a place of safe keeping, and take the said person so offending before the next justice of the peace, together with an inventory of the things so seized; and the said justice of the peace, upon complaint on oath or affirmation of the officer, or one of the freeholders apprehending such offender, shall issue his warrant, which the said officer, or one of the freeholders aforesaid, or any constable, of the proper township shall have authority to serve and cause the said offender to be arrested and proceed forthwith to inquire into the truth of the requisition, and if found true, shall enforce the penalty of this act.

Sec. 3. If the accused shall fail to pay such fine as said justice of the peace shall inflict, together with all costs of the proceedings, including the necessary expense of such seizure, the said justice of the peace shall forthwith issue a renditioni exponas commanding any constable of the township in which such inquiry shall be had, to make the said fines and costs, necessary expenses and costs of execution, by sale of so many of the things so seized, as shall be necessary therefor, and make return thereof in ten days thereafter.

Sec. 4. That in the execution of said venditioni exponas, said constable, at least ten days before the sale, and shall advertise the things so to be sold at two of the most public places in the township where the same is to be sold; at one of which places to be designated in the notice, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and four P. M., said sale shall be held; said constable first selling or offering for sale, the articles which the offender brought on the ground for traffic; and the overplus of the things so seized, as aforesaid, after the satisfaction of said venditioni exponas, shall be delivered to the defendant on demand; but if he shall fail to demand the same for ten days after such sale, the same shall become forfeited to said township; and if the said things so seized, shall be found insufficient to satisfy said venditioni exponas and costs of execution, said justice of the peace shall at any time thereafter, on request of the Treasurer of said township, issue a fieri facias, to collect the balance thereof.

Sec. 5. That in any action against any person, for doing, or causing to be done, any thing in pursuance of this act, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence thereunder, and if in said action judgment shall be given for the defendant, or the plantiff shall become non suit, or discontinue his action, the defendant shall recover double costs of suit.

Sec. 6. That the 10th section of the act to which this is an amendment, be and the same is hereby repealed,

Seabury Ford,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
William McLaughlin,
Speaker of the Senate.

March 26, 1841.

Secretary of State's Office,
Columbus, Ohio, April 5, 1841.

I certify the foregoing act to be a true copy from the original roll on file in this department.

Divorce.—The Virginia House of Delegates, moved by the extraordinary number of applications for divorce brought before it, have passed a bill on the subject, giving to the Circuit Superior Court the decision in the case, under the provisions of the bill of which the following is a part:—

"And be it further enacted, That after the lapse of seven years from the rendition of any decree of divorce a mensa et thoro, the same shall operate for the party applying for and obtaining it as a decree of divorce a vinculo matrimonii, and it shall be lawful for such party to marry again."

Progress of the Mormons.—The disciples of Jo Smith have recently obtained three charters from the Legislature of Illinois; one incorporating the city of Nauvoo; another, a great University, and the third a Nauvoo Military Legion. They do not intend to be driven out of Illinois as they were from Missouri. They have commenced operations under their city charter. Dr. Bennett, Quarter Master General of Illinois, through the appointment of Gov. Carlin, being their Mayor.

The College of Pruntytown, Va., will close its third session on the 15th April. On the 14th and 15th days an Examination of the students takes place. We are gratified to learn that the institution is flourishing, and that the examination will be one of the most interesting character. It being the only institution of the kind in the county, the people will doubtless be pleased to witness its success.—Harrison Whig.

Blowing Up.—Last week, a son of the Emerald Isle left Dayton, in a wagon by the Union road. He had a fur cap on his head, and in the cap a half pound of powder done up in a paper.—He lighted his pipe on the commencement of his journey and smoked along the road, until he was satisfied with the recreation, when he pulled off his cap and having deposited the pipe along with the powder, replaced it upon his head. In a few minutes the powder exploded, blew off the cap, singed nearly all the hair off his head, and burned his forehead and cheeks most wofully.—Dayton Jour.

Another Steamer Lost.—By the last Red River Republican we learn that the steamboat Mariner recently struck a snag and sunk near Pecan Point on Red River. The Mariner has been running during the season on the river above, bringing cotton to the raft. She had on board about 200 bales of cotton which will be saved. The boat is a total loss.

McLeod Case.—We understand from very good authority that Mr. Webster is of the opinion that a plea to the jurisdiction in this case will be perfectly valid and relieve the question from all its embarrassments. The object of Mr. Crittenden's proposed journey to Lockport was to sustain this plea.

United States and Great Britain.—The Madisonian states that the despatches received by our Government by the Caledonia from Great Britain, are of entirely a pacific character, and although there had been some excitement in England on account of the arrest of McLeod, yet the public mind was becoming more quiet.

The Sentinel, published at Centerville, in Queen Ann's County, Md. says—

There is great mortality among the stock in this country. Some farmers have lost nearly all their sheep and cattle. This is attributed to the severity of the weather, snow and rain having fallen with but little intermission for several weeks.

The Mahogany Saw Mill belonging to the Messrs. Cutter, in Woburn, Mass., was entirely destroyed by fire on Sunday morning the 21st ult. The loss is estimated at $16,000, seven thousand of which were insured.

The Lost Mails Found.—The last Augusta (Geo.) Chronicle says:—By a gentleman who arrived in the cars yesterday from the West, we learn that the Mails, which were lost in the Ocmulgee, have been recovered from an Island in the river, on which they had floated.

Virginia.—The Legislature of this State has adjourned without going into a choice of Governor. The State is therefore without an executive and must remain so till the next session of the Legislature.

Illinois is thirteen millions in debt, without a foot of railroad or canal, in practical operation.

New Trade.—A vessel, destined for Mobile, is now taking in a cargo of ice at Bordentown. This we believe is the first freight of the kind shipped coastwise from the Delaware.

THE RECORDE

ZANESVILLE.

WEDNESDAY, ... APRIL 14,

Death of Pres't. Harris

This solemn event is announced in an Globe, with the following suitable and i sive language:

Office of the Globe
April 4, two o'clock, A. M.

DEATH OF THE PRESIDENT.

It is with deep regret we announce that LIAM HENRY HARRISON is no more. died at thirty minutes before one o'cloc morning. His disease was pleurisy, compli with disordered liver and bowls, and from th bore a serious aspect. All the efforts of th medical skill and most unremitted attention unavailing.

In announcing this melancholy event, al er reflections are absorbed in the thought nothingness of life, the emptiness of earthly deur. One brief month has witnessed his a to the summit of human ambition—and hi sage to the tomb. "What shadows we are what shadows we pursue!"

We cannot but regard this event as a national calamity. Apart from his politica timents, we believe the deceased was as hon politician as the nation affords; and wheth political opinions, in the abstract, were c or not, he was at heart a real patriot.—Th lowing article from the constitution, direct the government of the nation is to proce such an event:

§ 6. In the case of the removal of the Pres from office, or of his death, resignation, o bility to discharge the powers and duties o said office, the same shall devolve on the President; and the Congress may by law pr for the case of removal, death, resignation, ability, both of the President and Vice P dent, declaring what officer shall then a President, and such officer shall act accordi until the disability be removed or a Presi shall be elected.

The following, which we take from the I delphia Chronicle, will anticipate many qu which will naturally arise in the minds of readers as growing out of this unexpected e

The Consequences.—The intelligence o death of the patriotic Harrison, struck t very heart of our community, yesterday.—I face wore an expression of gloom. The st and public places were crowded with ous and melancholy groups, and all pa sects and classes, united in sincere and hear mourning. We noted with melancholy gu cation, the high-minded and patriotic test nials of regret made by the late political o nents of the President; all the Democratic Buren Head Quarters, displayed flags at mast, mantled with crape, and the Democ Journals, with one regretted exception, appe in mourning. The Ledger, though affectin be neutral, did not unite in the general dej stration, and awarded but one-fourth the or ry mark of respect. All the Courts closed. uy of the stores and public offices were shut, throughout the day the city wore an air of deepest gloom.

In addition to this sentiment of sorrow, n fears were excited by this unexpected chang the government of the country. Mr. Vice P ident Tyler is, in comparison with the illustr deceased, partially unknown, and what is kno tended still further to heighten the general iety. He is represented as a member of the web and transcendental school of Virginia ties—a red-hot nullifier—a dreamy visionar wild and ungoverned theorist. All prospect tariff was abandoned in the general panic, it was set down as decreed, that the measur redress so confidently promised, and so anxio expected, were by the act of Providence in nitely postponed. The friends of the late ministration, on the contrary, while they sinc ly deplored the loss of a patriot to the coun calculated with some confidence, that an a Bank and anti-Tariff-man, could not post unite in principles with Harrison's adminis tion, and predicted with confidence the spe dissolution of the present cabinet.

We are disposed to believe that both par are greatly in error. Mr. Tyler, is on all si admitted to be a high-minded, honorable honest man. It is true that he does not a in all things, nay in most things, with Mr. W ster's political opinions; but on all the g principles of the recent political movement believed that they have a perfect understand They served a long time in the Senate toge and were and are personal friends. Besi Mr. Webster's concessions to Southern trines, made in Virginia during the last c paign, brought him much nearer Mr. Ty even on the points most warmly contested fore. We are therefore of opinion that collision is to be expected. But we have o and stronger grounds for belief. Mr. Tyle not so far above human nature as to be inac sible to hope or fear. If he has a hope, it m be to satisfy his country—a large majority whom established the administration of wh he is the executive, rather than the successor he is capable of fear he will not disregard danger of defying in his present accidental p tion, the largest majority ever given in a country. We have still another reason for belief. If Mr. Tyler be, as we grant he i Virginian in his political creed, his first arti teaches submission to instruction. He can mistake the voice of the last election, if he c not conscientiously obey it, he will resign.

But Mr. Tyler is no ultraist. We know h to be a cool headed, conscientious man. will not dissolve the Cabinet—he will thwart the majority. He will read his instr tions in Harrison's Inaugural, and, regard them as the voice of the people, through an h ored and now a sainted representative, he w obey them.

Mr. Tyler's term will extend under the Co stitution, throughout the whole term for wh General Harrison was elected—that is, for f years from the fourth of last March. Dur this time, the President of the Senate, who w be elected by that body will perform the du before incumbent upon the Vice President. Should Vice President Tyler die, the Preside of the Senate would act as President of t Union; and should he die the Speaker of t House. But in case of the death of the V President, an act of Congress passed on t first of March, 1792, provides for the spe election of a President. Mr. Tyler, though assumes the office of President, does not take title; he is still the Vice President acting as President.

…EMPERANCE MOVEMENTS IN THE CITY.—The …ase question is moving with a strong impulse …reat mass of mind in this city. We have not …n able to tend but few of many public meet…s which have been held on this subject. Some …ave attended, and from the report of those …attended others, we gather the following out…s of the arguments and views of the parties as …ented by public speakers at those meetings. …. The anti-license men among other things …d that the vending of ardent spirit does lim…ase evil, both in a civil and moral point of …w, and that it does no good to counterbalance …evil, and that therefore there can be no good …on urged why an acknowledged evil should be …rated in the community. They place drink…houses in the same catalogue of evils with …bling houses. And if there be any difference …think that gaming houses is the lesser evil.— …the gaming house property is sacrificed—wives …children bereaved of home and happiness— …individuals led to commit suicide. In the …oking house all this is done, but the evil charge…e to drinking compared with that of gambling …ses is ten to one.

…The anti-license men say further, that the or…rance refusing licenses to coffee-houses has …n beneficial, and that it is but carrying out a …orm successfully commenced, to withdraw li…ses from those who sell spirits in taverns.— …e bar, say they, is no necessary part of a good …ern. …CAUSE OF THE WALLS OF HOUSES SPREADING …TWARD.—This is usually caused by inatten…n to the foundation. The common practice …to lay the outside to a line, just the width …the building, but to let the inside extend in…rd past the width of the wall up to the first …sts. The inside of the foundation being pro…eted from the wet the ground remains dry and …n, whereas, the outside becomes softened by …e rains, and unless the earth is very solid it …ll yield to the pressure of the stone upon it, …hich causes the wall to lean outward. …THE WEATHER.—It still continues wet. We …ad quite … snow storm on Saturday; Sunday …was … beautiful day, the snow all went off and …the ground was drying fine, but Monday while we …write it is snowing again. But little ploughing …done yet. The farmers are much behind with …their spring work. Oats should be now in the …ground, yet there has not been seasonable weath…er to get it in. Indeed, we do not know of a …single furrow drawn, in this neighborhood, for that …purpose.

COMMERCIAL JOURNAL.—On our last page will …be found the terms of the "Baltimore Weekly …Commercial Journal and Lyford's Price Current." …This is the most thorough commercial paper we …have any knowledge of, and is worthy the patron…age of commercial men,—especially in the west. …It is very useful to us in giving our prices current, …and its weekly visits are as regular as any of our …exchanges.

The following from the Boston Times, Extra, gives an account of the recovery of the property stolen from the store of Davis, Palmer & Co. of Boston:

This morning about 9 o'clock a man went into the Express Office of Mr. Harnden, on Court st., and asked him how much he would charge him for carrying a box of two hundred pounds, to New York. Mr. H. told him two dollars, at the same time eyeing the man closely. He observed that he was the same person he had seen before in the office, and had done business of this kind for; and the same man he had suspected for … long time and had given Davis, Palmer & Co., notice of it, but the night before

Mr. H. was so struck with the conviction that he was the bugglar of that store that he sent a person immediately for Mr. Clapp, who came in before the man got out of the office. Soon after Mr. Clapp came in the man went out, and Mr. Clapp followed him. He walked leisurely along looking at the pictures in the windows, and Mr. Clapp keeping close by his side. Mr. C. finally tapped him on his shoulder and told him he wanted to speak to him a moment, and asked him if he would walk with him to his office; to which proposition he assented apparently with cheerfulness, the blood, however, rushing into his face. They went into Mr. Clapp's office and sat down. Mr. C. told him not to be uneasy or afraid as he did not intend to hurt him. He then told him he had several charges against him, and should be obliged to hold him on suspicion. He then asked him if he had the $4,000 which was taken from Messrs. Gilbert's Exchange Office. He denied that he knew any thing about it. He then asked him where he lived, and if he did not live on the corner of Cambridge and Belknap street, over a painter's shop. He said he did. Nothing further was asked that resulted in any good, and he was taken to jail.

Mr. Clapp then got the key of his room and went to the place, corner of Belknap and Cambridge street, and searched it. Nothing was found except a key that just fitted Davis, Palmer & Co's Store. A fire was in the room, and the man had lodged there the night before. He gave his name to officer Clapp as Williamson.

Mr. Clapp has mistrusted this house before, and on Tuesday last visited it, having heard that the men occupying the room had left. He ascertained they had gone to East Boston.

Having now arrested one of the occupants of this room, he took Mr. Davis and went to East Boston, and made search in the house stated to be the one they lived in. No discovery, however, was made.

They returned to the city, and Mr. Clapp went to the jail to endeavor to learn something from the prisoner. He first said to him, 'I want you to give up the property belonging to Messrs Davis, Palmer & Co.' He was silent for a moment, and then said, 'I know nothing about it.' Mr. Clapp charged him with the robbery, and said he should keep him and have him examined. Williamson said he did not care, he could prove nothing against him.

He might keep him for a while, but he should get clear eventually. Mr. Clapp said he would make a bargain with him to deliver up the goods. The prisoner asked him what he had to say. Well suppose … case, said he, suppose you should give me the property and I let you go. Well, said he, supposing I do.

Mr. Clapp now knew that the property was in his possession, and reflected well before he made the bargain with him to restore it. He had not a particle of evidence that he was the robber; had found no property in his possession; could not hold him but twenty-four hours on suspicion, and other circumstances weighed in his mind, and he determined to let him go if he would take him to the place where the property was, and restore it.

Before making the conditions, however, he questioned him closely as to his accomplices, and offered him half the reward if he would give him the information. He refused positively revealing the names of them.

Mr. Clapp then told him to go with him and give up the property, and he would let him go.—He told Mr. C. to call a carriage, which he did, and they drove to a new house in Brighton street, where they entered a small room, and the whole cargo of jewelry was in full view. The trunks, with every article, as far as is yet ascertained, were there, and delivered over to Mr. Clapp.

A bag containing about 200 keys, and other implements for entering buildings, such as bits, chissels, files, stocks for false contrived circular saws, a host of skeleton keys, and various other implements, was also found in his room, and which he begged lustily for Mr. Clapp not to take. Mr. C. replied that the law required it, and he took them away, together with the goods to his own house, and then let the robber go.

He went to the Providence Depot, where at … o'clock in the afternoon he was seen by Mr. Harnden, and pointed out to an officer who arrested him, and brought him back again to the house of Mr. Clapp, supposing he had escaped from his custody. Learning, however, the true state of the case he again released him, and he is now at large.

REVIVAL.—A letter from the Rev. E. Weed of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, to the Cincinnati Watchman, describes a protracted meeting, in that place, of four weeks duration, commencing on the last Sabbath in October past, at which 150 professed conversion and 70 were added to the church under his care—Presbyterian. We know how to appreciate the correctness of his description of the work of grace in Mt. Vernon. When we visited that place in the latter part of the winter to attend a quarterly meeting in the Methodist Protestant Church, there seemed to be a heavenly atmosphere surrounding the place.—This church had been much built up during the winter.

CINCINNATI ELECTIONS.—The last Watchman says the temperance folks lost the election; the candidates in favor of granting license to tavern keepers to retail spirits, succeeded in six wards out of seven. We hope the friends of temperance will not be deterred by this defeat, but will recollect the scripture promise, "be not weary in well doing, for in due time you shall reap if you faint not." The practice of retailing liquors in taverns is … curse to the country and ought to be suppressed.

FEMALE SEMINARY.—See, in another column, the advertisement of the "Putnam Female Seminary." This is … splendid edifice, in a healthy situation; and we presume the minds and moral habits of the students will receive as much attention, there, as at any Institution of the kind in the country.

PLOUGHS.—We refer the reader to the advertisement of the Putnam Foundry on the last page. The best metal plough that we have ever tried was procured at that establishment. Mr. Anderson, the principal, is very accommodating, and usually gives purchasers an opportunity to test the quality of his implements, if they choose.

☞Rev. Luther Lee, of the New England Christian Advocate, continues to use up Doctor Bond, of the New York Christian Advocate.—There will not be much of the Doctor left after a little, save his Jesuitism.

We see, from the papers, that all parties and classes of men, through the country, are manifesting suitable signs of regret at the unexpected death of our late Chief Magistrate. May this severe providence tend to teach the nation to put their trust in God.

We have sent a list of dues, embracing the principal part of what is owing to us within the bounds of the Ohio Conference to Br. Bassett.—Our subscribers will please hand over to him, or to any of the itinerant preachers. Or almost any post master would remit for them if asked.

☞Walter Forward, who was appointed by the President Attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania, having declined accepting the office, Cornelius Darrah is appointed in his stead.

DARING ROBBERY.—The jewelry store of Davis Palmer & Co., of Boston, was recently robbed between seven and half past nine in the evening, of ten thousand dollars worth of property.

☞We give in to-day's paper the law for the protection of religious worship, as it ultimately passed the legislature. It will probably answer the purpose of its enactment.

REMOVAL.—The "Gospel Publisher" is removed from Harrisburgh, Pa., to Shiremanstown, Cumberland county.

PHILADELPHIA DAILY CHRONICLE.—The editor states their average daily issue to be 23 or 24,000.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: I have interested myself, recently, in ascertaining the places of nativity and ages of our itinerant ministers and preachers in the conferences with which I have had intercourse. Below you have the result of my inquiries. The list embraces, with very few exceptions, all in the Ohio and Indiana Conferences. As it may be of interest to some of your readers, if not also to yourself, please give it an insertion in the Recorder. Y'rs,

A. H. BASSETT.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the New York Sun, of April 4.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP BRITISH QUEEN.

LATE AND HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM EUROPE.

Great excitement in relation to the McLeod Affair—Naval and Military preparations against the United States—Fierce for war—Panic produced by the news taken out by the George Washington, in relation to the Bank of the United States—Late news from China, India and Egypt by extraordinary express.

The British Queen, for which public expectation had been excited for a week past, arrived at quarantine about three o'clock this morning, bringing us our full London and Liverpool files, and interesting letters from our correspondents to the day of sailing, 10th of March.

The Queen experienced a very rough and disagreeable passage, and on the 30th ult. having then been out 20 days, found herself obliged to put into Halifax for fuel. She left Halifax on the 1st, and made the passage to this port in three days.

The news she brings is of the most intense interest, and we hasten to lay it before an anxiously expecting public.

The people of England appears to have been panic struck at the intelligence which reached that country by the packets Geo. Washington, United States and Westchester, from New York. The first named vessel took out the news of the stoppage of the United States Bank—the second that of the indictment of McLeod, and the Westchester, Mr. Picken's Report in Congress on the McLeod affair. These three causes combined, created a sudden panic among all classes of persons, and the Funds at the Stock Exchange were materially lowered in consequence.

We find it utterly impossible in our limited space, to give at this moment even a synopsis of the comments of the press upon this intelligence, but upon Mr. Pickens' Report, which seems to have created the greatest shock, the Globe says:—"The painful effect which this intemperate 'party document' must otherwise produce on the strongly cherished hopes of the people of this country, of an amicable adjustment of the dispute, will be much relieved by the tone of the principal speakers in the debate which ensued on the question of printing the report.

"We see nothing in this manifesto of empty and unreasonable denunciations, qualified as they are by the strong expressions of dissent and reprobation with which it was received, to shake our belief that peace will be preserved."

The Morning Chronicle of the 9th says:—The publication of this report created considerable uneasiness. In this feeling, we confess, we do not altogether participate. The very men who drew up this document—it is plain upon the face of it—must have felt they were putting their names to a case upon which no nation would venture to enter upon hostilities. The language of men who either were convinced that they had a good cause, or were determined to go to extremities in a bad one.

The Times says:—We shall not quote from this offensive and unjust tirade, but we earnestly invoke our readers to study it in extenso for themselves, and then judge themselves what chance exists of fair or just treatment for Great Britian from those authorities with which such a catalogue of insults could have originated.

If the Harrison Government be, as we believe it will be, against the report, is there not ground to fear that they may be too feeble to resist the war faction?

From the money articles in the same papers, we find that this American news caused a panic in the markets.

The Dispatch says, "the stoppage of the U. S. Bank will cause a great deal of misery here as well as in America. Shares which brought two years ago, £24, are now anxiously sold at £14 10s."

The Morning Herald says, "the financial and political news from New York produced a considerable impression on the Stock market, but the depth of this impression would be ill measured by the actual decline merely in quotations of stocks. for it must be remembered that the funds were on the rise, and with a firm tendency to a greater rise still.

The Globe of the 8th says:—The arrival of the West Chester from New York, whence she sailed on the 19th February, brings certain information that the Congress of the United States, by the large majority of 103 against 68, had voted in favor of the report on the McLeod affair, which was calculated to excite hostilities with England. The subject being thus taken up by Congress, the government must of course act in conformity with the will of the majority, and therefore the chance of seeing acts of the inferior jurisdiction of the State of New York overruled by the General Government no longer exists. It makes the danger of collision more imminent than it was before. Our citizens, viewing it in this light, have shown a much greater degree of alarm regarding the question this morning, than they did on the receipt of the previous communication; and stocks fell 3-8 or 1-2 per cent. immediately after opening business.

CITY, 12 O'CLOCK.—The effect of the unfavorable news received yesterday from America is wearing off here; but we perceive that it is viewed in a serious light in Lancashire, where people have begun to purchase cotton largely, under the impression that some interruption to the trade with America may possibly take place and that article has consequently advanced in price.

TWO O'CLOCK.—Consols for money had reached 88 3-8 but they have again fallen to 88 1-8 to 1-4 and for account 88 1-2 to 3-8 new 3 1-2 per cents. 96 7-8 to 99 and Exchequer Bills 7s to 9s premium.—Globe of 9th. P. M.

In the house of Lords on the evening of the 8th, reference to the Congress report, its effect upon the funds, &c, was made by the Earl of Montchasel, who felt disposed to doubt the authority of the document, and appeared to suspect that it had been got up for stock-jobbing purposes. He thought that, if genuine, a document more violent had never been penned by one country respecting another, and he put the questions to Lord Melbourne whether her Majesty's government considered the document genuine or not, and whether any official information had been received on the subject.

Lord Melborne replied that he was not able to answer these questions, but apprehended that no doubt could be entertained of the authenticity of the documeut.

Most Important Intelligence.---A Squadron ordered to America!—The Times and other paper states as a positive fact that some part of the squadron, believed to consist of ten sail of the line, which had been engaged on the coast of Syria, had been suddenly ordered off the coast of America, to support the remonstrance of the British Minister, Mr. Fox, against the "judicial murder of McLeod."

Infantry for Halifax.—The Times also states that "three battalions had been put suddenly under orders for Halifax," and adds, "God knows how the home service of the realm could be furnished after their departure."

The Atlas says, "War with America must and will as surely follow upon the murder of M'Leod, as the light of the morning follows the darkness of night; but then this war will be a war without any definite object, except revenge for an injury which cannot be atoned."

We cannot occupy any more space with this exciting subject at this time, but we promise to refer to it again hereafter.

The news from the Continent we find of very little interest.

In France every thing is as quiet as at our former dates.

Turkey, Egypt and Syria.—The Austrian Observer of the 28th ult., states that "Intelligence from Constantinople of the 15th ult., informs us, that the Sultan's firman granting to Mehemit Ali and his family the Pashalic of Egypt herditarily, had just been prepared.

The firmans had been forwarded to Alexandria on the 14th ult. The first contained the order to invest Mehemet Ali with the Pashalic of Egypt, as likewise the rules and regulations to which the Pashas of Egypt are to be subjected. The second firman invites Mehemit Ali to send the arrears of tribute due for Arabia, Candia, and Syria to Constantinople. The third firma places the provinces of Sennar, Nubia and Ethiopia, provisionally under the orders of the "Governor" of Egypt.

China, India and Egypt.—By an extraordinary express form Marseilles, in anticipation of the overland mail from India, late intelligence from China, from the several presidencies of India, from Alexandria, and from most of the ports in the Mediterranean, was received in London on the morning of the 10th, and was brought by express to Liverpool by our agent at London, in season to be despatched by the British Queen.

The great object of interest in the intelligence received by this express is, the state of the British relations with the Chinese Government. The negociations up to the 18th of December, which is the latest date of the news from Macao, appear to have produced nothing, for the Chinese seem desirous of shuffling and delay.

On the 6th of November, Admiral Elliott issued a notice at Chusan to the British there, stating that a truce had been concluded with the Chinese, binding them within certain limits, the British boundaries being Chusan and the small islands adjacent. This notice was accompanied with a recommendation to endeavor to conciliate the Chinese. The other Plenipotentiary, Captain Elliott, issued a circular, declaring that the interests of the British at Chusan should be attended to during the negotiations. In the mean time, a dreadful mortality diminished the troops there.

The Admiral, with a considerable portion of the squadron, arrived on the 20th of November at Tongkoo. On the 21st Captain Elliott proceeded in the Queen steamer towards the Bogue forts, in order to deliver a letter for Kesben. A boat was sent off with a flag of truce flying, but it was fired at by the Chinese from the fort. The boat returned, and several shots were fired at the steamer, one of which struck her. Two shells were thrown into the fort from the steamer, which then rejoined the squadron.

Captain Elliott went subsequently to Macao and by some secret means contrived to send the letter. An apology was demanded for the insult to the flag of truce which after some delay, was assented to by Keshen.

On the 26th of November preparations were made for an attack on Bogue forts, as Keshen was suspected of producing unnecessary delay. He, however, made his public entry in Canton, having taken care to give previous notice of his arrival to the Admiral. On the 29th of November, the Admiral, on the ground of serious indispostion from palpitation of the heart, resigned the command of the expedition to Com. Sir J. J. Gordon Bremer, and sailed for England on board the Volage.

The proceedings at Canton have since been strange. Keshen, on the ground that the people were opposed to his going to communicate in person with the barbarians, he is said to have declared that he had no interview with them at Peiho, and sent two subordinate mandarins to confer with Captain Elliott.—Some efforts were made to liberate Mr. Staunton which were successful. Nothing is known of the other prisoners.

Threats it is said have been used by the commodore, whose nomination has been hailed by all the British at Macao, that unless Keshen would begin the negociations in reality, recourse would be had to hostilities. The 14th and 17th of December has been named as days of attack; but on the 13th Captain Elliott went to Macao, and told the merchants that the negociations were still open.—Great anxiety is felt at Bombay about the results, for while some pretended that Keshen is sincere in his efforts to make peace, others denied the fact, and stated that hostilities would become imperative. A few days would decide.

The merchants of Bombay have addressed petitions on the subject to both Houses of Parliament.

Tranquility prevailed in India, and the intelligence by the express brought nothing of importance from any of the presidencies.

The commander-in-chief of the Madras army, Sir S. F. Whittingham, died of apoplexy, on the 16th ult. He has been succeeded ad interim, by Major General Allen, during the absence of Sir Robert Dick, the senior officer.—Great apprehension prevails respecting the Golconde transport, which took soldiers from China to Madras in September; and has not been heard of since she passed Singapore.

In the month of November, Sir Lionel Smith, the Governor of the Mauritus, found himself obliged, from the conduct adopted by the French Governor of Bourbon, to issue a proclamation, ordering all the French aliens to prepare to leave that colony until the question of peace or war be decided.

The French frigate Magicienne was lost near Palvoan on the 27th of Nov.—The crew was saved by two English vessels.

12½ O'CLOCK. London, March, 10.—The greatest excitement prevails in the city, occasioned by the promulgation of the news by the overland mail from India and China. Tea has suddenly risen in price, and the stock market is very much depressed, and exhibits a downward tendency.

NINE DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

The steam ship Acadia (says the Philadelphia Chronicle, of the 9th inst.,) reached Boston on Tuesday, after a passage of 18 days. She does not bring much news of interest. The following are a few of the particulars:

The Oxford University is in a great state of excitement, respecting the publication of the Oxford tracts, two parties having sprung up in reference to their utility and necessity.

The celebrated college of Eton, which contains about 600 students, sons of noblemen and gentlemen of affluence, has been visited with a serious epidemic. A few deaths had occurred, and the greater part of the youths had been removed from college by their parents.

The miners engaged in sinking a shaft near Paticroft, have at length found a vein of coal at the extraordinary depth of 1350 feet from the surface of the earth.

Tea was high and still rising. Nothing later from China.

The General Kyd, Indiaman, sailed on the 17th from Gravesend, with 400 troops for India.

A new mode of binding, whereby stability is said to be given to account books of the largest size, has been introduced into the Bank of England. It is the invention of Mr. Morrison, the patentee of the ophinine process of printing.

The Marquise de St. Cyr, whose husband died in the service of Charles X,, was found dead in her hotel at Cherbourg on the 30th of February, having hung herself in a fit of insanity.

The boy Jones, has been a third time arrested in Buckingham Palace. The London Standard says, a most rigid investigation as to the manner in which he had three times effected an entrance into the palace, is about to take place. In addition to a sentence of imprisonment for three months, the punishment of hard labor is added. The boy persists in his first assertion, that his only motive was to hear the conversation at Court, and to write an account of it. He had been liberated from prison just two weeks at the time he was arrested.

Warlike Preparations in England.—We find the following statements in all the London Journals:—"We have this day learnt that our government, in order to prepare for any emergency that may spring out of the case of McLeod, (and if the Republic execute him we do not think there is a man in this United Kingdom but will demand justice) have directed six regiments to hold themselves in readiness to embark for North America—two of which are the 19th and 44th, are now in Ireland. It is also stated in private letters from the first circles in Paris, that Lord Granville officially announced to M. Guizot that the English Government find it necessary to send ten sail of the line to the same quarter." Of course a fleet of steamers will form a part of such an expedition.

STATE CONVENTION OF BUSINESS MEN.—It is strongly recommended by several Journals of the State that a convention of business men be called on the 25th of May, at Harrisburg, to take into consideration the situation of our State affairs.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

For the Western Recorder.

ACROSTIC.

Ever, dear MOTHER, shall thy lovely name
Live in my mind; and on my heart, a flame
Immortal of pure love enkindle, and inspire
Zeal for God, and virtue's ways, purer and higher,
And more refined than ought that heathen sages
Buried in the mists of darker ages
Ever taught:—If the philosophic Greek,—
The honest orator of Rome could speak,
He'd give the preference to the holy meek.

Dear MOTHER, what exquisite melody
Arises from the mention of thy name!
Liveliest and sweetest notes of minstrelsy
Blended therewith, dwindle into shame.
Endowed with all thy virtues, may I be seen
Yielding fruit unto holiness in peace serene.

ADIEU TO A BROTHER BOUND WEST.

Away! away! to the far, far west,
Where the summer's suns on the ocean rest;
Away! away! from each troublesome scene,
Never, never, perhaps to see it again.
Away! away! to some sunny green,
Where prairies bright and broad are seen,
And flocks that o'er its surface glide,
And sport and play like a rolling tide.
Away! away! where e'er you roam,
May you find the pleasing joys of home,
And to all the cares that come your way,
May you still exclaim away! away!
Away! away! each zephyr breathes,
As it passes through the waving trees;
And each thing in nature seems to say,
Away, frail man, away! away!

J. M. FULTON.

THE DYING DRUNKARD.

His wife and two little helpless infants were standing by his bed side, she gazing with tearful eyes on his pale, emaciated countenance, while her little ones clung around her knees crying for food. Alas! to what an awful standing he had brought himself and family! he was once happy. ay, if ever man was happy, held a character and reputation unsullied and pure as the virgin snow, was looked upon by all who knew him with the deepest mark of attention and respect. Where are all these qualities now? Fled! buried in the depths of oblivion. He became a lover of his glass, gradually got acquainted with loose dissipated company, and from thence steered direct for destruction and ruin. His neat little cottage soon lost the mark of respectability which it cherished —his wife soon learned how to weep with a breaking heart, his children soon began to feel the bitter pangs of hunger, and know the want of warm clothing, and himself, he soon what? No matter; look at him now! And thus it is with thousands. Men, who would be our most useful members of society; men, who would be ornaments to the country which gave them birth, perish through the accursed influence of intoxicating drink. But look! see! he opened his hollow, sunken eye, wrapped in haze, and gazed wistfully round the room. "Margaret," he cried in a tremulous voice, "where are you?—It's growing so dark and dismal that I cannot see! hush did any one call me?" "No, love, it's no one," sobbed the poor, heart-broken wife; "do you want any thing? if you do tell me, and——" "Stop then, and I'll tell you," interrupted he, and as he spoke he made a convulsive effort to raise himself in the bed. "Where is your hand, Margaret, that:—do you remember how I used to press it, when I used to breathe my vows of eternal constancy and love to you? when the nights bounded away from us, as we sat locked in each other's arms, leaving us in astonishment at how they vanished so quick. eh!" He had touched a chord, a tender one, which had not been open for years. "Samuel, my own Samuel," answered she in choked accents, as she imprinted on his wan but once manly countenance, a kiss, "for my sake, lie down and compose yourself, and all will yet be well."—"Ah! no Margaret, that can never be" answered he "would to God I had the opportunity, I would well profit by it, but"—as he spoke this his voice faltered—"a few short moments, and 'twill be over;—where are my little ones? Bring them to me, that I may embrace the innocents whom I have starved and robbed of their right." They were accordingly brought to him, and after pressing to his bosom, and kissing them one by one, he requested his wife to assist him lying down.—This done, a calm and tranquil stillness reigned through the apartment, interrupted only by the stifled sobs of the unhappy wife, and the low moaning of his children. Death was hovering near; his lamp had burned down to its socket, and was flickering. "Mercy—O, Heaven!" were his last words. A smile played upon his features—the spirit of life flew—the wife stood a widow, and her children were orphans.—Ulster Missionary.

CONTROVERSY.—There is no learned man but will confess that he has much profited by reading controversies, his senses awakened, his judgment sharpened, and the truth which he had held more firmly established. If then it be profitable for him to read, why should it not at least be tolerable and free for his adversary to write? In logic, they teach that contraries laid together more evidently appear: it appears then, that all controversy being permitted, falsehood will appear more false, and then the truth the more true: which must need conduce much to the general confirmation of the implicit truth.—Milton.

DIFFERENT MODES OF PREACHING.

Bold manner.—The man who preaches what he feels without fear or diffidence.

Fincial.—Minces out fine words with nothing in them.

Sober.—The man who lulls asleep.

Stiff.—One who pins himself down to think and speak by rule, without any deviation.

Powerful.—The man who preaches from the bottom of his heart, the truths of the gospel with energy to the consciences of his hearers.

Self-confident.—A man who goes by nobody's judgment but his own.

Rash.—A preacher who says what comes uppermost without any consideration.

Rambling.—A man that says all that pops in his mind without any connection.

Elegant.—The man who employs all his brains upon dressing words, without ever aiming at the heart.

Conceited.—Vainly aims at every thing and says nothing.

Affectionate.—The happy man who feels for souls tenderly, preaches Christ affectionately and yearns over souls in the bowels of Jesus Christ.

Dogmatic.—A man who goes by his own brains right or wrong.

Peevish.—One who picks into every bodys thoughts and thinks no body right but himself.

Fanciful.—One who, instead of being led by his wisdom, runs after a thousand visionary whimsies and conceits.

Self-Important.—Thinks nobody like himself.

Noisy.—A loud roar and nothing in it.

Genteel.—The vain fool that is fond of dressing up his words without meaning.—Rowland Hill.

"REV."—The editor of the New York Evangelist recommends a free use of the above title, and thinks that religious editors, from the nature of their employment, should receive it. For ourself we have no ambition of the kind, and have no anxiety to receive it as a minister of the Gospel. The word in the abstract is like another; but if it is used to designate the Holy Office of the ministry, it seems like arrogating too much, since the term was applied originally to the Divine Being. For this reason, with many others, many ministers of the gospel have declined the use of the title.—Seventh Day Baptist Register.

A WASTE.—The parliament of Great Britain allows $1,750,000 for the Queen's support, 133,000 for her husband, and for her horses and hounds, 310,000 more, making in all 2,193,000 dollars. The same parliament allows only $133,000 a year for the purposes of education.—This shows what a burden people will bear to promote the grandeur of some great ones, clothed with power, when, in all probability, one half as much to educate the rising generation would be considered too grievous to be endured.—Morning Star.

ONE TALENT.—A very poor and ignorant man went to the managers of a Sabbath school, and expressed a desire to make him useful in this benevolent cause. He said, that although he was unable to engage himself as a teacher, he could visit the parents of the absent scholars, and ascertain the cause of their non-attendance. In this way the poor illiterate man improved his talent, and accomplished a large amount of good.

NEW SYSTEM OF TELEGRAPH.—It is stated in the Baltimore Sun, that Mons Gonon, is the inventor of a new system of telegraphs in this country. The Sun adds that Gonon's system is perfect; a despatch of any length can be transmitted with accuracy and celebrity. In case we should be involved in war, such a system would be beneficial, as the head of government could be informed of the passing events through the whole Union and shape its measures accordingly.

LYCEUM VILLAGE IN OHIO.—There is a village called Berea, near Cleveland, Ohio, which is maintained in connection with the system of Lyceums introduced by Mr. Josiah Holbrook, the chief manual occupation of the inhabitants of which is to get out grindstones!! The pupils work six hours at this business, there being an excellent quarry in the neighborhood, and then spend four more in study and recitation.

Jefferson gave eleven millions of dollars for Louisiana, and the government has received, since the purchase $14,598-281 for the sales of public lands—three and a half millions more than the purchase money, besides having on hand six millions of acres yet to sell, within the boundary of the State.

THE HON. JOHN C. CALHOUN.—This distinguished Senator was 58 years of age on the 17th ultimo—and of course celebrated his own birth-day, as well as that of St. Patrick, in company with the Hibernian and St. Patrick Societies, of Charleston, S. C., on that day.

POST OFFICE REVENUE IN ENGLAND.—The total amount of postage paid into the Exchequer by the post offices of Great Britain and Ireland for 1840, was £447,-654,10*s.* 5*d.* Great Britain paid £441,-000. Ireland £6,664 10*s.* 6*d.*

Some apprehension is expressed in consequence of a large body of Russian troops concentrating in Poland. It is said the number is equal to 200,000.

A GOOD JOKE.—I have heard a first rate joke about John Truman, late of Athens, Geo. He was stopping at a tavern up the country, and used to lounge about the bar, and come it over other people's liquor. Not a glass could be left a moment but he would slily slip up and drink its contents. One day a stage driver came in, and called for a stiff horn of brandy toddy. John immediately shuffled up to the bar. The driver knew his man, and immediately played possum by leaving his brandy while he stepped to the door. The bait took—on return, he saw the glass empty, and exclaimed, with all the diabolical horror he could effect,

"Brandy and opium enough to kill forty men! who drank the pizen?"

"I!" stammered John, ready to yield up the ghost with affright.

"You're a dead man," said the driver.

"What shall I do?" beseeched John, who thought himself a "gone sucker."

"Down with a pint of lamp oil or you are a dead man in three minutes," answered the wicked driver. And down went the lamp oil, up came the brandy and opium together with John's breakfast. The joke was told, and he has never drank other people's liquor since.

A FEE-LER.—A surgeon and a lawyer had very little good feeling toward each other, and the following occurrence took place:

"If," said the surgeon, "a neighbor's dog destroy my ducks, can I recover damages by law?"

"Certainly," replied the lawyer, "you can recover. Pray, what are the circumstances?"

"Why, sir, your dog, last night, destroyed two of my ducks."

"Indeed! then you certainly can recover the damages; what is the amount? I'll instantly discharge it."

"Four shillings and sixpence," chuckled the surgeon.

"And my fee for attending and advising is six shillings and eightpence," responded the attorney, "and unless you immediately pay the same my conduct will be suit-able."—The Honest Lawyer.

NEWSPAPER READERS.—The tastes of the readers of a newspaper are sufficiently various and singular. One reads nothing but the poet's corner; another considers poetry, and all that sort of stuff, horrid trash. One deems politics the only business of life; another votes that department a bore. This one reads the deaths and marriages, and that one looks only to the advertisements. There are various other idiosyncracies too numerous to mention; but certainly the most singular one we ever heard of, was the case of the lady who was obliged to consult the celebrated Abernethy, because "for several mornings past she had not been able to relish her murders." We should like to have seen the doctor's physiognomy on the occasion.

GOOD-BREEDING—says an old writer of the eighteenth century—is an amiable and persuasive thing. It beautifies the actions and looks of men. But equally odious is the grimace of good-breeding. In comparison with this, bluntness is an accomplishment. The ape of a well-bred man is just as offensive as the well-bred man is agreeable; he is a nuisance to his acquaintance. I am frightened at the affected smile and the apish shrug. When these foul copies of gentlemen throw their civil grin in one's face, it is as much as one can do to avoid spitting in theirs. A starched rogue, forcing smiles, is a more hideous sight than a mummy. He is a fugitive from nature; and it is notable impudence in such a creature to pretend to be courteous.

ELOQUENT PASSAGES.—The following sentence from President Quincy's Address at the second centennial celebration of the settlement of Boston, is significant and impressive: "The great comparative truths written in letters of living light on every page of our history, the language addressed by every past age of New England to all future ages, is this, Human happiness has no perfect security but freedom; freedom none but virtue; virtue none but knowledge; and neither freedom, nor virtue, nor knowledge has any vigor, or immortal hope, except in the principles of the christian faith, and in the sanctions of the christain religion."

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.—In one of the letters received from our correspondent at Constantinople, we find the following:

In an old Armenian Bible I found the following record in the Persian tongue:

Matthew wrote his part of the Evangalists, at the holy city of Jerusalem, eight years after the ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ, in the Hebrew tongue, and his name signifies "Melodies of Life."

Mark wrote his part of the Evangalists at Alexandria, fifteen years after the ascension of our Lord Jesus in the Arabic tongue, and his name signifies "a high wall."

Luke wrote his part of the evangalists at Attakiah, seventeen years after the ascension of our Lord Jesus, in the Syrian tongue, and his name signifies "self-existent."

John wrote his part of the evangalists at Agathulug, fifty three years after the ascension of our Lord Jesus, in the Greek tongue, and his name signifies "obedience."—Phila. Courier.

The Thames Tunnell is now 1138 feet 8 inches in length, and the excavation of the shaft has ben made to the depth of 23 feet, leaving only about 50 feet more to be completed.

From the Cross and Journal.

METHODISM.—I perceive by a late number of your paper, that the Methodists claim about one-half of the population of Ohio as attendants on their ministry.—They have, they say, 100,000 members, and from five to seven attendants to each member; that would make their united congregation, on a Sabbath, amount to the round number of 700,000! Allow other denominations the same proportion of attendants to members, and what a church-going people we are; in this respect we might match Ohio against the world. But the calculation is wild. I know of one house of worship which will not hold over 300 and the Society numbers 200, of another that will not accommodate over 800, and the Society have 600.

I know of other places where none but Methodist preaching is enjoyed, and almost the entire community are members of the church. Many places also have preaching on a week day only, and but few besides members of class attend.—Again a large part of Methodist families, both old and young will see reason, I think, greatly to reduce the estimate of the Cincinnati Editors.

But this pride and boast of numbers is in perfect keeping with their boast of the excellencies of Methodism. Enter a general class meeting, and you hear the frequent exclamation, "Bless God for Methodism." At the Annual and General Conferences the note is taken up and prolonged, with every variety of inflection and compass. Listen to a Centenary Address, and if you believe all that is said of the peculiar virtues of Methodism, you will be strongly inclined to pity the people, who for nearly seventeen centurics, had only the dim light and the slender advantages of Christianity; not even favored, as were the Jews, with the expectation of a coming day of brighter glory and richer benefits.

The strides to despotism are rapid and fearful.

Two of the most extraordinary statutes, worthy of the most palmy days of popery, were enacted by the last General Conference. The substance of them amounts to this: That no presiding officer of a Quarterly or Annual Conference shall be compelled to put any motion unless he pleases, and if they urge it beyond his liking he may dismiss them instanter and send them to their homes. I am informed that this power has been exercised in a number of cases lately. Can such a system be a blessing in this republican country? Can it long stand? Ought men to pray that it may? VERITAS.

De Tocqueville, in his work on America, gives this forcible sketch:

"A newspaper can drop the same tho't into a thousand minds at the same moment. A newspaper is an adviser who does not require to be sought but who comes to you of his own accord, talks to you briefly every day of the common, without distracting your private affairs. Newspapers, therefore, become more necessary in proportion as men become more equal, and individuals more to be feared. To suppose that they only serve to protect freedom would be to diminish their importance: They maintain civilization."

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.—Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

☞For sale at the store of POTTS & GRAHAM.

THE ITALIAN INQUISITION.—"The inquisition here," in the city of Venice aided by official informers and secret tribunals became one of the most cruel engines of tyranny ever known, perhaps, under any government. No man's life, or liberty, or property, was secure. When any fell under suspicion, they were privately arrested, and in most cases they were heard of no more. Every thing was conducted with the most profound secrecy—the accused victim knew not the secret tongue that betrayed him, or the secret hand that stabbed him. Near the palace, and separated only by a canal, is a prison; this prison is connected with the palace by a high covered bridge, called the Bridge of Sighs. This bridge, was, or had, for it is now closed up, two passes; one leading from the prison into the council chambers, and, another leading to other more private apartments and dungeons under the palace itself. These dungeons were also accessible from the palace by a secret passage unknown to the public until the arcana of these apartments of death were laid open by the French. Indeed, it is said, that the citizens generally did not know of the existence of these wretched cells. Here trembling victims were led to the torture and to death. We visited these gloomy prisons; they were dark as night, and consisted each of one arch of heavy masonry, with a single hole for purposes of respiration, &c. They had been generally lined with wood, but Napoleon permitted the citizens to enter and tear out all that was moveable in these horrid cells. Here was a grated window, where the victims used to be strangled. They were seated on a block within, and a rope fastened at one end, passed through the grate, and round the neck, and out again to a machine, by the turning of which the head and shoulders were drawn up to the grate, and the poor wretch was strangled by the cord that passed round his neck. Another place was fitted up for decaption, like a guillotine. The heavy knife, fitted to a frame, was raised by machinary to the proper distance, (the victim being fixed in a right position,) when it fell and struck the head from the body, and a trench in the stone, and holes made for the purpose, conveyed the blood down into the water below. All this was done by night, and with the utmost privacy; and here were the little arches in the wall, where the executioner placed his lamp while he performed his bloody work."—Fisk's Travels in Europe, p. 369.

IMPORTANT INDIAN TREATY.—At the late Indian payment at the Forks of the Wabash, we learn that the Miami Indians made a proposition to sell the remaining portion of their lands; and although no person present was commissioned to treat with them, several gentlemen well acquainted with Indian affairs, among whom was the Indian agent, "took the responsibility," while the Indians "were in the humor," and made a treaty for about 500,000 acres, being the whole of the Miami lands remaining within the State. The price agreed to be paid is about $1,10 per acre, and the Indians agree to move west in five years. This is indeed a most fortunate affair. Most of the lands are of the finest quality, and situated in the heart of the country being principally in Miami and Cass counties. It was not expected that they would be soon relinquished by their old possessors. No doubt is entertained of the ratification of this treaty by Government. If so, an end will be put to the demoralizing scenes of an Indian payment among us—to the drunkenness, gambling, stealing—to the frauds, rascality and violence that are witnessed there. Many thanks are due to those who "took time by the foretop" in this matter.—The lands will now speedily fill up with substantial and intelligent cultivators of the soil.—Ohio "Cross and Journal."

PREACHING FOR FAME.—A gospel minister of evangelical principles being much fatigued at the conclusion of the afternoon service, retired to his apartment in order to take a little rest. He had not long reclined upon his couch before he fell asleep and began to dream. He dreamed that on walking into his garden, he entered a bower, that he had erected in it, and sat down to read and meditate.—While thus employed, he thought he heard some person enter the garden. He had not gone far before he discerned an intimate friend of his, a gospel minister of considerable talents, who had rendered himself very popular, by his zeal and exertions in the cause of Christ. On approaching this friend, he was surprised to find that his countenance was covered with a gloom, which he had not been accustomed to wear, and that it strongly indicated a violent agitation of mind, apparently arising from conscious remorse. After the usual salutation had passed, his friend asked the relator the time of day; to which he replied, twenty-five minutes past four. On hearing this his friend said, It is only one hour since I died! and now I am damned. Damned—for what, inquired the dreaming minister?—It is not, says he, because I have preached the gospel, neither is it because I have not been rendered useful, for I have now many seals of my ministry, who can bear testimony to the truth as it is in Jesus, which they have received from my lips; but it is because I have been accumulating to myself the applause of mortals, more than the honor which cometh from above; and verily I have my reward! Having uttered these expressions, he hastily disappeared, and was seen no more. The minister awaking shortly afterwards, with the contents of this dream, proceeded, overwhelmed with serious reflection, toward his chapel, in order to conduct his evening service. On his way thither, he was accosted by a friend, who inquired whether he had heard of the severe loss the church had sustained in the death of that able minister ———. He replied no, but much affected with this intelligence, he inquired the day and time of day when he died. To this his friend replied, this afternoon, at 25 minutes past 3 o'clock.

The following are extracts of letters from Dr. Taylor:

WHITEPLAINS, OCT. 9, 1840.

RIDICULOUS SUPERSTITION—THE ELEPHANT.—"A very large elephant has been within the precincts of the town of Millsburgh, for four or five days. He came into the town and strutted about as it suited him, destroying great quantities of cassava and plantains. He went up on the top of Mr. Kennedy's hill, and there raised his cars, and raised his proboscis, as though he bid defiance to the whole town. He exhibited himself as long as he supposed they would be pleased to look at him, and then turned off like a small horse and went into the swamp. Several men followed him; but the sagacity as well as the terrific appearance of the animal, prevented their approaching him sufficiently close in safety to shoot him.—The bushes and weeds were so very thick that it was impossible to retreat if the elephant pursued. At one time they came so close to him, as that when he pulled up a sapling and threw it aside, to clear away a place around him, the boughs fell about their heads; they had to drop their guns and creep into a thick bunch of thorns, &c., to avoid his quick and fierce penetrating gaze. Brother Harris told me that was at one time so near him as to see distinctly his small eye and to judge of the size of his tusks.—He says he expected every moment when the elephant would discover him, and reach out his snout and pull him out from his hiding place, or sweep around the bush, and cover him up, and walk over him, and mash him to death. But his majesty was pleased to turn in another direction, and he was thus providentially saved from a horrible death. After being thus interrupted, and fired upon in the course of the day, he concluded to retire and taking the road that leads to Gaytoomah's, he made his exit under cover of the night. I have heard some strange conjectures and superstitions relative to this creature's appearance in the place, the most ridiculous of which is, that it is Gay himself, turned into an elephant, and come to the place to avenge his enemies!"

DEMOCRACY.—The system of democratic government is most beautiful in its structure and benevolent in its operations. It is a transcript of the government of God. It is supported by the profoundest researches of philosophy, by the sublimest teachings of religion, the purest piety, the deepest virtue, the firmest faith, the brightest hope; the most entensive charity. It gives to each the right of all. Each man is estimated a unit, the sum of which makes up the whole. What is the right of one, is the right of all. It confers no title; it bestows no immunities. It makes each accountable for the whole, and pledges the protection of the whole for the good of each. The man that is born in insignificance, and bred in a corner, may by a continuance in well doing, rise to the centre of glory and honor.—Merit is the only avenue to success. And the sons and daughters of the rich, by neglect of virtue, by indulgence in vice, will sink into merited insignificance. The man in office may be removed without a revolution, while vacant seats are open to the emulation of all.

I can conceive of no form of government so perfectly compatible with the sublime principles of christianity, or so directly calculated to promote the happiness of all mankind as a democracy. It needs only to be understood in theory, and adopted in practice, by the people qualified to test its qualities, to secure the admiration and support of every philanthropist thro'-out the world.

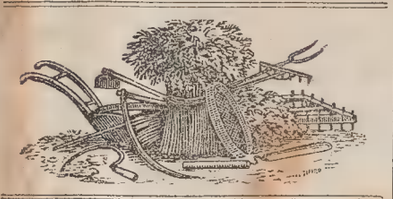
AGRICULTURAL.



AGRICULTURAL SCIENCE.

ELEMENTARY PRINCIPLES OF AGRICULTURE.

Man is fed and clothed from the animal and vegetable kingdoms; animals, (except such as subsist on other animals) are fed from the vegetable kingdom. All animals are, therefore, dependent on the vegetable department of nature for subsistence.

Vegetables, unlike animals, are stationary, and do not possess the power of locomotion or of removing from one place to another, in search of food, rest or pleasure. They are therefore dependent for nourishment, upon the particular point at which they are located, or upon other agents which should bring it within their reach. Vegetables accordingly have their lower extremities fastened in the earth, while their opposite extremity rises perpendicular in the air.

The earth then, is the bed upon which vegetables rest, and the source from which they derive a large proportion of their food. It is proper then at the outset that we consider briefly,

The composition of soils, and other agents concerned in the production of vegetables.

The earths which occur in regular order after what are called the primary and secondary rocks of our globe, are the calcareors, or lime, the argillaceous or clay, the sillicious, or sand and the magnesian, or magnesia. But these are in themselves entirely unproductive, as it has been fully demonstrated by numerous experiments, that these earths separately, or in any mechanical mode of combination, are incapable of originating or sustaining vegetable life. These then constitute only the sub-soil, bed or foundation upon which a productive soil rests. That productive soil is called carbonaceous or mould, and is composed of animal and vegetable substances in a state of partial or total decomposition. The principles of these are Oxygen, Hydrogen, Nitrogen, Carbon and the bases of the Alkalies.

The air, also exercises an important agency in the production of vegetables and its respiration is as essential to vegetable as to animal life. The air is composed of Oxygen, Nitrogen, and Carbon.

Rain and Dews, or water is formed of oxygen and hydrogen, in the proportion of 85 to 15 parts.

The alterations of heat and cold, light, and darkness—are also deeply concerned in carrying on the operations of the vegetable creation.

The constituents of vegetables—Next claim our attention. These are essentially the same in vegetables and animals. The following substances are found in vegetables: Gum, Starch, Sugar, Albumen, Gluten, Gumelastic, Extracet, Tannin, Indigo, Narcotic principle, Bitter principle, Wax, Resin, Camphor, Fixed oils, Volatile oils, Woodyfibre, Acids, Alkalies, Earths, Metalic oxides, and Saline compounds. These are reducible into the following elements; * Carbon, Oxygen, Hydrogen, Nitrogen, with small proportions of the earths already named, Potash, Sulphur, Phosphoras, and Muriatic acid.

FOOD OF PLANTS.

From the constituents of vegetables, we may form some tolerable idea, of the food of plants. For we conclude that this food must consist of the principles of which they are composed. Of the vegetable, Bland remarks, like an animal, the soil may be considered as its stomach, mathematical basis and support; the fibres with the smaller and larger roots, as the lacteals, and conductors of such food as is found there: the stem, the body the branches, and more especially the leaves as the lungs; and effect the same great ends.

"A plant sends its roots and fibres into the soil around, to obtain the chief proportion of its food. This food is at first in a half concocted state; partly in the form of sap, and partly in the form of gas; and which ascends through the stem the branches and leaves in which, by their immense surface the flood is exhibited to the influence of the sun and light; the cold and darkness; and the air and moisture. The Chyle, to carry on the simile, there undergoes those essential changes to complete its proportions, by receiving from the air, and the water in the air, that extra quantity of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen and carbon, which might be more or less deficient or less suitable to the soil, and discharging those gasceous materials and compounds which are necessary or uncongenial to the plant.

"The materials thus enriched and prepared descend to those parts of the plant where wanted, when they are again subjected to the process of those glands, which are in all probability employed and situated in the neighborhood of the young wood, the blossom and the fruit. We may also suppose the petals of the blossom, with the fruit and seed cases, act as other glands or laboratories, as they cannot be useless, to assist also in the formation and perfecting the beauty and perfume of the blossoms, as well as in the growth, the richness, and the nourishment of the seed and fruit."

The corn species, or wheat, rye, oats, barley, &c. being less abundantly supplied with leaves for the purpose mentioned, than other vegetables, nature has made provision for these in the stem, which by its thinness and hollowness affords a large surface for the juices, to be exhibited to the sun, air and rain; with the knots in the straw, acting mechanically in one case, as bond timber in building, and in another, performing the office of glands to the grain,

We have said that the food of vegetables must consist of the principles of which they themselves are composed.—yet this gives but an indefinate idea of the particular forms and modifications of matter directly applicable to the purposes of vegetable nourishment, for nearly all the general compounds in nature are constituted of the same simple elements. We must therefore inquire for something more specific, and which can be employed to direct our operations in administering food to plants, in the practical labors of industry. On this point various opinions have been entertained by scientific and practical men. Nor is the mooted point entirely settled at this time. I shall however give a brief view of the different opinions which have been and still are held on the subject, and then "will I also show mine opinion."

Miller, Bradley, Hitt and others, consider the food of plants to be the different salts found in or produced by soils, animal and vegetable matter, and that the productiveness of soils will be in proportion to the presence of those salts in them. But this theory does not seem to be well supported by facts and experiments. Hayward, a scientific agricultural writer, says "I have made many experiments with sea salt, nitre, soda, barilla, allum, &c., and have never found them to operate as a proportional addition of food may be expected to do." That salts exercise an agency in the production of vegetables cannot, I think, be reasonably doubted; but the view taken of the subject by Dr. Pearson and others, appears the more rational one; that is, that salts operate in promoting vegetation in a manner analogous to mustard, ginger and other condiments, which are not of themselves, or necessarily nutritious but contribute to render other things so, by exciting the action of the stomach and other organs, or digestion and assimilation.

'I am convinced,' says Hayward, 'that as an article of food, sea-salt never can contribute to the increase of any vegetable, but that as a chemical agent, it may increase the fertility of soils, by facilitating the decomposition of animals and vegetables, or by its deliquescent properties.'

There are many reasons for believing that Alkalin salt increase the fertility of soils, by promoting the solution of animal and vegetable substances, and by various other processes. These salts are produced by burning vegetables; and it is well known that the action of fire on the soil itself, greatly adds to its fertility.

Hayward found that the Serum or watery part of the blood, diluted, greatly promoted the growth of plants, administered as in supplying them with water, while the crassamentum or clotted part of the blood produced no such beneficial effects. The only assignable reason for which is, that in the serum, a fortieth part is alkaline salts while in the other part there is none.

Water has been supposed by some to constitute the entire food for vegetables. But however important an agency is exercised by water in the production of plants, whatever of their real food it may be supposed to constitute, it is very evident it does not afford the whole amount. For experiments of the most decisive character have proven abundantly, that pure water is incapable of originating and sustaining to maturity the vegetable productions of the earth.

Irwin says, 'the agency of water, in the process of vegetation, has not till of late been distinctly perceived.' Dr. Hale has shown that in the summer months, a sunflower weighing three pounds, and regularly watered every day, passed thro' it, or perspired twenty two ounces or half its weight each day. Dr. Injenhous and M. Senebier have shown that the leaves of plants exposed to the sun produced pure air: now water has of late been proved to contain about 78 per cwt. of pure air, the remainder being inflammable air.—Water is then decomposed by the vegetable, with the assistance of light, its inflammable part (hydrogen) is improved in the formation of oils, resins, gums, &c while its pure air (oxygen) is partly applied to the production of vegetation, acids, and partly expelled as excrements, or given out to supply the exhaustion of oxygen in the atmosphere from animal respiration.

When we observe the important agency of water in the formation of plants, and in addition, all the vegetable nourishment is taken up in a state of solution or watery state, it is not at all astonishing that the opinion should be entertained, that water alone constitutes the food for plants.

Again as the soil is the bed in which vegetables grow, and where they obtain their food chiefly, and as earthy matter is found by analyses to be contained in vegetables in small quantities, we think the opinion not unreasonable, that certain portion of earthy matter in a state of solution, and taken into vegetables as a part of their food and constitutes proportions of their solid substance.

Finally, Carbon, or the matter of charcoal, constitutes a very large proportion of the matter of vegetables and by consequence of their food.

Dr. Injenhous remarks, "to Hazenfrez we own the discovery that coal is an essential ingredient in the food of all vegetables. It appears to be one of the primeval principles, as ancient as the present constitution of our globe; for it is formed in fixed air, of which it constitutes above one-fourth part. and fixed air exists in limestone, and other substances, which date from the origin of things."

"Coal not only forms the residum of all vegetable substances, that have undergone combustion without free access to the air, but also of all putrid vegetable and animal bodies. Hence it is found in manures, whether vegetable or animal, which have undergone putrification, and is the true basis of their ameliorating powers. All soils and manures steeped in water impart a brown colour, in proportion to their fertility, and this water, as Fourcroy has shown, when evaporated, leaves a residum of coal."

The fertilizing power of putrid animal and vegetable substances, (which are highly charged with carbonaceous matter in question,) seems to have been pretty well known at an early period, but most writers, attributed them to the oil, mucilage and salts they contained; overlooking the fact that the process of pairing and burning fertilized the soil, though the operation destroys those properties, to which, in the case above, its fertility is attributed. The properties too exist in so small quantities in any soil, as not to produce any sensible effect on vegetation. When on the other hand, the carbonaceous matter which we suppose to constitute the chief food of plants is produced by animal and vegetable putrifaction, as before stated, it is found in combination with the earths, in form of fixed air, it is continually forming, says Sir Humphrey Davy, 'in a variety of processes of fermentation and combustion, and in respiration of animals, and as yet no other process is known in nature by which it can be consumed except vegetation.' If the latter part of this statement be not literally correct, (and we believe it is not) yet it is nearly enough so to prove how largely carbon enters into the food and composition of vegetables, in further corroboration of this view, we have the well known fact, that if vegetables be burnt in close vessels, they will be reduced to charcoal, with nearly the same volume, figure and organic disposition as before, so proving that carbon, which is the basis of charcoal, not only forms the great stamina of plants, but that it enters into the composition of every part and produce of vegetables.

The limits of this essay will not admit a more protracted investigation of this interesting point, but to our mind it appears pretty clear, that carbon, or the basis of charcoal, with a small proportion of the earths received by the roots, in a state of solution into the plant, constitute the principal food and stamina; that water, besides facilitating the preparation of this food, is also itself taken up by the plant, and after being decomposed and elaborated, its hydrogen is converted into oils, resins, &c., and so much of its oxygen as is requisite is converted into vegetable acids, and the residue given off to the atmosphere—and that the salts act a valuable auxiliary in the promotion of vegetable life, as chemical agents, as condiments, &c.

This is as rational a view of the food of plants as we can give in so small a place.

* The term ELEMENT is not here used in its strictest chemical sense, for it is readily admitted that several of the substances enumerated, are not simple elements, but the meaning will hardly here be mistaken.

We learn with much regret, that the venerable HERMAN LE ROY died on Wednesday in this city, at the ripe ape of 84 years. Mr. Le Roy was one of our oldest and most respectable merchants; and, as our readers are aware, was the father-in-law of the Hon. Daniel Webster, whose recent visit to New-York was occasioned by the alarming character of Mr. Le Roy's illness.—New World.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... APRIL 21, 1841.

UNITED STATES BANK.—At a meeting of the stockholders of this Institution, a committee was appointed to investigate its concerns, who have made a report which charges a number connected therewith with mal-practices. Mr. N. Biddle is deeply implicated by the committee, who has, in several letters to Mr. Clayton, of Delaware, repelled the attack upon him. The Philadelphia Chronicle remarks upon this subject:

MR. BIDDLE'S JUSTIFICATION.—We informed our readers some days since, from undoubted authority, that Mr. Biddle would appeal to the public in response to the report of the Investigating Committee. On Saturday the first of a series of letters from that gentleman appeared, and a continuation followed yesterday.

Mr. Biddle has been charged with high moral, if not legal, misdemeanors. The charge, too, has been aggravated by the detail of every circumstance which could darken his reputation, and even by inuendo and intimation of more than is alleged. To all this Mr. Biddle pleads not guilty, and it is but just to add that his plea has neither the tremulousness of a coward or the audacity of reckless guilt. It is calm, firm, confident; it deprecates no prejudice; it asks no mercy, it deals neither in denunciation nor compliment, but addresses itself in direct, simple and unvarnished language to the facts. Between the parties, the public is the arbiter and judge. That public should approach the trial as should any other judge, without prejudice or partiality, disposed to hear with patience and decide with justice.

Mr. Biddle, as we have said, instead of using the tone of one fallen from his high estate, stands forth before the public with calm and self-possessed dignity. He, at least, speaks like a man who has not forfeited his self-respect, and it should not be forgotten. We say this in sheer justice to one whom we have heretofore censured, and will again, when we see proper.

Mr. Biddle does not address the public—perhaps he felt indisposed openly and directly to deprecate the condemnation of a tribunal where he had been hastily and without a hearing already condemned. He does not address the Stockholders—their unqualified obloquy, just or unjust, having precluded all communication with them. The justification is contained in a letter to the Hon. John M. Clayton, of Delaware, one of the purest and ablest men in the Union, and it commences by referring to the condemnation by that gentleman of the recent course of the Stockholders.

By a statement of Mr. B. in relation to his interest in the cotton speculation, it seems that the motives of the operation referred wholly to the interest of the bank and the public; that it was effected by the aid of the bank, but at the risk and upon his own responsibility; and that when a large profit unexpectedly resulted—a profit which the bank could not, under its charter, receive, it was appropriated to the individual, who, upon his own responsiblity, made the operation, and had it failed, Mr. Biddle would have borne the loss. Thus far, then, we must, until we hear something to counteract the statement, admit that the proceeding appears to be unexceptionable.

In consequence of this operation $600,000 were credited by the bank after he had left it, to Mr. Biddle. But the operation afterwards proved less prosperous. A loss of $315,000 was sustained. This loss Mr. B's enemies allege he should have borne, and did not; Mr. B. shows that, though he should not have sustained it, he did voluntarily assume and discharge it.

The second series of the letters appeared yesterday; in these Mr. Biddle fully explains the whole cause of the difficulties in question. In the outset he says:

"You are aware that it is now two years since the state of my health compelled me to leave the service of the Bank. From that moment I have been wholly occupied with other matters, and have had not the slightest direction in its affairs, as both my inclination and my duty concurred in the propriety of leaving to those who had the responsibility, the entire control of its management. This total abstinence of mine does not seem to be understood or appreciated, for since the misfortunes of the Bank, I find myself reproached for things of which I knew nothing, and denounced as the cause of all the troubles which have befallen not only the Bank of the United States but every man in the whole country. Being very indifferent to popular clamor, and never suffering myself to be influenced by it to do what I disapprove, I have contradicted nothing and explained nothing, because I could do neither without injury to the interests of the Bank; but its present prostration relieves me from that fastidiousness, for its pecuniary affairs will scarcely suffer from any explanation of mine. Accordingly I now feel at liberty to say and to prove to you that when I left the Institution, two years ago, it was in a safe and prosperous situation, and that whatever misfortunes have since come upon it, my administration can in no wise be charged with them."

Mr. B. then goes into a general explanation of the affairs of the Bank, during the thirteen years he was the presiding officer, and emphatically states, that in all that time his sole object was to secure to the whole country a sound and uniform currency, and gives in proof several extracts from reports made to Congress by different committees; that when the Bank closed its affairs as a government Institution in 1836, a committee, consisting of the then directors, agreed to pay $115,58 per share of $100; that thus far every thing had gone on prosperously; he then shows that in 1839, the Bank had in means more than two dollars for one of its liabilities, and states that the revulsions since that time in all State stocks is a misfortune, not a fault. He then gives the prices of State 5's, in London, in January and February, 1839, which, with the exchanges, placed all our stocks above par; that after all the arrangements for the present Institution had been consummated, the charter granted to it by the Legislature, and the possibility of its being free from all future attacks, he found a moment he could seek the retirement he had been looking for during many years, and accordingly resigned. He then quotes the statement made by the dividend committee, in January, 1839, which shows a profit for the previous six months of $128,020 19, and a total surplus on the 7th of that month of $4,334,707 99. On that day, there came into power a new board of directors, who, at the time of Mr. Biddle's retirement, unanimously passed a resolution, describing him, among other things, as one "Who having performed so much and so faithfully, leaves the Institution with which he is identified, prosperous in all its relations—strong in its abilities to promote the interests of the communities by which it is surrounded—cordial in its associations with sister establishments, and secure in the respect and esteem of all who are connected with it in foreign or domestic intercourse."

That in transmitting the above to him, the committee chosen for the purpose, said:

"In every emergency you have given it efficient support, and now that your official connection has ceased, you have the rich consolation of knowing that you leave it entirely prosperous."

VETO.—The Pennsylvania Legislature passed a bill repealing the penalties incurred by the Banks of that State, in their late suspension of specie payments, and also authorizing the issue of 5,000,000 small notes, which has been vetoed by Governor Porter.

THE NEW PRESIDENT.—The National Intelligencer of yesterday contains the following highly important intelligence, with regard to the movements of the new President. The views expressed, it will be seen, are precisely as we predicted they would be:

By the extraordinary despatch used in sending the Official Intelligence to the Vice President at Williamsburg, and similar despatch by him in repairing to the seat of Government, John Tyler, now President of the United States, arrived in this city yesterday morning, at five o'clock, and took lodgings at Brown's Hotel.

At twelve o'clock, all the Heads of Departments, except the Secretary of the Navy, (who has not yet returned to the city, from his visit to his family,) waited upon him to pay him their official and personal respects. They were received with all the politeness and kindness which characterize the new President. He signified his deep feeling of the public calamity sustained by the death of President Harrison, and expressed his profound sensibility to the heavy responsibilities so suddenly devolved upon himself. He spoke of the present state of things with great concern and seriousness, and made known his wishes that the several Heads of Departments would continue to fill the places which they now respectively occupy, and his confidence that they would afford all the aid in their power to enable him to carry on the administration of the Government successfully.

The President then took and subscribed the following oath of office:

I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.

City and County of Washington, }

I, William Cranch, Chief Judge of the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia, certify that the above named John Tyler personally appeared before me, this day, and, although he deems himself qualified to perform the duties and exercise the powers and office of President on the death of William Henry Harrison, late President of the United States, without any other oath than that which he has taken as Vice President, yet, as doubts may arise, and for greater caution, took and subscribed the foregoing oath before me.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE COMMON COUNCIL. The Board of Aldermen met on Tuesday evening. A message was received from the acting Mayor, announcing the death of the President. Alderman Smith offered certain resolutions of sympathy and condolence. It was resolved that a committee of six be appointed to make arrangements for fitting solemnities on this occasion. It was also directed that the chambers of both Boards of the Common Council be hung in black.

At the Board of Assistants Mr. President Lee announced the melancholy event which had called them together in a feeling and appropriate manner. The resolutions from the other Board were unanimously adopted.

Throughout the city yesterday, at the public buildings, and the shipping, flags were hoisted at half-mast, and other usual testimonials of public sorrow manifested.—N. Y. paper.

GEN. HARRISON'S FAMILY.—Most sincerely do we mingle our condolences with this bereaved family. We know well, as must all, that the blow that has been lighted down upon them by the hand of the Almighty, is heavy and severe. But it must be one exceeding consolation to them, that a nation weeps with them, and that a nation will revere the character and cherish the memory of one they loved so much and so worthy.

The following relatives of Gen. Harrison were present in the city on the day of the funeral, viz:

Mrs. Jane Harrison, of Ohio, [son's widow] and two sons.

Miss Taylor, of Va. [niece] a daughter and two sons.

Pike Harrison, [grandson] son of J. C. S. Harrison and grandson of Gen Pike.

Mr. D. C. Copeland, of Ohio, [nephew.]

Mr. Benjamin Harrison, of Berkley [nephew.]

Henry Harrison, [grand-nephew] son of the preceding, who has acted as confidential Secretary of the President.

Dr. John Minge, of Charles city, Va. [nephew.]

We may also add the name of Mrs. Finley, of Ohio, who adopted Mrs. Jane Harrison as a daughter, and who almost invariably occupied the right hand of the President at his table.

The following are the surviving relations who were absent:

Mrs. Harrison, the General's bereaved wife.

John Scott Harrison, the only living son.

Mrs. Judge Short, eldest daughter.

Mrs. Dr. Thornton, daughter.

Mrs. Taylor, daughter. All these were living at or near North Bend.

Mr. Taylor and his wife and family were expected to become members of the President's family for his whole term of service.

The following are the names of deceased members of the family.

Lucy Harrison, a daughter, married Judge Este.

J. C. S. Harrison, a son, married Miss Pike.—Both dead.

William H. Harrison, jr., married Miss Jane Irwin. His widow presided at the President's table, and her personal graces have commended her to the affections of all who have had the pleasure to know her.

Dr. Benj. Harrison, a son. Died the last summer.

Carter B. Harrison, a son who was a lawyer of fine talents, and accompanied General Harrison to Columbia. Died two years ago.—All of the sons left children.

FROM WASHINGTON.—Letters from the seat of government state that the remains of the deceased President are to be removed to North Bend, and not to Virginia as has been stated. This is said to have originated with the friends and relatives of the deceased, who objected to the remains going to the Old Dominion.—Phil. Chron.

THE DOINGS OF YESTERDAY.—Our city yesterday presented a truly solemn and impressive appearance. The most admirable feature of the observance was their unanimity; every thing like party feeling and prejudices were buried, and all came like brothers to manifest their respect for the memory of the late Chief Magistrate, whose services and virtues will long live in the minds of his countrymen, and even those who were his political enemies, while living, will cherish a generous respect for him whose country's good was the aim of his life. As a politician we speak not of him, but as a man,

"His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, This was a man!"

The patriotism of all parties was fairly tested yesterday, and proven to be sound; we heard not a single dissenting voice, nor saw we one deriding lip; all were seriously impressed with the deep solemnity of the occasion, and seemed instinctly to participate in the gloom which mantled the city.

In conformity with a request from the city authorites, places of business were closed during the most of the day, with but here and there a discreditable exception, and indeed many of them remained closed. The courts and public offices adjourned their business over to Thursday, and a general cessation of labor prevailed among all classes.

We see that a temporary cessation of the bitter hostilities which characterized partizan warfare has taken place, and why may it not be perpetuated? The leading men of each party have been drawn together by this event, and have abandoned every unkind feeling, to co-operate in accomplishing an object; why then may not this kindly and patriotic feeling be cultivated, and made to unite men of opposite political sentiments in christian and brotherly fellowship? There is—there can be—no good reasons; to our minds, it is perfectly feasible, and we trust will be accomplished. If it should be so, we may truly say that "out of evil has come much good."

Philadelphia has never been more gloomy and melancholy than yesterday; it has produced much thought and reflection among people, and has certainly softened down the asperity of politicians.—Sad as the event itself is, it is to be sincerely hoped that its effects will in a measure repay the loss, and that our future ruler will prove himself worthy to supplant the illustrious dead.

The doings of yesterday were noble—they were patriotic—and every way worthy of American hearts. They will not be without their good results, and will be remembered by those who participated in them. We have only to express a hope that the future will be in keeping with the past.—Phil. Chron.

NEW CURE FOR STAMMERING.—The German papers mention a discovery of Professor Diefenbach, which is exciting general attention at Berlin. He has discovered a method for the cure of stammering, by an incision in the tongue—which is said to have been in all the instances where he has operated, completely successful.—According to the Professor, stammering proceeds from the difficulty of applying the tongue to the roof of the mouth, and his remedy of course consists in the removal of the impediment.

MAINE GIRLS.—The Maine women are as brave and belligerent as the Maine men. In Saco on Monday there was a "flare up" among the female operatives in the employ of the York Manufacturing Company, on account of a reduction of wages.—They marched through the streets to the number of 500, with banners and music, and proceeded to the Free Will Baptist meeting house, where they chose officeresses and adopted a series of resolutions setting forth their grievances.

MEMORY OF WASHINGTON IN FRANCE.—A splendid fete on the Birth day of Washington was given by General Cass, our Minister to France. About one thousand persons attended, including all the Americans in Paris. The prime minister of France, M. Guizot, M. Theirs, Count Mole, the Ambassadors of the various Courts of Europe, except Lord Grenville, of England, (who was represented by his Secretery, Henry Lytton Bulwer,) and many other distinguished persons.

According to letters from Europe, an immense flood of emigration from the old world, may be expected to set in upon the United States this spring and the ensuing summer. Great preparations are making in Germany and Holland; whole communities are holding meetings preparatory to setting out, under the direction of intelligent persons, selected to direct the efforts of these emigrants after they arrive here.

WHITE WATER CANAL.—The Legislature of Ohio has allowed the White Water Canal Company two years longer in which to finish the work; but have refused it any pecuniary aid. The City Council of Cincinnati have agreed to subscribe the $200,000 to the work, and issue city bonds therefor; provided they be applied exclusively to finishing the work.

RECALL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS.—It is said to be probable that all our diplomatic representatives in Europe will soon be recalled, with the exception of Mr. Wheaton at Berlin, and Mr. Cass, at Paris.—The later is said to be a great favorite with the "Citizen King," who consults him on all great subjects.

FATAL EFFECTS OF THE LATE STORM.—On Friday evening last, about six o'clock, a most tremendous thunder gust with rain came up from the north-west, which lasted for some hours, doing great damage to property and causing the deaths of numerous persons. The lightning struck a sail boat in the Delaware, near Gloucester Point, and melancholy to relate, killed three persons—Mr. Joseph C. Britton, of this city, Mr. John Hichman, nephew of B. Hichman, Esq., member of the Legislature, and Mr. Matlack, who resided on the Jersey Shore. The gentlemen had been down the river, on a sporting excursion. The melancholy event was not known until a very early hour on Saturday morning, when the boat was seen drifted ashore, and, on examination, two dead bodies, those of Mr. Britton and Mr. Matlack, were discovered in it, one with the head down and face buried in the hands, as if to avoid seeing the vivid flashes of lightning—and the other with hands clenched, and bending forward, as if stricken dead while in the act of rowing. The body of Mr. Hichman was not found, and it is supposed that he fell overboard. Mr. Britton was formerly a builder, was 39 years of age, and has left a wife and child. Mr. Matlack and Mr. Hichman were both young men.

A flat, containing fifteen persons, was dashed against one of the piers of the New Hope Bridge, and Torbert Westner, a ferryman, a Miss Caroline Rose, an interesting girl of 17, daughter of John Rose, New Jersey, and two children of Johnson Pidcocks, one an infant six weeks old, the other three or four years old, were drowned; the other persons were taken up by some active watermen, and though almost exhausted, saved. The child, three or four years old, is the only body found. One woman, holding her child in her arms, floated down the middle of the stream for some distance, was carried by the rapidity of the current to the Jersey shore, and escaped with her child.

A lad named Nice was instantly killed by a blow from a trap-door, which was torn from its hinges and dashed into the street, where he was walking in Germantown.

A lad, son of John Ogden, at Woodstown, N. J., was struck by lightning, while housing some cattle, and instantly killed.

The steamboat Burlington, at Burlington, was dashed against the wharf, and disabled for the time.—Philadelphia Courier, 10th inst.

☞ The Paris correspondent of the Courier des Etats Unis, under date of March 7th, holds the following language respecting the War Question:

"The political difficulties existing between England and the United States, have attracted attention in Europe, and especially in France. The rumor is rife in the best informed circles, that the British Cabinet, with a hope of intimidating these pirates of republicans, (who according to John Bull, talk loud only to disguise their fears,) intend to despatch a squadron to America forthwith and show the muzzles of their guns to the Ministers at Washington, that these functionaries may be more supple and accommodating.

"The hearts of French patriots thrill at this outpouring of British insolence. We have faith in the patriotism and the bravery of the Americans. We are confident that they will maintain their dignity and honor, and if war should ensue between the American Eagle and the British Leopard, the former may rest assured that she will not long flap her mighty wings over the land and sea before the tri-colored banner of France will float by her side. We are firmly convinced that within one month after war is declared between Great Britain and the United States, our Government will be forced to take part in the contest; for, whatever may be the obstinacy of its predilection for peace, it will be forced into the strife by the power of public opinion."

We are bound, as Americans, to greet most cordially the generous and chivalric spirit that glows in these remarks; at the same time we are well satisfied that no occasion will exist for us to receive the good offices of our trans-Atlantic friends. There will be no war.—New World.

MOVEMENTS IN TEXAS.—Dates from Galveston are to the 22d, and Houston to the 18th ult. The Indians continue to annoy the border settlements. General Morehouse was making preparations to go in pursuit of them a second time. No news from the seat of government. An extensive English importing house was about being established at Matagorda.—The Houston Morning Star speaks in flattering terms of the sugar crop on the Colorade. Col. M. B. Menard is nominated for the vice presidency.

NARROW ESCAPE.—As Mr. H. Wood of Taunton, Mass., and a friend, were returning on Friday evening last from a temperance meeting, in a one horse wagon, near Whittington village, the horse was instantly killed by the lightning, and the forward axle of the wagon shivered into splinters. Mr. Wood was stunned by the explosion, but neither himself or his companion received serious injury.—Phil. Chron.

A letter from Washington says:—"General Harrison's wife is at the North Bend. The blow will be frightful to her, for her attachment to him is intense, and her health is very feeble. He leaves one son and three daughters. The ladies of the President's household now are Mrs. Taylor, of Va., Mrs. Harrison, daughter-in-law, and Mrs. Findley."

METHODIST CONFERENCE.—The Philadelphia Conference assembled in the Union Church at 8 o'clock on Wednesday morning. Bishop Hedding opened the session by reading the 16th chapter of John's Gospel. He then read the 553d hymn, which was sung with much feeling by all present, as peculiarly appropriate to the solemnity of the day. In the opening of the prayer, the death of the President was alluded to by the Bishop as a national affliction, and the blessing of Heaven implored for the country and the bereaved family of Gen. Harrison.

The roll was called, and the Rev. Wm. A. Wiggins was unanimously chosen Secretary of the Conference. A few other preliminary items of business were attended to, when a preamble and resolutions were adopted, respecting the sudden demise of the President of the United States—the Bishop and members standing—the conference then adjourned to meet at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.—Nothing has been done as yet, interesting to the public. It is expected the conference will sit till Friday next.

The Methodist Protestant Conference of the Maryland district, is now holding their thirteenth session in the lecture room of the New Church, (Stockton's,) corner of Eleventh and Wood streets.—The proceedings are open to all who may wish to attend. The anniversaries of the benevolent societies connected with this conference will be held at the Rev. Mr. Chambers' Church, corner of Broad and George streets, as the chapel in Eleventh street is not finished.—Phil. Chron. 10th inst.

REMARKABLE INCIDENTS.—Within the last twelve years we have had four Presidents. Gen. Jackson and Mr. Van Buren were widowers, and the lamented Harrison's lady had not arrived to superintend the affairs of the White House; when her noble and affectionate husband was called to another, and we trust, a better world. The present President, Mr. Tyler, is also a widower, so that for the past twelve years, no President has had his own wife to do the honors of the nation's mansion. We suppose this duty will devolve upon the amiable and talented lady, of the President's son, during his administration. She is the daughter of the venerable and respected Cooper, the celebrated tragedian, and grand-daughter of the late Major Fairlee, formerly of this city, who was a distinguished officer in the revolutionary war.

COMPARATIVE LOSS ON GOLD AND PAPER, AS A CIRCULATION.—Mr. Page, a distinguished English writer, has, from the reports of the English and American mints, ascertained that there is a loss on gold coin by the wear and tare of of 4,61 per cent. in a century, which is less than 1,20th per cent, per annum, and that of every £100 coined in any particular year, there would remain over £95 7s 10d in real value at the end of 100 years A comparson is next made of the expense of a paper currency, which, at 2½ per. cent., as stated by Mr. Norman, is found to be fifty-three times greater than the loss by wear on a gold currency as 2½ per cent. per annum, on a sum of £20,000,000, will amount in 100 years to £50,000,000; while the loss by wear of a gold currency of £20,000,000, during the same period is only £192,000. The difference is therefore £49,088,000.

BANK OF THE U. STATES.—The National Gazette of the 5th inst. contains a report on this institution made up to the 31st March: the result of which shows that the stock is now worth forty-six and 91-100 dollars per share. The truth of this result depends, of course, on the accurary of the estimates of assets—and of this we cannot judge. Nothing is more difficult, in the way of valuation, than to decide on the actual value of sixty-nine millions of miscellaneous bank securities. At any rate we should be glad to see this vexatious question so far settled that the public might know how to regard the stock, and the operators in Wall street be choked off from this one subject of their legalized and respectable gambling.

THE PRESIDENT.—The National Intelligencer has the following:—we are authorized to say that under the pressure of the public business, increased by recent events, as well as by the approach of an extra session of Congress, the President finds it indispensible to make some arrangement for the employment of his time. He proposes, therefore, to see his fellow citizens, who may wish to call on him, from ten to twelve o'clock every day in the week except Sunday.

COMMENCED.—The work of demolition has commenced in Eighth street, above Race, the site designed for the new Methodist Episcopal "Pew" Church.—The building will front eighth street, and will be situated a short distance above Race. The contractors expect to have it ready for service in the lecture room in the short space of two months. Phil. Chron.

UNITED STATES BANK—STOCKHOLDERS MEETING.—The adjourned meeting of Stockholders which took place yesterday was very large, and unanimous in their determination to resusciate the institution.

The English Post office permits no person employed by it, nor their wives, to keep a house for the sale of intoxicating liquors, under the penalty of forfeiting the office.

To the People of the United States

A RECOMMENDATION.

When a Christian People feel themselv[es] be overtaken by a great public calamity, it comes them to humble themselves under the pensation of Divine Providence, to recog His righteous government over the childre men, to acknowledge His goodness in time as well as their own unworthiness, and to plicate His merciful protection for the futur

The death of WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, President of the United States, so soon afte elevation to that high office, is a bereaven peculiarly calculated to be regarded as a h affliction, and to impress all minds with a s of the uncertainty of human things, and of dependence of Nations, as well as of individu upon our Heavenly Parent.

I have thought, therefore, that I should be ing in conformity with the general expectat and feelings of the community in recommend as I now do, to the People of the United Sta of every denomination, that according to t several modes and forms of worships, they obse a day of Fasting and Prayer, by such religi services as may be suitable on the occasion; I recommend FRIDAY, the FOURTEEN DAY OF MAY NEXT, for that purpose; the end that, on that day, we may all, with accord, join in humble and reverential appro to HIM, in whose hands we are, invoking Hi inspire us with a proper spirit and temper heart and mind under these frowns of His pr idence, and still to bestow His gracious be dictions upon our Government and our count

JOHN TYLER

Washington, April 13, 1841.

GENERAL HARRISON'S LAST LETTER.—On S urday, says the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, hardy, weather beaten, but very respectable lo ing seaman presented himself to the Collector, the Custom House, and inquired for Mr. Curt said, "General Harrison told me to give his ki respects to Mr. Curtis, and said Mr. Curtis w his friend, and would be my friend." Mr. C tis opened the letter, and found it to be, from date, one of the last, if not the very last, lett written by General Harrison. It bears date the day when his illness commenced. The read will see, from a perusal of it, that amid all t cares and troubles of his high position, he w true to the humblest of his old friends. Tuck says the General made him come to the dinn table with the great folks, and when he hesitat and intimated that he had better go below for h dinner, the General said, "Tucker, you and have been shipmates, and a long time togeth You are an honest man; come and eat your di ner with me, and come here again to-morr morning and get your breakfast with me."

Tucker said the General invited him to stay Washington, and told him he would take care him; but his wife and children being in Ne York, Tucker preferred to return. He says Ge eral H. followed him into the grounds on t East side of the White House, and then walke with him arm-in-arm—that the General had hat on, and when Tucker adverted to his liabil ty to take cold, he waived the remark by saying was already unwell. Having received the lett from the General, Tucker says he followed him the door and shook him by the hand saying, "G to my friend, Mr. Curtis, and after you have bee to him, don't forget to write to me that you an your wife and children are happy again."

Tucker says he had no money to come home land, but did not let the General know that, f he knew he would give it to him in a minute and he did not wish to take money from the goo old man who had been so kind to him. And Tucker went on board the schooner L. L. Stu gis, at Alexandria, and worked his passage hom to New York. When he came to the Custo House he had not been ashore thirty minutes and having first heard the sad news of the deat of his kind benefactor as he passed up the Ol Slip dock, the abundant tears that fell down hi hardy cheek testified that his is no ungrateful heart.

We are glad to hear that Mr. Curtis immediately appointed Mr. Tucker an inspector of the customs.

"WASHINGTON, 26th March, 1841.

"DEAR SIR—The bearer hereof, Mr. Thomas Tucker, a veteran seamen, came with me from Carthagena, as the mate of the brig Montidia, in the year 1829. In an association of several weeks I imbibed a high opinion of his character—so much so that (expressing a desire to leave the sea) I invited him to come to North Bend and spend the remainder of his days with me. Subsequent misfortunes prevented his doing so, as he was desirous to bring some money with him to commence farming operations. His bad fortune still continues, having been several times shipwrecked within a few years. He says that himself and family are now in such a situation that the humblest employment would be acceptable to him, and I write this to recommend him to your favorable notice. I am persuaded that no one possesses, in a higher degree, the virtues of fidelity, honesty and indefatigable industry; and, I might add, of indomitable bravery, if that was a quality necessary for the kind of employment he seeks.

"Yours, very truly,
"W. H. HARRISON.

"EDWARD CURTIS, Esq.
"Collector, &c., New York."

CHAS. F. MITCHELL.—We learn that this individual committed a forgery in the name of a gentleman of our city to the amount of about $1400, some two years ago. When the fact was discovered by the gentleman in question, he promised out of regard to Mitchell and his connexions, to keep the affair a secret—and he did so up to the time of hearing that Mitchell was an applicant for the office of Navy Agent for New York. He then very properly communicated the circumstances to the Hon. Mr. Grinnell, who thereupon opposed and defeated Mitchell's application.

BIRTHS.—We observe that the Poughkepsie Journal publishes a list of births in each paper. This is a common practice among the English journalists, but has not as yet been adopted by American publishers.

ESIDENT TYLER'S PROCLAMATION—A DAY OF ING.—We call the attention of the reader, ially ministers of the gospel, to this doc- t, in another column. Frequent com- ts are made, by professors of religion, of the lity of our rulers. Now, that the chief offi- f this nation, has called the attention of the ens—especially the religious portion of them, y suitable respects to a very severe dispen- n of Providence, it becomes the duty of eve- ofessing christian to respond to this call. PRESIDENT TYLER.—His address explanatory his views and the principles on which he pro- es conducting the government of this nation, which he has so unexpectedly been called, is before the public. It is a brief but sensible ument.

He proposes that his policy toward foreign na- ns shall be to cultivate peace and amity with but to submit to injustice from none. He nits the tendency of this government to con- dation, in consequence of the immense pow- of the chief executive, and thinks a radical nge should be made in this feature of our tem, and promises, at a proper time, to call the ention of Congress to this subject. He will move no incumbent from office who has honest- discharged his duty, but will displace all who ve given their official influence for the promo- n of party. In public expenditures he ap- ves of a rigid economy, and the removal of all cers guilty of peculation. He will put an end the war between the government and the rency; meanwhile he regrets that existing actments, upon this subject, are unwise and pressive, but will give his sanction to any asure Congress may originate to improve the rency.

This is a brief abstract of the document be- e us, which seems to be written in a style of cerity and with force.

Mr. George Griffith, of Hopewell town, former- of Uniontown Pa., died very unexpectedly ne ten or twelve days since. He passed off as nan falling to sleep.

MORMONISM.—We call the reader's attention to an advertisement, in another column, which we take from the Philadelphia Courier, in relation to the phamphlet of Mr. Lee on Mormonism. An exposure of that kind, by some competent hand, is called for. A grosser imposture was never palmed upon the credulity of the public than this same Mormonism. Esperella's remarks apply to this case with great force; "it is not in the nature of man to be irreligious,—he listens eagerly to those who promise to lead him to salvation, which makes it the more lamentable that he should be so often deceived."

Some facts have came under our own notice, in relation to their Kirtland bank swindling, which, if similar ones are not stated in this pamphlet, ought therein to be inserted. For instance, a short time pending the failure of their shin-plaster concern, we were in Brook county, Virginia; two of the establishment were buying up property and paying in Kirtland money. Mr. Leonard Hurdle, in the north part of this county, informed us, the other day, that some of them were buying up property in his neighborhood about the same time, and making payment in the same kind of money; that he sold a fine horse to them and took the pay in Kirtland paper. But being shortly informed of the worthlessness of the paper, by riding all night he overtook the swindlers and recovered his property. Their conduct was very little better than that of the Gallipolis bank swindlers.

THE WEATHER.—It still continues wet. But little ploughing done. Next to no gardening made. Although the ground has been kept perfectly saturated with water, by the constant spattering of the rain, yet, in this vicinity there has been no heavy fall until last Saturday afternoon. We then had the heaviest rain we have had for months. It cleared up on Sabbath, and the ground dried finely, we having the only fair specimen of March wind we have had this season. We hope this was the clearing up shower.

☞We received a poem,—address to a human scull,—from an anonymous hand. It contains some excellent thoughts, but the rules of poetic accent and poetic measure are too frequently violated therein to allow it to go to the press.—Beside we pay no attention to communications where the proper name of the author does not accompany them.

EDITORIAL CHANGE.—Mr. John Bailhache has retired from the editorial charge of the "Alton (Illinois) Telegraph," and Mr. T. M. Davis succeeds him. Mr. B. is one of the oldest and most talented editors of the west; add to this he is an honorable and high-minded gentleman. May God bless him in his retirement.

DOLLAR MAGAZINE.—The fourth number of this very cheap work is before us. It is ornamented with several amusing cuts and filled with interesting matter. Address Wilson & Co., 162 Nassau street, N. Y., enclosing one dollar, free of postage, and you will get the cheapest thing of the kind extant.

DEATH.—The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate announces the death of the Rev. W. Swazey, of the M. E. Church. He died of dropsy of the heart, at his son-in-law's, Rev. C. Brown, in Deerfield, O., on the 29th of March last. He is said to have departed in peace.

FIRE AT NORTH BEND.—A report has been in circulation for a few days past of the destruction of Gen. Harrison's dwelling house, at North Bend. We are pleased to learn that rumor has greatly exaggerated the calamity. The Cincinnati Gazette of the 13th inst. says: "The building was on fire, but only the upper story of the west wing sustained any material damage. This was destroyed, but without, we understand, the loss of any furniture, or seriously inconveniencing the afflicted family."—Western Star.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, April 21.—Flour $3; wheat 50 cents.

BALTIMORE, April 10.—Flour.—There have been further sales this week of Howard street Flour from store, probably 1500 to 2000 bbls. in lots of 100 to 500, at 4,62½, the closing rate of last week, but yesterday, although receipts are still limited, the article was in less demand, and the feeling of holders showed evidences that it had reached its highest point, at least for the present. Choice brands have sold at 4,68½. The car and wagon price is 4,50.

Provisions—The sales of beef are only for ships' stores; but holders continue firm at our quoted prices. A lot of 100 bbls. Mess Pork has sold this week at 12,50, cash; and 2a300 do Prime at 10,25 a 10,50 per barrel on same terms taken for export. The sales of Western bacon have been again to a fair extent without a material variation in price, 6a6½ cents for assorted in lots of 5 to 20,000 lbs, cash and 4 mos. mostly however to the trade. We quote Baltimore cured hams 10 cts, Western do 7½ for large, and 8 for small size in shipping order; Sides, 6¼ a 6½ and Shoulders 5¼ a 5½. Lard is held at over 8c in kegs, that price having been refused; a lot of 80 kegs strictly prime No. 1, has sold at 8¼ cents cash.

Western Transportation—The wagon rates have declined 25 cts. and we now quote 1,50 per 100 lbs. to either Pittsburgh or Wheeling.

The Home Market—There is a material falling off in the receipts of beef Cattle, the offering this week in market only amounting to 25 head of which 50 were taken by city butchers, at 6,50 a 8, only 12 however at the latter price.—Lyford.

PHILADELPHIA, April 13.—The stock and receipts of Flour on the Delaware continue light; but in Broad street it is beginning to arrive more freely—early in the week sales of Pa. was made at 4,87½, at which rate it is still held by factors; sales of 1500 bbls. Brandywine flour at 5,00.

Provisions—The market is not very active; Mess Pork is selling in small lots at 12,50 per bbl.; Prime 11,00; Mess Beef 11,00; Prime do. 8,00; Lard 7½ and 8 cents per lb.; Butter in kegs at 7½ and 8½ cts.

Cattle Market—300 Beef Cattle offered and sold at 6,50 a 7,00.—Bicknell.

PITTSBURGH, April 9.—Flour has advanced: sales of about 500 bbls. early in the week at 2,75; 100 bbls. yesterday, 3,06, and it is now brisk at 3,00, and for very choice brands 3,06¼ a 3,12½ from boats and wagons, and 3,25 to 3,50 from stores.

Bacon—Is plenty and dull; sales at 5 to 5,50 per 100 lbs. hog round; 10 casks Shoulders sold for 4½ cents currency.

Sugar—Sales of about 30 hhds. in lots to the city, 7½, and in bbls. to the country, 8 to 8½ cts. per lb.

Coffee—Stocks fair; 50 bags Rio at 12½, 4 months.—Harris.

MASSILLON, April 8.—Wheat, 56 cts. Flour per barrel 2,75, Pork do 12,00, Pork per cwt. 3,00.—Gazette.

LOUISVILLE, April 9.—Bacon—hog round, lb 5½ a 6 cts; sides 5½; shoulders, 4½ a 5; hams, 6½ a 7.

Coffee—Rio, 12¼ a 12½ cts: Havana, 12½ a 13 cts.

Sugar—New Orleans, hhd 6½ a 7 cts; New Orleans, bbl 7½; Havana white, 12 a 12½.

Molasses—New Orleans, 26 a 27; Sugar house, 45 cts.

Fish—Mackeral, No. 1, 18,00 a 18,50; No. 2, 15½ a 16; No. 3, 12 a 12½; Cod, dry, 5½ a 6 cts.

Flour—From stores, per bbl, 3,62 a 3,75.

Lard—Lard per lb, 7 a 7½.—Western World.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On Sunday, the 11th inst., by the Rev. T. Fairchild, Mr. JOHN W. WHITE to Miss CATHARINE, daughter of Colonel JACOB P. SPRINGER, both of Springfield township.

On February 4th, by Rev. I. Thrap, Mr. JOHN GOODIN to Miss NOTY MORRIS, the former of Coshocton and the latter of Licking county, Ohio.

On March 25th, by the same, Mr. THOMPSON TRACY to Miss MARY CASTEEL, both of Licking county, Ohio.

OBITUARY.

DIED—On Wednesday morning, about 11 o'clock, TREVANION B. DALLAS, Assistant Judge of the District Court of Allegheny county, Pa. —Pittsburgh Intel., 10th inst.

ITEMS.

Mr. Chitty, the celebrated English law-writer, died in London on the 17th Feb. aged 66 years.

The Bank of England employs seven hundred clerks, and stands in four parishes; to the poor of each it presented recently £100.

COLONIZATION.—The American Colonization Society will despatch a vessel from New Orleans for Liberia on the 15th inst. The receipts of the Society for the month of March amounted to 3,899,54, dollars of which 1,170 dollars were the proceeds of camwood, per brig Hobart, from Liberia. The largest contribution for the month from any one State is 671 dollars—from Mississippi.

DRY WEATHER.—Dates from the 20th February, from Missouri, state, that there has not been a drop of rain during the whole winter, and only about four inches of snow altogether. The street and roads were dry and in fine order.

ACCIDENT.—On Sunday, the 4th inst., a lad fell into a river, at Hartford, Conn., and, after sinking twice, was fortunately rescued by a gentleman of that city, who plunged in after him, at the imminent peril of his own life.

EMIGRATION.—The unsettled state of affairs in Europe, has caused a considerable increase of emgration to this country—it is supposed that not less than 60,000 persons will this year take up their abiding place in this land of the free.

DEATH.—We regret to announce the decease of Dr. Samuel Calhoun, professor of Materia Medica, in the Pennsylvania College. He expired on Wednesday morning, after a short illness.

THE REVOLTS OF THE HILDEBERGERS.—The Schoharie Patriot states that 300 of the tenants of the Van Rensselaer estate, near Albany, have had a meeting at Livingstonville, and unanimously resolved to pay no more rent. They allege that there is some defect in the landlord's title.

AN AMERICAN ARTIST ABROAD.—We learn with pleasure that Mr. George Freeman, an American artist of high talent, and lately a resident of this city, is now in Londen, and engaged in painting a portrait of Queen Victoria.—Phil. paper.

Walter Forward, Esq. of Pittsburgh, Pa., has been appointed, by the President, First Comptroller of the Treasury. Mr. F. has accepted the appointment.

Green peas are for sale in New Orleans, at the rate of a Picayune a piece. Ten dollars would furnish a small man with a big mouthful.

The Swedenborgians in this country number four thousand members and thirty-eight ministers. They have three periodicals. Twenty-five years have elasped since their first introduction.

The banks are disposed to discount more liberally, but evince no intention of loaning upon stocks. They will, as is undoubtedly most judicious, confine their accommodations to discounts of mercantile paper. Private capitalists however, are quite willing to advance on stock securities, and comparatively little difficulty is experienced in effecting loans upon substantial securities.

The market for domestic exchanges has generally improved, and transactions are easily effected at better rates. In Sterling we note little alteration.—Bicknell, 13th inst.

The Banks of Virginia suspended specie payments on Tuesday last, 6th instant. There has been a partial suspension in Georgia.

The Legislature of Michigan have passed an act authorizing the suspension of specie payments by the Banks of that State for two years. The State Bank had previously resumed.

The Maryland Legislature has passed a law releasing the Banks from the penalty of 12 per cent., incurrence by the suspension of specie payments, until the year 1845.

The Committee of Investigation, in the matter of the Bank of the United States, report that each share is worth 46 dollars.

The Rev. Mr. Maffit has been elected Professor of Elocution and Belles Lettres, at St. Charles, Missouri.

The new trial of Dr. Eldridge is to be proceeded with immediately. All legal obstacles have been removed.

HOW QUEENS LIVE.—The privy purse of the Queen of England amounts to £60,000 per annum, or 164l. 7s. 10d. a day. The Queen's income annually is £415,000, or £1,137 a day.—Queen Aldalaide receives £100,000 a year, or £274 a day.

The aggregate amount of Treasury notes outstanding on the 1st instant, was 6,301,424,07 dollars.

The Chartists of Glasgow have declared for the repeal of the Union between England and Scotland.

MR. GILBERT'S MONEY RECOVERED.—The Boston Atlas says:—"A letter was yesterday received by the Mayor from the Mayor of New York, stating that a villain had been arrested in that city, in whose possession was found all the money stolen some days ago, from Gilbert and Sons, brokers, in Exchange street. It appears that the rogue was an accomplice of Williamson, alias, Webb, and that there is a third partner in the firm, whom the police are in pursuit of. The District Attorney endeavored on Monday to effect a compromise with Williamson in regard to the late robberies, provided he would make a full disclosure of all his accomplices, and restore the property, but Williamson sternly refused the terms. Yesterday the robber relented, and offered to tell the whole story. It came too late. The intelligence from New York rendered his confession useless. Mr. Gilbert went to New York yesterday to get his money.

THE PRESIDENT'S REMAINS.—It is said that the body of President Harrison will be temporarily deposited in a vault at the Congressional Cemetry at Washington, and will be subsequently removed to the ancient residence of his ancestors in Virginia. When this event shall have taken place, the State of Virginia will have within her limits, the mortal remains of six of the nine that had ocupied the high station of President of the United States.

BANKING HOUSE DESTROYED.—The branch of the State Bank of Illinois, located at Galena, was destroyed by fire on the 29th ult. The fire originated in the Cashier's room; the damage sustained was not great, though the vault which contained the money was somewhat injured.

MILK SICKNESS.—Dr. Drake, of Cincinnati, has published a pamphlet, giving the result of his investigations into the character and causes of this disease.

FROM ANTWERP.—The Boston Journal observes: We have already referred to the ferment on the other side of the Atlantic, occasioned by the differences between England and this country. War is talked of on the continent as an event quite likely to take place, and these rumors have had a sensible effect on the prices of American produce, as well as the rates of insurance.

U. S. BANK.—A further reduction in the number of Clerks employed in this institution, took place on Tuesday last.—The number discharged was thirteen.

We are informed that the cause of the late arrival of the cars with the mail on our Rail Road on Sunday was a fall of rain near Branchville, of such violence, as to wash the sand over the rails and render the road impassable until the sand was cleared away.—Charleston Mercury, 9th inst.

HOME.—The Hon. Henry Clay arrived at his residence in Ashland, Ky., on Wednesday, the 31st of March, with his health perfectly recovered.

In this city, (Philadelphia,) a recent secession from the M. E. Church, now numbering 85 members, has adopted the Constitution and Discipline of the Methodist Protestant Church, and been duly recognised as an associate body. About three years ago, one society, of some 60 members, which held its meetings in a small School House in Kensington, was the only representative of the Methodist Protestant interest in this region. Now there are four societies, numbering nearly 500 members, with two new and commodious Chapels: one of which will acccommodate, when finished, six or eight hundred people, and the other ten or twelve hundred. It is hoped that the other two societies will also be enabled to build before long.—Christian World.

From the Philadelphia Chronicle.

MR BIDDLE'S SECOND LETTER.—It is only common justice to say that Mr. Biddle's defence is plain, open and manly—his conviction of being in the right, has given him confidence—he writes like an honest, upright man! His statement, and that of the Committee, leave very different impressions upon the mind. The question is fairly at issue between him and his successors. The public are the jury, and their verdict must determine the case. There is one thing in Mr. B's second letter, that we cannot comprehend—after he left the bank a profit of 600,000 dollars was paid to his credit. he then says—on winding up the Cotton sales there was a loss of $316,000, still leaving a nett gain of $285,000, which does not seem to be accounted for in any way. The Committee and Mr. B. disagree altogether in their statements of this transaction. Mr. Biddle asserts, and proves, that when his administration terminated, the bank was prosperous, and could pay two dollars for every one of its liabilities.

How in the name of wonder, could his successors, in the short space of two years so have managed and misdirected, as to waste two-thirds of the whole capital? Let them answer—the public voice demands it. Mr. B. says 4 months after his retirement, the dividend committee reported profits, amounting to 4½ millions, and gave a dividend of 4 per cent. for 6 months, and yet in January, 1840, the same committee announce a surplus of 6½ millions, and declare no dividend! Here is an absolute contradiction, evident to all—if 4 millions would pay 4 per cent to Stockholders, surely 6 millions could do no less.

As to J. Cowperthwait's letter of 23d March, 1841, it only goes to prove how badly the affairs of the Bank were managed, by those who directed its fate after Mr. Biddle had retired. The U. S. Bank of Pennsylvania had nothing to do with the short grain crops in England, nor their want of the precious metals; her business was to attend to her own concerns at home—to aid commerce and manufactures, and promote the welfare and happiness of honest industry; instead of which her immense funds were devoted to a few, who commanded millions, for speculating and gambling in public stocks. The hour of retribution is at hand. NECKAR.

MR. TYLER.—The Madisonian gives a general outline of President Tyler's history. It appears that he was born in Virginia, in 1786 or 87, and is therefore 54 or 55 years of age. He was graduated at William and Mary College, and at 21 years of age, was chosen a delegate to the State Legislature, in which capacity he served several years, until he was elected representative in Congress. After a service of four years, he became again a member of the Virginia Legislature, and was soon chosen Governor of the State.

At the expiration of his constitutional term as Governor, Mr. Tyler was elected to the United States Senate, to serve from the 4th of March, 1827, in the place of the late John Randolph, of Roanoke, whom he beat. While a member of the Senate, viz: in 1828, he advocated the election of Gen. Jackson to the Presidency, and for some time thereafter was a supporter of his administration. He was re-elected in 32-33, and continued until the Legisature gave him instructions which he could not obey; when he resigned. The Madisonian says of him, that he is:

"Urbane and courteous in his manners—moderate and self-controllable in his passions—To purity of intention, he also unites that spirit of independence, which distinguished his father. In political faith he is a Jeffersonian, Madisonian Republican, and has always perferred moderation rather than partaken of ultraism. To his hands are the "powers and duties" of the office of Chief Magistrate of this mighty nation now committed. That he will exercise and discharge them with honor to himself, and glory to the country is our fervent wish, and confident hope. His known honesty and faithfulness is a guaranty that, if public affairs are not administered in a manner to receive popular applause and support, it will not be his fault."

ROBBERIES.—Boston is becoming famous for robbers and rascals. Not only do burglars prowl over the city, but highway robbers infest the roads running out of that city. Last Thursday a daring robbery on the highway was perpetrated near Medford. A Mr. Hovey was knocked down and robbed.

CITY DEATHS.—The number of interments in this city last week, was 119, of whom 37 was under two years of age.—Philadelphia paper.

A quarterly meeting will be held in Zanesville, including the second Sabbath in May. Brother Fairchild desires the attendance of as many of the neighboring ministers as can make it convenient.

Br. Marshall, of Cambridge circuit, gives us the name of James Secrest, who he says wants to become a subscriber for our paper in a few months hence; that he had subscribed for the paper to "John Herbert, but that he had only got one solitary number, and does not feel himself bound to pay for what he had never got." Now, we have sent the paper regularly to James Secrest to Hoskinsville from the commencement,—either the post master must be greatly deficient in duty or Br. James must be a very big villain. We are not of opinion that old Paul himself could stand such boring as this.

The third Quarterly meeting for Adamsville Circuit, will be held on the 22d and 23d of May at Prospect meeting house, near the old Camp-ground. Br. Foster, the superintendent invites his brethren of the ministry to attend.

STRANGE HUNT subscribed for our paper at Amelia, Clermont, Ohio; after we had sent to that office for some time the P. M. informed us he had gone thence and his paper was not taken from the office. Some time after we received a letter from him stating in substance, that he much valued our paper, and wished us to send it to his address to Batavia, and the cash should shortly be forthcoming. The P. M. at that place now informs us that he has "left the county."—We should judge, really, that it would be a "Strange Hunt" to find such a man as this; meanwhile, should any of our agents accidentally ascertain his whereabouts, they will much accommodate us by presenting him with a bill of four dollars.

A quarterly meeting will be held for Miami circuit, on the 29th and 30th of May, at the house of Joseph Parke, ten miles north of Sidney, Shelby county, Ohio. Br. J. M. Flood, the superintendent, solicits the aid of Brs. McGuire, Young, Hunt, Devore and Bassett on the occasion.

Br. Isaac Edward, of Highland circuit, pressingly requests the attendance of Brs. Clemmons, Dobbins, Dalbey, Euans and Boyd, at his quarterly meeting, commencing on the 15th of May. It will be held in Fernow's school house, two miles east of Greenfield, Ohio.

The P. M. at Holliday's Cove, Virginia, informs us the paper of George Hughes has not been taken out of the office for the best part of the year. How is this, Br. George?

Br. Hozey, we are not sure that any Books belonging to the church, can be procured without sending to Baltimore. To send the money by some merchant, of your neighborhood, who could pack them with his goods would be the better way. Address the Book Committee.

GRAFTED FRUIT TREES WANTED.—If any of our readers have the article within fifty or one hundred miles of this place, or if there be any in their neighborhood, if they will inform us we will advertise for them, and probably send a merchant for a lot. Be so good as to let us know the kind of fruit, the age of the scions, and the price per 100. Address C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio, and you will confer a favor.

Mormonism, or Knavery Exposed.

Now in the press, and will be immediately published in pamphlet form, a History of the Mormons, giving an account of the discovery of the golden plates from which their Bible is pretended to be derived, the translation, and various tricks resorted to; the proceedings at Kirtland, building a temple, increase of the disciples; establishment of a bank, a correct specimen of its notes of which two hundred thousand dollars worth have been palmed off upon the community; persevering efforts of Mormon preachers, and spread of the doctrines; the manner in which the community of Frankford, Pa., rid themselves of the Mormons; evidence of the depraved and swindling character of the Mormon leaders, and their fraudulent practices, as derived from documents printed by order of the Senate of the United States; incidents in the life of "Jo Smith," the ring leader in this scheme for fleecing the poor and defrauding the community under the cloak of a religious imposture. The whole being designed as a caution to the ignorant and unsuspecting against one of the most barefaced, blasphemous and wicked devices which has ever been witnessed in this country, not excepting that of the notorious Mathias, whose career of swindling and depravity was arrested by a criminal prosecution in New York. The Mormon imposters are so far successfully carrying out the most revolting features of that disgusting trick, affording a lamentable exhibition of the credulity and weakness of human nature, in so readily allowing itself to be made the dupe of artful and designing knaves.—Price 12½ cents single copies, or ten copies will be forwarded by mail or otherwise for one dollar.

Address, E. G. LEE, Philadelphia.

☞Editors of newspapers generally who may feel disposed to aid in guarding the community against a gross imposition, and will copy the above advertisement, shall have a few copies of the Exposure forwarded to their address.

MISCELLANEOUS.

By Request.

1st. Ye people that wonder at me and my ways,
And with much astonishment on me do gaze,
Come lend your attention and I will relate,
My past exercises and my present state.

2d. The people I follow I once did despise,
And oftimes like you gazed on with surprise,
I gazed with a mixture of pride and disdain,
But still from their meetings I could not refrain.

3d. I oftimes did jest at their sighs and their groans,
But sometimes in secret was made for to moan,
Their shouting and mourning gave me such offence,
I thought it delusion and naught but pretence.

4th. I oftimes resolved I'd hear them no more,
But still on occasions would go as before,
Although persecuting I still would return,
The sparks of conviction began for to burn.

5th. The word clothed with power at length reach my heart,
I sat under preaching and there felt the dart;
I strove to conceal it but all was in vain,
To pray, weep and tremble it did me constrain.

6th. I sunk down in sorrow, so deep my distress,
I lay for some hours almost motionless,
Till Jesus in mercy His love did reveal;—
A wonder of wonders, O! how did I feel.

7th. My burden of guilt was removed and gone,
My spirit was joyful, my soul was serene;
I stood up and praised Him without dread or fear,
And should so have done had the whole world been there.

8th. My friends may despise me and foes ridicule,
The wise of this world may esteem me a fool;—
But all their attempts will be fruitless and vain,
For Jesus has blest me and I'll praise His name.

A PRAYER-MEETING OF FORTY YEARS.

A NARRATIVE OF FACTS.

As "one sinner destroyeth much good;" so one devoted christian may do much for the kingdom of Christ. Mr. W——, of ———, New York, was a plain man, a farmer and received in his youth only a very limited common school education. But he studied the Bible diligently, not to theorize, but that he might know the will of God and obey it. His piety was consistent, humble, meek, benevolent, active, uniform. It seldom rose to ecstacy, and never sunk into such apathy or depression that he had nothing to say for his Lord and Master. His light was never hid under a bushel. He was acknowledged by all to be an every day christian. He lived in an out district of the congregation, quite remote from the sanctuary.

At a time when the church was small and but two or three brethren lived in his vicinity, he consulted his pastor and established a neighborhood prayer-meeting, to be held on Sabbath evening in the district school house. In the circle of tattendance there were sixteen or eighteen families, in very few of which the domestic altar had ever been erected.—The meeting was commenced in the year 1800. Mr. W——— led it for twenty years, when, with a hope full of immortality, and a faith which triumphed over death, he entered his eternal rest.

The Lord had provided for this immergency, by preparing others to receive his mantle and discharge his duties. They too have gone to their reward. And now after a lapse of forty years, when death has produced so entire a change that but two individuals of the original heads of families yet live, the prayer-meeting, which no heat or cold, no darkness or storm breaks up, is still sustained and cherished with warm affection.

From the beginning, persons of all ages had been accustomed to attend it.—Though there was seldom any direct address to the small children, some well remember that serious impressions were made on their minds when but four or five years old, impressions, too, which afterwards were revived, never to be effaced. Children should be taken to the prayer-meeting.

During the first year of the meeting several parents and a few youth, were brought publicly to profess Christ. Then succeeded a long and severe trial of faith and perseverance. For fourteen years, very few were added to the church, and "the ways of Zion mourned." Thoughtless and mirth prevailed. Few came to the prayer-meeting, but it was never relinquished. Mr. W———, and one or two others, now in heaven, were always at their post, to pray and speak a word for the Redeemer, to warn sinners of the error of their way and beseech them to be reconciled to God.

During the fourteenth year of this spiritual dearth, these individuals became so deeply affected in view of the condition of the impenitent, and so anxious that "Zion might arise and shine," that after others had retired from the school-house, they frequently remained one, two or three hours in prayer. In the opening spring their hopes were revived. The meeting became full and solemn. Their cries had reached heaven, and the Holy Spirit came down. One evening, a youth, who had been depressed for several days, could no longer suppress his feelings.—He gave vent to his burdened heart by a single expression of warning to his companions, which carried conviction to several other minds; and from that hour a deep solemnity pervaded the neighborhood and resulted in a glorious and powerful work of grace. The means, blessed of God, were personal conversation, family-visiting, and more frequent prayer meeting; all conducted among themselves with very little ministerial help.

This revival continued through the summer, and extended through other parts of the congregation. In fact the evidences of the special presence of the Holy Spirit continued in that highly favored district for two years in which time the work of grace spread over the town and into all the neighboring churches, and hundreds renounced their sins and consecrated themselves to God. In this district the work was great. Nearly every family had now erected the domestic altar, and nearly every adult was rejoicing in hope of the glory of God.

Next their attention was turned to the study of the doctrinal catechism; each answer being given in the language of the Scriptures, without note or comment. This, with devotional exercises, occupied one evening in the week. Parents and their children united in it. God honored the study of His word. While thus engaged one evening, "the Spirit filled the room in which they were sitting," and another work of grace began and extended over the congregation. Other seasons of refreshing have been from time to time enjoyed. Eternity alone can make known the number of souls that have been and will be converted in answer to the prayers offered in that school house.

It is interesting and instructive to trace the histories of families in that district for forty years. Some whole households down to the second and third generations, give evidence that they will be united in the great family above; and of habitual attendants, seldom has one continued long in impenitence.

As another result, not less than ten men have been raised up in these families to preach the blessed gospel. Seven are in the field, and three in a course of preparation. Their labors, perhaps in answer to prayer offered at this meeting have been owned of the Lord in "turning many to righteousness."

These families have also entered warmly into the benevolent enterprises of the age. They have felt deeply, prayed fervently, and contributed liberally for the conversion of the world. It is a district proverbial for peace. A praying people cannot be a contentous people. Those who often meet together before a heart-searching Jehovah will not retain ill-will towards each other. Such are a few of the blessed results; but the whole amount of good effected by establishing and sustaining this little social meeting will not be known till time shall end.

Christian reader, do not forget the prayer meeting. If you have none in your neighborhood, be the first one to propose one and the last to forsake it, and the blessing of many ready to perish may come on you. Does Mr. W——— now regret that he did not give up the prayer meeting during the fourteen years of spiritual dearth? His only lamentation on his death bed was that "he had not done more for the Lord."

[Tract, No. 416.

From the Morning Star.

The Worth of the Soul.—The soul of man is that part which thinks, wills and reasons. It is the immaterial, immortal, invisible power that never dies. Man is the connecting link between heaven and earth; and the soul makes him what he is. The soul was created as a medium through which God designs to exercise his moral government in this world. It was created for God's glory. The soul belongs to God—"All souls are mine," says God, "and the soul that sinneth it shall die."—Now every one hath a soul, and that soul, on the swift wings of time, is approaching its eternal destiny.—If governed by the law of right, it is drawn irresistibly towards heaven; if wrong, it is sinking into the bottomless pit. What danger must that soul be in, that never has repented and sought Christ; danger that never can be appreciated or described until eternity opens. Then its awful cry will be, I am lost; "the harvest is past, and I am not saved." I am beyond all hope, O! my soul, it is sinking; I am gone, forever gone. But who can estimate the loss of a soul? How can we set a price upon that the value of which the blessed Jesus seems at a loss for words to express, when he says, "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul; or what will it profit a man if he gain (not a little part of the world) but the whole?" Nay, the compassionate Lord knew, if the earth had been a solid ball of gold, and every star a diamond, and all had been thrown into the scales, one soul would have outweighed them all; that they were nothing in comparison to the soul. He could see planet dash against planet; and world sink on world. But when he saw the soul, the undying soul sinking, he cries that it is too precious to be lost, I will give myself for that. O, of what value must that soul be that moves all the angels in heaven and the infinite God himself to undertake for its rescue, the price of whose redemption must be the Lamb of God, the richest and best gift of all heaven and earth. O, the soul! the worth of the soul.

"The Son of God in tears,
Angels with wonder see;
Be thou astonished, O my soul,
He shed those tears for thee."

Now if the soul be of such value, that God concerns himself with all the heavenly hosts, about it, how active should ministers and christians be?

O that our thoughts, words and actions, could be brought to bear on this one point, the salvation of the soul. O that all our preaching and praying, and our very lives might be spent for the salvation of the souls of those about us.

From the Youth's Cabinet.

Mary Miller and Helen Parks, or the Folly of Discontent.—Many years ago, I read a story which forcibly illustrated the folly of discontent. It was in poetry, but here is the substance of it, in a dress of plain prose.

A farmer's daughter, I will call Mary Miller, was permitted to take a walk in the fields one Saturday afternoon. She had been to school all the week, and this privilege delighted her very much. She soon left the dusty road, and rambled from hillock to hillock gathering the flowers which pleased her fancy. Sometimes she watched the glassy brook, and listened to the merry birds. Sometimes she bounded after the gay butterfly, and then ran to pick some flowers whose gaudy colors attracted her eye. In short wherever her light heart prompted, her nimble feet carried her.

She was near the road side, when she saw a glittering coach pass slowly by.—There was no one in it but a little girl about Mary's age. A driver sat in front, guided the sleek horses which trotted in their rich harnesses. When the girl wished to stop, he instantly checked them; when she wished to get forward, they started at his word. A footman was on his 'stand' behind. If the little girl saw a flower in the field, or by the road side, she had only to speak, and the carriage stopped while the footman ran to fetch it. In short, she seemed to have no wish ungratified. As Mary looked at the coach, her heart sunk, her feet lost their lightness, and her spirits their gaities and her face its smiles. She walked gloomy along, and with sour looks and pouting lips, she entered her mother's humble dwelling.

"Have you not had a delightful walk, my child?" said she.

"Oh, no," said Mary, pettishly, "I should have enjoyed it pretty well, but Helen Parks came along in her carriage, and when I saw how happy she appeared, with her coachman and footman to wait upon her, and I remembered that I was a poor girl, and must always go a-foot and wait upon myself, I could hardly help crying. If she wanted any thing, she had only to speak, or point to it, and the footman instantly brought it to her. But when I saw something I wanted, if it was ever so far off, I must go and get it myself. I don't mean to walk out by that road any more."

Her fretful voice was scarcely hushed, when Mrs. Parks came in.

"How did your daughter enjoy her ride this afternoon?" said Mrs. Miller, when her wealthy guest had thrown herself languidly upon an uncushioned chair.—Here the reader should know that Helen was lame, so that she had not walked for several years.

"She would have enjoyed it pretty well," said the lady, in a tone of condescension, "but just as she came where she had the finest prospect, she saw a little girl skipping about the field. She watched her happy movements as she ran wherever her fancy lead her, and when she remembered that she could never enjoy herself thus, she said she could scarcely restrain her tears. 'You cannot think,' said she; 'how sad it was to feel that I must be lifted into the carriage whenever I wish to take the air; and when I see a pretty flower, I can never pick it myself, but must wait till some one who works for money can go and fetch it to me.' 'I watched the happy girl,' said she, 'for a few minutes, and she danced so gaily among the birds and flowers, and then ordered the footman to bring me a few daises which grew by the road side; but I soon threw them away,' she added, 'for I could not bear to look at them.' She directed the coachman to drive home that her feelings might no longer be aggravated by the sight of pleasure which she could not share. When the footman brought her in, and placed her carefully upon the sofa, she laid her face upon my lap, and wept profusely. 'Mother,' said she 'I will never ride out by those fields again.'"

Effects of the Gale.—On Friday night, just after dark, the city and neighboring country were visited by a tremendous tornado of wind, rain and hail. In the city a number of railings and trees were blown down. The same effects of the gale were experienced in several parts of the adjoining neighborhood. At Chesnut Hill, a lad named Nice, was killed by the fall of a window shutter, which was blown down by the impetuosity of the wind and which struck him on the head, causing almost immediate death. —Phil. Chron.

Temperate Living.—It is generally found, that the children in families somewhat poor are those that are the most healthy, and as they grow up to manhood have the strongest constitutions.

This is a very strong argument in favor of a plain, temperate manner of living. It is not too much to say that thousands in this day are destroying their health, benuming the faculties of the mind, and unfitting themselves for the duties of life, by high living. Children, especially, are ruined by it. Take heed to yourselves.—Morning Star.

Well Done, Girls.—The girls employed in the factories at Saco, Maine, have "turned out," in consequence of the promulgation of some new regulations which they regard as an infringement of their rights. That's right, girls, stick up for your own interests.

Hardened Villian.—Robinson, the murderer, remains unaffected since his sentence. He refuses to admit ministers of the gospel in his cell, and has kicked the Bible from his door.

Early Marriages.—What will the ladies say to the following remarks of Dr. James Johnson in his "Economy of Health.

"The most proper age for entering the holy bonds of matrimony has been discussed but never settled. I am entitled to my opinion; and although I cannot here give the grounds on which it rests, the reader may take it for granted, that I could adduce, were this the proper place, a great number of weighty reasons, both moral and physical, for the dogma I am about to propound. The maxim, then, which I would inculcate is this—that matrimony should not be contracted before the first year of the Fourth Septenniad, on the part of the females; nor before the last year of the same in the case of the male; in other words, the female should be at least twenty-eight years old. That there should be seven years difference between the ages of the sexes, at whatever period of life the solemn contract is entered upon, need not be urged, as it is universally admitted. There is a difference of seven years, not in the actual duration of life in the two sexes, but in the stamina of the constitution, the symmetry of the form, and the lineaments of the face. The wear and tear of bringing up a family might alone account for this inequality; but there are other causes inherent in the constitution, and independent of matrimony or celibacy.

"In respect to early marriage, as far as it concerns the softer sex, I have to observe, that, for every year at which the hymeneal knot is tied below the age of twenty-one, there will be on an average, three years of premature decay of the corporeal fabric, and a considerable abreviation of the usual range of human existence. It is vain to point out instances that seem to nullify this calculation.—There will be individual exceptions to all general rules. The above will be a fair average estimate.

"On the moral consequences of too early marriages, it is not my intention to dilate, though I could adduce many strong arguments against, and very few in favor of the practice. It has been said that 'matrimony may have miseries but celibacy has no pleasures.' As far as too early marriage is conceneed, the adage ought to run thus—'marriage must have miseries, though celibacy may have have no pleasures.'"

"The choice of a wife, or a husband, is rather foreign to my subject, and has occupied much abler pens than mine, to little advantage. My opinion is, that, were the whole of the adult population registered as they come of age, and each person, male and female, draw a name out of the urn, and thus render matrimony a complete lottery, sums total of happiness, misery, or content, would be nearly if not exactly, the same as upon the principle of selection. This, at first sight, will appear a most startling proposition; but the closer we examine it, the less extravagant it will be found."

George Washington was a man of sense—and his opinions, on any subject, are deserving of respect. He said "the foolish and wicked practice of profane cursing and swearing, is a vice so mean and low, that every person of sense and character detests and despises it.

Sunk.—The steamboat Cinderella, on Sunday morning, struck a snag in Bayou Plaquemine, and sunk and it was feared the boat at least would be a total loss.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe that this book and the preceding have been highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required. Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

OME TO THE THRONE OF GRACE.

BY A. J. WRIGHT.

s therefore come boldly unto the throne
, that we may obtain mercy and find grace in time of need.—Heb. 4: 16.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

A PLURALITY OF CHRISTIAN SECTS.

ction 4. "Every sect must have a creed, discipline or rules, not in words which the Ghost teacheth, but in words which man's teacheth, and this man's wisdom is Anti—or in the place of Christ."

s objection is obviously of close kindred to foregoing—"human legislation." Here the is laid upon the verbiage. So that the might have their creeds and disciplines, ed they were written in the very words of criptures. Upon this objection we remark, hat at the foundation of this objection, lies ale and trite sentiment that we must take ible just as it reads, literally, and that it o explanation, and the addition of any de- on of sentiment touching any moral of- not in the express words of the Bible, or option of a few rules or regulations to car- and advance christian society, is not only ss, but iniquitous. To shew that this is ew of our objectors, we give a quotation or m an author who has written a book a- sects, creeds and disciplines. "Believe no nce, nor interpretation, nor alteration, ridgement of God's word, nor addition to less it be in 'words taught by the Holy .' If you do, your faith will not 'stand power of God,' but in Anti-Christ, in the ons and in the wisdom of men."....."God od of perfect truth. Therefore every thing ys is truth. Therefore every verse, and and letter, and jot, and tittle of the Holy ures is true. And therefore every sensi- every word, every letter, jot, and tittle is believed. It needs no explanation nor in- e to make it true. It is true just as it is, at any addition, interpretation, or amend- ....Therefore all scripture, every verse, word, tter, is to be believed just as it reads."..... anations are a prerogative that God claims, eserves to himself.....Who is it that Christ ppointed to teach the scriptures to the h?.....They [the church] have got to learn he poor and the ignorant man stands on as ground, and many understand the scriptures ickly, and as fully, as the rich and the ed."....."And that this spirit is equally free —and that with it one man can under- the scriptures as well as another. So that shall be no monopoly of divine knowledge." e citations are selected from a work enti- "THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN IS AT HAND."— r. "Samuel Beman." pp. 35, 77, 88, 89.— us are the ways to answer our objectors, in points. But probably if we would exercise atience necessary to reply to every particu- n the different methods, in which they might posed, but few of the readers of the Recor- ould exercise the same patience with us.— will therefore take a summary method, and ad of entering into the discussion of every , comprehended in the system of anthropo- hitical-theology, embodied in the quota- before us, we remark, ) [1.] That if our objectors are correct, we not exercise our understandings while read- he scriptures, for fear of coming to some usions or "inferences," in "words not of oly Ghost," but of "man's wisdom." But ord instructed the Jews to "search the scrip," and to search them is not only to read , but also diligently to exercise their under- dings. Therefore our objectors are wrong, se the Saviour taught otherwise. [2.] To ise our understandings is needless or worse. Needless, because the most profound erudite is to know no more than the most illiterate! Worse, because it would be to attempt a "monopoly" of the things of God! Now with all our regard for the precious doctrine of the spirit's teaching us many things concerning the spirituality of the holy scriptures, we cannot subscribe to this extravagance. What man on earth, in his sober senses, can believe that a brother, wholly untaught in the arts and sciences, or skilled in languages or versed in oriental literature, can "as quickly, and as fully," understand as much of the Bible as Dr. Clarke?

[3.] We dispute the assertion that the scriptures "need no explanation." It might be done at length, but we will endeavor to be brief. (1.) Instance a few passages, nor they the most difficult, to shew the necessity of explanation. Gen. 4: 1. Eve said "I have gotten a man from the Lord." We have heard laughing infidels scornfully pitying the daughters of Eve, because they cannot, like their mother, have "men from the Lord," capable of "ploughing," on the very "day of their birth!" Yet, say our objectors, the Bible needs no explanation or "interpretation, to make it true." And should the minister of the gospel give a word of exposition, to stop the mouths of these scoffing unbelievers, it seems he would be guilty of sacrilege, for God has "reserved that right to himself." Now the addition of only one explanatory word would stop the tongues of gain-sayers, and make the passage plain and intelligible to all. It is the word "child." But this would be to add to the scriptures, a word of "man's wisdom," and those who would receive it would be guilty of having their "faith stand," not "in the power of God," but in Anti-Christ! In 2 Cor. 4: 17. The apostle says, "for our light affliction, which is but for a moment," &c. Whereas the persecutions and divers afflictions of the apostles, all must admit, were both severe and protracted. And yet we must believe these words in their literal signification. In a comparative sense, they are true, and the passage is beautiful, and with the conclusive part of the verse, most captivating in its encouragement. But to view it in this figurative sense, is to open the door for explanation. The precept of our Saviour, Matt. 5: 48. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven, is perfect," surely needs explanation. For our Father in heaven, is absolutely perfect, in all the eternal and unchangeable constituents of his being. But is man, in his best state, on earth or in heaven, absolutely perfect? We believe no man would reply in the affirmative, so that we may withhold the consequences of that position. Take the opposite, that man is not and cannot be absolutely perfect, then the passage requires explanation. And the ground of our objections gives way. Once more, Matt. 8: 22. "Let the dead bury their dead." In this brief passage alone we think the position of our objectors is entirely confuted. For we must understand the words literally, or we must not. If literally, as, say our objectors, then we have the shocking idea of a gross absurdity from the Saviour, viz: Let one dead corpse bury another dead corpse! And if we understand the words figuratively, then explanation is called for. And so it should seem that the word "dead" has not the same signification in both places in this short passage. So that with either view, the objection to exposition is confuted.

(2.) As the scriptures need interpretation, so certainly is it the duty of ministers to do it.—In the legal dispensation, the officiating priests and Levites expounded the law to the whole congregations, and publicly, and in a "pulpit of wood prepared for the purpose."....."So they read in the book, in the law of God distinctly, and GAVE THE SENSE, and caused them to understand the reading." See Nehemiah 8: 4, 8. How directly opposed is this passage to the doctrine of our objectors—that the Bible needs no explanation! Dr. Clarke thinks this plan of preaching, reading and "giving the sense" of the passage, an admirable lesson to the ministers of the gospel With this agrees the direction to them by our Lord, Matt. 28: 19, 20,—"Go ye therefore and teach all nations, &c.—teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," &c. But this implies that the ministers must themselves know the things they are required to teach others; and in order to know them they must be studied. But if ministers do this it seems they commit the sin of at least an attempt to "monopolize" the knowledge of God! However, St. Paul appears to have understood the commission to teach the people out of the Holy Scriptures. Hence in his charge to Timothy, he urges the duty of close application to the study of the scriptures. "Till I come, give attendance to reading," &c. 1 Tim. 4: 13—and verse 15, he says, "meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them." And in 2 Tim. 2: 15, he says, "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Why all this charge to Timothy, if the illiterate "as quickly and as fully" understands the Bible as the erudite?—Whom shall we believe, Mr. Beman or St. Paul.

(3.) [1.] If our objectors are correct, Bishop Hedding was not incorrect in his notorious syllogistic fallacy to subserve the cause of slavery. In his celebrated "address," he argues that before the abolitionists could prove that the Bible prohibits slavery, they must produce a passage to this import, "thus saith the Lord, thou shalt not own a slave." But no such a passage can be produced from the Bible: therefore the Bible does not prohibit slavery. So that it seems while the Bible severely reprehends every essential limb and ligament of the odious body of slavery, yet because there is no passage which names the body of the evil, in so many words, therefore the system is not condemned. Can Mr. Beman himself believe this? He may, for it would seem the Bishop did.

[2.] But not the sin of slavery alone cannot be condemned from the Bible—the Holy Bible, according to the hypothistical position of our objectors, but also every other abomination not mentioned by name with or "thus said the Lord," in words "uttered by the Holy Ghost!" Out of the thousands of evils not mentioned by name in the Scriptures we might notice two or three.—Horse racing is not prohibited by express statute in the law of God. Therefore, according to the doctrine of the objection, it is not forbidden by the Scriptures. And consequently should any christian sect, in their discipline, add horse racing to the practices forbidden in the Bible, it would be to incur the displeasure of the Almighty to such a degree that he would most assuredly add to such anti-christians, "the plagues which are written" in the book of God. Bull-baiting is no where prohibited in the words of the Holy Ghost; therefore that miserable practice, agreeably to our objectors, is not unlawful. And, of course, the church has no right to censure a member for such low-lived and cruel practices. Once more. There is no passage in all the Bible which says, thus saith the Lord, thou shalt not play cards; therefore our objectors cannot scripturally condemn that wretched practice! For, to explain, is to usurp the prerogatives of the Almighty. And to reason, according to the principle or spirit of other passages, is to put man's wisdom instead of words uttered by the Holy Ghost, and that is Anti-Christ!

(4.) But our objectors themselves practically confute their objections. A specimen or two from Mr. Beman. [1.] In regard to the liberal signification and understanding of the Scriptures. He, Mark 16: 14, 18, "He that believeth and is baptised, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned—AND THESE SIGNS SHALL FOLLOW THEM THAT BELIEVE. —In my name shall they cast out devils—they shall speak with new tongues—they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them—they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.. This title is definite—it is clear—it is strong—it is invulnerable—it is glorious. From this it is certain that the right and title of believers to salvation is not more definite, clear, strong and positive, than their right and title to all those miraculous gifts of the spirit. I say, the right and title of believers to all these miraculous gifts of the spirit is as clear and as strong as their title to salvation. If it is universally true, in every part of the world, and in every age of the world, that believers will be saved, and that unbelievers will be damned—then it is also universally true, in every part of the world, and in every age of the world, that believers will, in the name of Christ, cast out devils—and speak with new tongues—and take up serpents—and drink deadly poison and not be hurt—and lay hands on the sick and heal them. If these signs were limited to the primitive church, then must salvation by faith and damnation by unbelief be also limited to the primitive church and to primitive times."..... "Mark 9: 23—If thou canst believe, ALL THINGS ARE POSSIBLE TO HIM THAT BELIEVETH. Therefore, faith is omnipotent; and every believer has faith, since to believe is faith." pp. 131, 132, 136. To this self-evident absurdity, it would seem, another word need not be added. Suffice then to say, that we are willing to rest the matter here. Can Br. Beman himself work these miracles?—is he literally omnipotent? Or can any other believer on earth? Or is there not a believer in the world? [2.] Unexpected as it may appear to some, this same Mr. Beman, in the same book where he so unmercifully condemns the practice of the sects of explaining the scriptures to the church, himself explains! And to a great extent—and to the "church," and in words not of "the Holy Ghost," but of "man's wisdom." Yes, he occupies several pages in Hebrew and Greek criticisms and explanations of the word "covet." And this after his instruction to the church, to "believe no inference, nor interpretation, nor alteration, &c. of God's word;" and as for "explanations," he says they "are a prerogative that God claims and reserves to himself. Who is it that Christ has appointed to teach the scriptures to the church?" How then can we believe him?—is he not, according to his own shewing, Anti-Christ?

A SUGGESTION.

It has been very justly observed,—Now Mr. Editor I pray you publish this secret and spread it as widely as possible; make our ministry understand and feel the force of this sentiment, and if they are wise they will encourage and promote by all means in their power the cultivation of music among their people, and exert themselves to sustain a good choir. They who neglect it must not be surprised, nor ought they to complain if their churches should not be so well attended as some others. Good singing covers a multitude of defects in other departments of the church service. MUSICAL VISITOR.

THE CHILD THINKS HE HAS GREATER WISDOM THAN THE PARENT.

We find it not uncommon that the off spring thinks he is in possession of greater wisdom than the parent, although his observation has been limited, and his years few. An aged and truly apostolic man, Dr Adam Clarke, gives quite a different account of choir singing, to that of the above writer. After an experience of fifty or more years in the ministry, he never found out the secret that the "Musical Visitor" has arrived at. For, says the Doctor, "I have never known one case where there was a choir of singers that they did not make disturbance in the societies, and it would be much better in every case, and in every respect, to employ a precentor, or a person to raise the tunes, and then the congregation would learn to sing. The purpose of singing would be accomplished. Every mouth would confess to God and a horrible evil would be prevented, the bringing together into the house of God & making them almost the only instrument of celebrating his praise, such a company of gay, airy, giddy and ungodly men and women as are generally grouped in such choirs; for voice and skill must be had, let decency of behaviour and morality be where they will. Every thing must be sacrificed to a good voice in order to make the choir complete and respectable. Many scandals have been brought into the church of God by choirs and their accompaniments. Why do not the Methodist preachers lay this to heart?" He adds; "most of those who are employed in choir singing, being the least spiritual part of the church of Christ, generally proud, self-willed, obstinate and untractable; be-sides they uniformly hinder congregational singing; the congregation leaving this work to them, they desiring it so to be left." [See Dr. Clark's life.] There is one particular idea advanced by the "visitor" that is good. "Singing," says he, "covers a multitude of defects in other departments of the church service". We leave the reader to draw the contrast betwixt the Doctor and the musical visitor.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MORGAN, O., APRIL 12, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having to write to you on business, I would also, by way of quarterly report, say that the Lord has not forgotton to be gracious to us on this Circuit. Since Conference we have organized three new societies, received 29 members into the church, and are expecting a a further accession. At our second quarterly meeting which was held at this place, on the 30th and 31st days of January last, we were favored with the labors of Bro. W. Turner from the Mahoning circuit. The Lord was manifestly present. It was a blessed meeting to the people of God, of different orders. Some sinners were brought to see their need of an interest in the Saviour, and could the meeting have been protracted, we are pursuaded would have resulted in a revival.

Br. Heath, and myself, at the invitation of our Baptist brethren in Conneautville, in about three weeks after the quarterly meeting, commenced a protracted meeting in that place, which resulted in much good, especially to professors; backsliders were reclaimed, and some awakenings. The organization of one of the societies above mentioned was the result of that meeting. We have now nine societies in this circuit, and 101 members.

Our brethren at Conneautville, Crawford Co., Pa., with myself are anxious to have Br. Reeves visit them, and hold a protracted meeting there, some time in June next, if he can make it suit his arrangements. If Br. Reeves will let me know either by letter, or through the Recorder I will have an appointment for him. Br. Heath wishes me to say that his health has been so far recovered that if the friends on the Sandusky circuit are not supplied, and should wish, he could serve them. Our next quarterly meeting is to commence on the 8th of May next at Hartsgrove.

I am yours in Christ,

A. K. EARL,

Grand River Ct.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

RACHEL YATES, the subject of this notice, departed this life the 10th of January 1841, after a protracted pulmonary disease. She was born and raised in the State of Kentucky by Baptist parentage; and after her matrimonial connexion with Br. Isaac Yates, she moved to this county, about the year 1821, and some time afterward attached herself to the M. E. Church, where she remained, an ornament to her profession, until last June, when she attached herself to the M. P. Church. When, under the administration of our worthy brother, James Edminson forty, or more, came out on the side of liberal principles, she and her companion were among the rest.

In the early part of this conference year, when this writer first became acquainted with the deceased, she was far gone with her consumptive desease. But her main conversation was about the interests of the world to come, and frequently praised God aloud in view of her coming prospects. In her feeble and reduced state she desired to receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and while she was partaking of the sacred emblems, the spirit of the Lord, was present, and she was made joyful from the prospect of soon partaking of the fruit of the vine anew in the Kingdom of God. In fine, she died in hope of a blessed immortality, but has left a husband and twelve children to mourn her loss.

Yours as ever,

JOS. SIMPSON.

For the Western Recorder.

Through the mysterious dispensation of Providence we are called on to condole our friends because of the loss of a worthy sister in Christ.

SARAH LINDER, consort of Harvey Linder, of Adams township, Muskingum county, Ohio, departed this life on the 28th of February 1841, in the 26th year of her age. Though taken from that sphere of influence, which as a friend, a wife a mother, she bid fair to fill with honor to herself, and usefulness in the circle of her acquaintances, we hopefully trust she has found a resting place in Abraham's bosom; the heart-striken husband and bereaved children need not mourn as those who have no hope, for her life and deportment evinced she had learned of Christ, who has no doubt taken her to himself.

A few days before her death, sister L. was called to mourn the loss of an interesting and promising daughter about four years of age.—This event, no doubt, had a tendancy to disengage the affections of the mother from a lingering attachment to this world, seeing her ties had already increased in heaven. Under these circumstances she was enabled to endure her illness with a fortitude worthy of her calling, and confidence in Christ. She departed shouting "glory" to God!—giving unequivocal testimony that Christ was with her.

Sister Linder was about the first who left the M. E. Church to form a class in her neighborhood under the pastoral charge of the Methodist Protestant church. In this she evinced a firmness to principle which is worthy all praise.

With faith let us follow her flight,
And mount with her spirit above,
Escaped to the mansion of light,
And lodged in the Eden of love.

Yours, affectionately,

THOMAS FOSTER.

AGRICULTURAL.

DEFINITION.—Agriculture has been defined to be "the art of making the earth produce the largest crops of useful vegetables at the smallest expense;" but this definition we consider defective, for Agriculture is a science, as well as an art, and it embraces useful animals in its range, as legitimately as useful vegetables. The science of agriculture then, we would define to be, a knowledge of the laws of nature which determines the existence and govern the propagation, food, lodging &c., of such animals and vegetables as contribute to the comforts of man. And as an art, it embraces the manual operations necessary to carry out into practical and profitable effect, the principles of the science. Inclusively, agriculture comprehends all the knowlege, and all the operations, by which animal and vegetables are subjected to the use of man.

Agriculture must therefore be a subject of universal interest; for all men subsist in continual dependence upon it, either in direct dependence upon the produce of the animal and vegetable kingdoms, provided by themselves, or, in dependence for their supplies, on those who do so provide them. Hence accordingly all profess to respect, admire and love this useful and honorable vocation; and yet, it has rarely, if ever, occupied the high ground to which, by its vast importance it is entitled. One cause of this may be that it has generally received less of direct legislative encouragement, than any other branch of human industry. Another cause probably is, that too frequently those who have attended to agriculture as a science, have regarded the art, or operative part of it as mental and ignoble, while those who practice it as an art, treading in the beaten path of hoary custom only, regard all notions of science in agriculture, as mere affectation of superior knowledge on the part of those whom they regard as knowing less on the subject than themselves. Hence we find very generally, the more learned of community, regarding the operations of husbandry beneath them; and a large proportion of the less learned, entertaining strong prejudices against the introduction of any thing like science into agricultural matters.

When the speculative agriculturist shall learn that it is honorable to labor and the operative husbandman shall learn that it is profitable to study, then shall this noble art and useful science, occupy its proper ground.

HISTORY OF AGRICULTURE.—Man, in his estate of primeval innocence, was charged with the duty of dressing and keeping the garden of Eden. The deity seeming to regard the happiness of man, even in a state of innocence, as incomplete, until employment suited to his pure nature was assigned him in the delightful department of horticulture.—And in the family of our first parents, we find one employed as a "tiller of the ground," and the other as a "keeper of sheep;" that is, one employed himself in animal, the other in vegetable culture. The vine was cultivated in the days of Noah, and Abraham and Lot abounded in herds and flocks.

The ancient Chinese made great advances in the art of tillage. Long before the commencement of the Christian era, agriculture was the chief employment of that people. It is said that the Emperor of China, on the celebration of a certain annual festival, performs the office of husbandman, and ploughs and sows with his hands. This is doubtless done to encourage his subjects to emulate the example of their prince; and it authorizes the inference that he duly appreciates the important bearings of that branch of labor, on the prosperity of the Empire.

The ancient Egyptians, possessing the advantage of a fertile soil, paid early attention to agricultue. More than ten centuries before the Christian era, the duty of cultivating the earth was enforced by many religious maxims. "Tillage, as well as other momentous concerns, was immediately under the priestly families, who of old taught their subjects to drain the marshy Delta. When Sesostress was king of Egypt, agriculture received every encouragement and support. Under the Ptolemies, Egypt rose from a plundered province, to an independent kingdom, and the quantity of grain exported to other countries attests the general attention paid to agriculture.

The ancient Greeks owed their civilization in some measure to the Egyptians, and probably received most of their agriculture knowledge from that nation. Hesiod, the contemporary of Homer and other Greek authorities, wrote on the subject.

The Romans, at a very early period were both agriculturists and soldiers. The most illustrious Romans, eagerly coveted the blessings of rural life, and far from regarding agriculture a degrading employment, or that it lessened their dignity, they sought it above every other occupation. Cincinnatus and Cicitus, after defeating the enemies of the commonwealth, were content to cultivate their little farms. Among the Roman authors who wrote on agriculture, Virgil and Columella hold the most distinguished place. The Georgics of Virgil, written for the revival of agriculture, when greatly depressed by the devastations of civil war, are replete with useful precepts,—evince an intimate acquaintance with all that was then known in that department, and can hardly be read by a modern farmer without profit.

The introduction of chemistry, natural history, &c. into agriculture, as valuable auxiliaries, has opened a new field of research to the philosopher, and a new field of profit to the intelligent farmer, who is thereby enabled to prosecute his vocation, with much more pleasure, certainty of success, and consequent reward for his labor and expenditure.

From the Olive Branch.

THE REV. SAMUEL PHILIPS OF PROVIDENCE.—This gentleman has recently been prosecuted by a fair dulcina, for a breach of promise of marriage. The promise was made some four or five years since. Mr. Phillips was rather a popular clergyman in the Methodist E. Church. He was a buxom young parson of some 23 or 24 years of age, and his lady-love a tender-hearted lass of nearly forty. She saw he was the right sort of a customer, and set her cap accordingly, and by her blandishments obtained from him a promise of marriage. After moving out of her neighborhood, second thoughts induced him to reflect on the propriety of marrying a person nearly old enough to be his mother, which induced him to use such means as were in his power to get rid of his engagement to the lady. She finally signed an agreement to indefinitely postpone her marriage with him, and he was retained year after year in the ministry, and even ordained. Dr. Fiske plead his case when the girl complained to conference. Mr. Phillips finally married another and a very worthy young lady, when the injured fair one's wrath knew no bounds. By the aid of her brother-in-law, another Methodist preacher, she got Mr. Phillips deposed from the ministry, and excinded from the church. On a fair examination of all the circumstances, he was restored to communion, but not to the ministry.—The woman was not content to stop here, but pursued him in the civil courts, demanding as a satisfaction to her lacerated feelings, the trifling sum of five thousand dollars, of which the Jury awarded her the full amount;—probably because they thought it her last chance, and the disappointment is said to have greatly impaired her health. The whole is an unfortunate affair to both parties. She will go cheerless to the grave, and he, broken down from a place of much usefulness, must wear out his life on the boot maker's bench, a trade to which he had fortunately served his time before preparing for the ministry. The case produced much excitement in Providence. The letters passing between the parties were a little the cutest we ever did see. We hope the case of Mr. Phillips will be a caution to all young men, and young ministers in particular, not to make promises to ladies which they may afterwards find inconvenient to perform. Mr. Phillips has no property, and it was known to his fair prosecutor. Her object, or that of her advisers, must therefore have been a hope to injure him without expecting gain. Had the damages been smaller, Mr. Phillips' friends would have paid them; as it is, he goes to prison, and in seven days takes the poor man's oath. Thus ends this tragi-comedy.

The sincerity of the heart discovers itself in the end, aimed at by an action, more than in the action itself. The thief and honest traveller may ride the same road; but they have different aims; and this distinguisheth them.

No man ever repented of being a Christian on his death bed.

FLORIDA WAR.

REMARKS OF MR. EVERETT, OF VERMONT,

On the motion to add to the army bill an appropriation of $300,000 for he suppression of Indian hostilities.

Mr. Everett said it had been his intention to have said something in relation to the protraction of the Seminole war before the debate closed, and that he now felt himself called upon to make some reply to the speech of the honorable gentleman from Florida, (Mr. Downing,) that relates to the late attempt to end the war by a pacification. That gentleman has been pleased, said Mr. E., not only to denounce that attempt, and place the failure to the proper account, and in doing that to relieve myself from all responsibility for its failure.

It is now nearly six years since we began this war; year by year it has been prosecuted at an immense expense; we have already expended something like twenty millions, and, from present prospects may expend as much more, but still have a war continuing on our hands. It is high time to look about us, to look back, and if possible discover the errors, to see what has been done, and what ought to be done.

I shall not undertake to discuss or criticise the merits or demerits of the various campaigns, or the more numerous Generals who have conducted them. No, sir, I am no better qualified for that task than some other gentlemen who have attempted it.

There are, however, some things that lies on the surface that require neither the eye of a soldier, to discover, nor a military education to understand. In my judgment, the main errors have been committed here; and the Executive has been justly chargeable with the consequences of this war.

The first error was in originating the war. That was the sole act of the Executive. The war was begun in the fall of 1835. The alleged ground was to enforce the execution of a treaty said to have been made by the Seminoles. In 1836 I examined this subject somewhat in detail. I will now give a mere outline. In 1832 the treaty at Payne's landing was signed. It was concluded by Col. Gadsden, a gentleman of the highest respectability. It was fairly made so far as he was concerned. It was agreed that a delegation should visit the Western country, to which it was proposed that the Seminoles should emigrate, and if they were satisfied with the country, and with the disposition of the Creeks, (with which nation they, as a separate band were, formerly united,) to re-unite with them as one nation, then they were to emigrate according to the terms of the treaty. It was expected that as a matter of course that, after visiting the Western country, the delegation should return, consult with their people, and give their answer.

The terms of the treaty were, that one-third should emigrate in 1833, one-third in 1834, and the residue in 1835.—The execution of the treaty according to its terms required that the answer of the delegation should have been given prior to the season of emigration in 1833.

The delegation visited the Western country in the winter of 1833-'4, and before their return to the nation, gave a qualified answer, which has been deemed by the Executive as a fufilment of the condition on which the treaty on their part, was to be deemed valid, viz: that they were satisfied with the country and with the disposition of the Creek nation to unite (not re-unite) with them as one nation; and in April, 1834, the treaty was, for the first time, ratified by the Senate. From that date it became a treaty binding on both nations, it could by a ratification of that last date be made binding.

On the return of the delegation, the Seminoles, well understanding the difference in effect, of the terms, uniting and re-uniting with the Creeks, objected to the treaty; and that difference was one of the principal grounds of their refusal to emigrate. To them the difference was material. The Creeks were willing that the Seminoles should commingle with their people, and as individuals, become a part of the Creek nation. This was what the Creeks understood (and so they informed the Seminoles, or so the Seminoles were informed,) by the term unite. But they refused to permit the Seminoles to have a separate location and to continue a distinct band, and, as formerly to become a component part of the Creek nation. This was what they understood was meant by the term re-unite, as used in the treaty. The consequence to the Seminoles was of vital importance. It was this: the Creeks, by a former treaty concluded while the Seminoles were a separate band of that nation, paid to the State of Georgia $250,000 for negroes which the Creeks, including the Seminoles had taken and retained. Soon after the conclusion of the Seminole treaty, all the negroes in the possession of the Seminoles, and even those with whom they had intermarried, and their increase, were claimed by the Creeks as having been paid for by their money; the $250,000 having been retained out of the purchase money for land belonging to Creeks proper. Speculators contemplated purchasing these negroes of the Creeks, and seizing them when the Seminoles should be on the point of emigrating. The Seminoles forcsaw that if they lost their community as a band, they should be at the mercy of the Creeks, who were greatly superior in numbers. This objection raised by the Seminoles was, in my opinion, fatal to the validity of the treaty. The delegation never signified their assent that they were satisfied with the disposition of the Creeks to re-unite with them as a nation. The Creeks refused so to re-unite with them. The treaty, then by its terms, was at an end. The objection, then does not rest in proof—it is apparent on the face of the papers recited in its ratification. The Executive was distinctly informed, by our agent, Gen. Thompson, in 1834 or 1835, that this objection was insisted on by the Seminoles. I am authorized also to say, that Col. Gadden gave the same information to Gen. Jackson when at the Rip Raps in 1835, and advised against the enforcement of the treaty.

Another objection to the validity of the treaty was suggested by Gen. Eaton, then Governor of Florida; and, in his opinion, of so much weight, that he took upon himself the responsibility of suspending the enforcement of it until the Executive should have considered the objection.—His objection, was that the two first years in which by its terms the treaty was to have been in a course of execution, had elapsed before our ratification, and we could not, without a new agreement, require the treaty to be executed in the remaining year. The President referred the subject to the Attorney General, (Mr. Butler,) who gave an opinion that the treaty was valid, as he was not informed that any change in the circumstances of the Seminoles had intervened. He was not probably informed of the claims recently (since the date of the treaty) set up by the Creeks. Mr. Butler, however was of opinion that the Seminoles should have three years to complete their emigration, (1835, '36, '37.)

In the face of both of these objections, the Executive took upon itself the responsibility of enforcing the execution of the treaty. And in the face of the opinion of the Attorney General, it was insisted that the Seminoles should all emigrate in 1835 By threats of military compulsion, the assent of sixteen of the Seminole Chiefs and head men was obtained to complete their emigration during that year.

This agreement, executed, under the menance of a military force then marched into the country for that purpose, was never intended to be performed; and as soon as they were out of the presence of that armed force, our war, already begun, was met. In the speech of 1836, the evidence of the facts is collated, and to that I must refer on this occasion. I then was of opinion that the treaty was of no validity, and that the war to enforce it was unjust. That opinion remains unchanged; and the war, by its continuence, has not changed its character: it is still unjust. The first great error then was the war itself.

But, sir, we are in war. The inquiry is now, how shall we get out of it? It may, however, be material to a just determination to look back to see how we got into it with a proper mode of getting out of it.

The war, I repeat it, was an Executive act undertaken solely on his responsibility. I pass the consideration of the question of the right of the Executive to attempt to enforce the execution of the treaty by an act of war, without the assent of Congress, and proceed to what I call the second Executive error.

The second error was the making the point of honor with the Seminoles—to be determined only at the point of the bayonet—and disdaining all attempts at pacification. The rashness of the first act was evidence of a reckless spirit, which has been carried into prosecution of that war. We made the point of honor when at least we had nothing to gain—and surely we have gained nothing. The Executive would listen to no terms—nothing would do but unconditional submission. In 1836 I endeavored to stay this ruthless spirit, but in vain—it was an Executive measure—an Executive point—and, in this House sustained as an Executive measure. I then proposed to authorize negociation—to give the President the means, if he chose to use them—if you please, for buying the Indians. I did not propose to lessen the appropriations for the war but to use them, if tho't proper, for pacification; but the proposition was rejected. I then thought, and now think, that $500,000 would have secured the emigration of every Seminole. I shall have occasion to recur to this subject again.

I name, as a third error, the underrating the force of the enemy and the obstacles to be overcome, and the consequent underrating the force necessary on our part. I have the means of being assured, by the best authority, that the President rated the Seminole warriors at not exceeding 400. The then Secretary of War rated them at 750. The natural state of the country was sufficiently known but were not duly appreciated. Events have demonstrated that the war was commenced with an insufficient force. And sir, I hold, that with a carte blanche for means, the Executive is justly held responsible for every failure of success; not only for the want of success at first but much more so since. The Executive has had, of money and men, all that has been asked, and when asked.

The fourth error is a natural consequence of the three first, viz: a feverish impatience of instant success. Acting under a fearful responsibility for having plunged the nation into a rash and unjust war, and having held up to the world the enemy as even contemptible, President Jackson and his successor seem to have been impatient of even the necessary time for victory. Hence, sir, we have had, on an average, more generals than companies—Clinch, Gaines, Scott, Call, Jesup, Taylor, Armistead; superseding each other in rapid succession, and sometimes for slight causes. Take the case of Gov. Call. On a newspaper paragraph, somehow elicited, that Gov. Call did not cross the Withlacooche with his troops to the aid of Gen. Clinch, when an officer had crossed three miles (a typographical error for 30 miles) before his official report was received, he was superseded, and the consequence has been that every officer has acted under the same responsibility of having his acts censured and his command taken from him without his fault. The impatience of victory has made the Executive officers here the critics as well as the censors of the acts of officers in Florida, with no means of judging correctly. Take the case of Gen. Call, to which I have referred. Mr. Secretary Butler, a very good lawyer, undertook to judge—it must have been by second sight—he undertook to judge and censure an officer of no inconsiderable experience. In this rapid succession of commanders, acting under this surveillance of incompetence, there could be no system or energy. Success was not to be expected.

I mention an error of no small magnitude—the sanction of the violation of our flag—the white flag—a flag no longer respected by Indians.

I come now to the subject referred to by the gentleman from Florida—the late attempt for pacification. At the last session at my instance, an appropriation of five thousand dollars was made for holding treaties with hostile Indians. It was with difficulty it was obtained. It was adopted by the House, rejected by the Senate—insisted on by the House, and finally agreed to by the Senate. The appropriation was small, too small, but it was as large as I supposed could be obtained. It was stated at the time that its adoption would no doubt be considered by the Executive as an expression of the opinion of Congress that negotiation should be attempted. This opinion was respected. Gen. Macomb was selected. He repaired to Florida, and in good faith, made the attempt. He adopted the only practicable mode of commencing and conducting the business. It was not expected that any formal or written treaty could be made, or that the whole of the Seminoles could at once be consulted or pacified; a beginning was to be made; time was required to complete it. At the last session, I indicated the course that should be pursued; that as we could not send our flag into the country, a Seminole Indian (first conciliated himself) must be sent to the Seminoles to bring in as many as he could; that we should designate a line, and say to them, if you will not cross it we will not. Let them return with presents—with this offer. This was the plan adopted, and successfully adopted. The Indians were then scattered; time was necessary for the offer to reach them: time was necessary to allay the excited passions of the savages, and to make them satisfied that this was not another device to deceive them; until which, occasional acts of hostility were to have been expected. With the course pursued by Gen. Macomb I am entirely satisfied. So far as he was concerned, the attempt succeeded. And why did it ultimately fail? It failed because he was not supported. His arrangement was abandoned and denounced. No sooner had he left Florida than the whole interest supported by the war denounced the arrangement. And the Executive organ here denied that Gen. Macomb had authority to make any arrangement which should permit the Seminoles to remain in any part of Florida. No measures were taken to carry out the arrangement. Of the $5000 only $3000 was expended. Not only was nothing done to aid the pacification, but soon after a military demonstration was made in the Seminole country, for the purpose, it is said, of establishing a trading post—a purpose not know to them. They, no doubt, regarded it as a continuance of hostilities. When Gen. Macomb left, he had no reason to doubt of entire success; and I repeat, the failure is through no fault of his. In my opinion, $100,000, judiciously applied, would at any time have ended the war. I urged attempts at pacification in 1836, but without success.

It is said by the gentleman from Florida that, in consequence of Gen. Macomb's arrangement, the defences of the country were neglected, and that massacres ensued which are to be charged to the $5000 appropriation, and to me as the mover of it. I do not learn that the defences of the country were neglected; active war, was, for a short time, suspended; but, sir, whatever may have been the consequences, they were justly chargeable to the failure in carrying out the arrangement. To that the continuance of the war to this time is justly chargeable.

The expenditure of 20 millions—the hope of expending 20 millions more, has made the war popular with those who profit by it in Florida and elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the continuance of this war. It should be either stopped or ended. I would stop it by refusing all appropriations, or end it by affording adequate means. What is proposed by the appropriation now asked? To continue the war, not to end it. To go on as you have done for the last five years. This appropriation is to be applied to your present means—the regular army and militia, and, perhaps, mounted volunteers—a few marines, sailors, Indians, and last, Cuba dogs. With these, you have had sufficient experience.

I need not repeat that I claim no pretensions to judge of military operations; yet I will venture a suggestion as to the character of the force necessary to end the Florida war. It is not my own invention: it is contained in the bill introduced on leave by the gentleman from Florida, Mr. Downing, and which I would have been glad to have seen put into a more acceptable form. And it was for that reason alone that I voted against laying that bill on the table. The leading principle of that bill is to raise a force in which the officer would have perfect confidence in the men, and the men should have perfect confidence in themselves and in each other. In a regular army, in the open field you may put one coward between two brave men, and the force of discipline may preserve your line, but in Indian warfare, every man must fight for himself, supported by the unwavering confidence that all are doing their utmost. It is not discipline, but the personal qualities of the officers and men, that can end this war, May I appeal to the gentleman before me, Mr. Underwood.

[Mr. U. said that was the character of the force for Indian warfare.]

With the endorsement of that gentleman, I think these suggestions entitled to some consideration. I desire also, to add the opinion of an officer who has seen much of this Florida war, and is now engaged in it, and whose opinion is, with me, entitled to great respect.

In a letter from Florida, dated the 2d December, 1839, he writes:

"Nothing should be expected of the army now in Florida, composed as it is of foreigners and city men, towards overcoming the savages. Before that can be accomplished, we should have four thousand of the best woodsmen and hunters the country affords, on any terms that will bring them; and the operations must be continued, at any expense of life or health, in the summer as well as in the winter.—With such men enlisted into regular regiments, the Indians might be so harrassed and distressed, that in two or three years they would be willing to submit to peace—to emigrate."

I will notice another scheme to continue the Florida war that seems to be a great favorite at the other end of the capitol; I believe it has twice passed that body, but as yet it has no friends here. No one has as yet even asked for its consideration, and now, as formerly, it will expire with the session. For one I never supposed that the military occupation project was intended for Florida, but for another quarter. The bill proposed to settle permanently a cordon of citizens, in military positions, across the territory; in a country where, from the deadly miasma of its everglades and swamps, you have not dared to hazard a summer campaign. The military settlers were to come and die, to be replaced by others who should come and die in rotation. No, sir, as to Florida, this bill was not in earnest. It was introduced by a gentleman from Missouri. Along the whole western line of Missouri, the country is rich and the climate salubrious. I have no doubt, from a bill of a similar character, introduced by a gentleman from Arkansas, that the soil and climate of that State, are in no wise inferior to those of Missouri. This bill, sir, is a mere feeler. It looks not to Florida, it looks not to war operations, but to land speculation in Western States.

But, sir, to return to the appropriation under consideration. Considering it as furnishing means merely for continuing the war, I would rather it should be stricken out. I would stop wasteful expenditure; stop this, stop the resources of speculators, and that will take away by far the greatest interest in continuing the war. Your army and ordinary resources are sufficient for the mere protection of the inhabitants; and if you make it for their interest to have peace, you will be enabled to avail yourself of their interest to procure it. I do not believe that the Seminoles continue the war merely for the love of fighting. So long, however, as you will expend money in the extravagant manner you have done, so long you may have a flourishing Seminole war.

EXECUTION OF PETER ROBINSON FOR THE MURDER OF ABRAHAM SUYDAM.

New Brunswick, Friday, April 16.

At an early hour this morning, the town of New Brunswick was in a state of great bustle and excitement, in consequence of the approaching execution of Peter Robinson. The time appointed for this last awful ceremony of the law to take place, was between the hours of 10 and 2 o'clock.

From the time of day-break until the hour of execution, large crowds of persons were seen entering the town in the hope of witnessing the execution, but it was arranged to be strictly private, no persons, except those privileged by the Sheriff, were allowed to be present.

The jail is a plain two story stone building, one half appropriated to the use of the jailor and his family, and the other half to the prisoners. On one side of the passage, might be seen the laughing children of the jailor, full of mirth and glee, playing, while on the other side of the passage, a fearful scene was about to be enacted. A murderer and a felon, about to pay the penalty of his crimes. What a contrast.

The place of execution was a small enclosure in front of the jail, about six feet in width, and about twenty-five feet in length. In one corner of this space the gallows was erected. Two large uprights, about twelve feet high, were fixed on the ground, and a beam placed across the top. Through this a rope runs connected with a third upright, and to this rope was attached five heavy weights, raised about four feet from the ground.—Between the two first uprights, a small scaffold was raised, about eight inches from the earth. The fence which enclosed this space was about sixteen feet high. Outside of this, was formed in line, two companies of volunteers to keep off the crowd.

During the whole of Thursday the prisoner was attended by several clergymen, including Dr. Howe and Rev. Mr. Pilch, of New Brunswick. These persons continued to sing and pray with him the whole of the day. In the evening, his wife, his brother, and his brother's wife visited him for the last time. When the hour of parting came they were very much affected, but Peter appeared as stocial as ever, not seeming the least overcome. His brother remained with him during the greater portion of the night.—Several persons sat up with him all the night, singing and praying occasionally, but Peter heeded them but little.

The morning, which was cold, raw, and misty, cleared off about 7 o'clock, and the sun shone forth in full meridian splendor. At an early hour the clergymen were again with him, singing and praying, and remained with him until the time of his execution.

About a quarter past ten o'clock, the Sheriff, and jailor, and a gentleman who had prepared a dress for him, for the occasion, entered his cell, at which time we were admitted.

None who knew Peter Robinson before the commission of this mortal murder, or up to the time of his conviction, would now recognize him. Then he was a hale, hearty, muscular man, with firm nerves, and upright gait; now he was but a shadow of his former self. The gnashing of impenitent remorse has done its work on him.

"That juggling fiend that never spake before,
But cries, "I warned thee," when the deed is o'er," had completely overmastered its victim. The sunken eye, the pallid cheek, and the quivering muscle, showed that a fearful struggle had been going on within. The gaze of the morbid and the curious, eager to catch a sight of the culprit, was nothing to him. He had done with the world, and was only anxious to escape from himself, to leap from life to death. Here is a wide field of inquiry for the divine moralist and the philosopher. Here was a man, sober, frugal, and industrious, and yet guilty of the most heinous crimes in the calendar.

The jailor unlocked the manacles on his feet and was about to put the key in the lock of the hand cuffs, when Peter said Mr. Cowenhoven you have not got the right key, you will have to get the other key. Another was brought and the hand cuffs were taken off. A large white muslin dress was then put on him reaching down to his feet. A white cap was also placed on his head. He asked to shake hands with all in the cell before his hands were tied, which he did. He shook hands with the jailor and said, "I hope God will bless you and your family, for you have treated me like a father." His hands were then tied by a rope to his sides, and exactly 23 minutes past 10 o'clock preceded by a clergyman and walking between the Sheriff and the Jailor, he passed through the main passage of the prison on to the scaffold.

The rope was then adjusted on his neck, and instantly, without speaking a word, the Sheriff with a hatchet cut the rope to which the weights were attached, when they fell; the rope that was around his neck, here slipped over the culprit's ears, and he fell with a groan on the scaffold. A shriek of horror burst from all present. Mr. Hoagland, the Marshall, immediately lifted Peter up, and although he appeared stunned with the shock, yet he stood unaided again under the gallows.—He exclaimed when he was placed upon his feet, "The Lord have mercy on me." The Sheriff and Jailor then re-adjusted the rope of death, and the beam-rope being again cut, the weights fell; the prisoner jerked up, and in an instant with one convulsive spasm, of agony, he was launched into Eternity. Not more than 5 minutes elapsed from the time he left his cell, before he was in the arms of death. After hanging the usual time, the body was cut down, and placed in a plain, painted, common looking coffin, to be delivered to his friends.

During the whole time, Peter did not evince the slightest fear or trepidation; he walked from his cell with a firm, careless step, and mounted the scaffold with as much sang froid as one would walk up a stair case. His reckless demeanor astonished every beholder.

The whole time spent, from the unlocking of the manacles, to his final exit, did not occupy more than five minutes. Not a word farther than the short sentence that fell from Peter's lips, after his first plunge escaped either from officers, or spectators, who numbered in all about sixty; among whom, we noticed Attorney General Molleson; District Attorney Vandyke; Mr. Wood, one of the Counsel for Robinson; Mayor of New Brunswick, several of the assistant Judges, and the High Sheriff of New York, who visited the place for the purpose of witnessing the process of execution, which was new to him, though on the same principle as that in use in the State of New York, and different from the form in Pennsylvania.

From the unconcerned manner of the females connected with the prison, who were busily employed in cooking articles for dinner, and the idle prattle of children by their side, and not ten feet from the scaffold, it was next to impossible to realize that an execution was in progress.

Thus ended the occurrences of the day, and thus has retributive justice, ever slow but sure, overtaken its victim. Thus has been taken away, in the full flush of manhood, PETER ROBINSON, expiation to the offended laws of his country.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Evening Si

WASHINGTON, APRIL 15, 18

The new President is now establ in the Executive mansion. He h Cabinet council there to-day, (the that has taken place since the dea Gen. Harrison.) They remained i sion more than two hours. The su before them were the state of our tions with Great Britain, generally more particularly the dispatches t sent to London, and the correspond with the British Minister.

Now, I hope, none of your readers expect me to communicate the purpo these. Under the two preceding Ad istrations there was a laxity of the prescribed by international etiqu which, I trust, will never be counte ced again. While negociations were inchoate, it frequently occurred tha substance of a secretaries letters, foreign minister's replies, or the con nications of one of our national repre tatives abroad got out, through such c nels as gave the publication almos authorized and official character. gave, in several notable instances, g umbrage to foreign governments; with just reason. For they found many things which had been comm cated in confidence had been publi to all America; and, consequently, t Europe. Mr. Webster will correct practice; and our diplomatic affairs be strictly confidential, except when publication of them is compatable the interest of the nation, and the d rum due to the other government There is a morbid curiosity, I know learn all that transpires here in off quarters. The respectable portion of press should not minister to this praved appetency, by giving circula to idle rumors. Whatever is known may be properly communicated, shall hear; but your readers, I trust, look to me for facts not fabrications.

One of the idle rumors of the da that a British fleet, consisting of sev vessels of war, has been seen off Ha ton Roads. I mention it only to there is not a word of truth in the sto in case you hear of it with the custom exaggerations a report gets as it trav

It is the practice, on the accession new President, to take an inventory every article of furniture, all the pointments of the Rooms of State, plate, &c. &c., appertaining to the Ex utive mansion. This is due to the pe —to him who has occupied the Hous and to him who succeeds to it. It is cessary as a preservation against wa and losses by servants, and otherwise Mr. John Tyler, jr., went through t task of inventory, to-day, accompan by Col. Copeland and Mr. Benjamin H rison, Jr. and the Commissioner of P lic Buildings.

President Tyler will make hims emphatically, the "President of the P ple."

The Whig party are eminently for nate in having elected precisely this m to the second office of the Governmen

To his principles no objection can be ken even by the opposition. On the c trary, their leading organs say they co cide with their own; & they furnish the pu lic with long articles which, if they pro any thing, show most incontestibly, th these journals and the party whose gans, they are, ought in good faith, support President Tyler, until at least does something with which they m fairly quarrel.

The sole ground of complaint is th he places the utmost confidence in Ge Harrison's Cabinet. Candid people w hardly think such a thing to be a fa ground of quarrel. It looks too much if certain leaders wanted to bring abo a different state of things, to inure their own advantage. If they were ho est and sincere, they would rather r joice that a man of their own principle as they call Mr. Tyler, has succeeded obtaining the suffrages of the America people.

The Secretary of the Navy returned the City, last evening from his visit North Carolina.

A MURDERER ARRESTED.—Zebedia Payne, who fled to Texas after perpetr ting a savage murder in Tennessee, h been lodged in custody of the sheriff Franklin county, by Abner L. Crossma officer of Galveston Island, who arreste him there, and with much difficulty co ducted him back to Tennessee. The re ward of $500, offered by the Governo and $300 offered by relatives of the d ceased, were promptly paid upon deman but Crossman was not so fortunate in co lecting some farther amounts that wer indirectly promised.

It is worthy of remark that while Te as is somewhat burdened with a reputa tion for receiving and harboring runa ways and culprits of almost every dye her officers display a promptitude in serv ing the ends of justice that might be imi tated in some of our own communities with benefit and advantage to our citizens —*Phil. WHALE OIL.—During March there were imported into this country 15,81 barrels sperm and 36,750 barrels whal oil. These were received in eighte ships, two barks, and one brig.

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE,

EDNESDAY, ... APRIL 28, 1841.

'UNERAL PROCESSIONS.—Most of the principal ies and towns in the Union have had, or are paring, funeral processions in honor of the e President.

☞The following is from the Washington respondent of the New York Signal who writes ril 17:

The ladies of General Harrison's family left shington to-day. They were attended by Col. peland, a nephew of the General's.

It is remarkable that none of the late Presi-t's blood relatives applied or was presented any office, while so many, mere hangers-on, urgently sued, and pressed, and almost de-nded, on the claim or pretence of personal ndship, or old acquaintance, or other familiar ationship. The country will be glad to learn it, since the death of General Harrison, the t disposition has been manifested to provide norably and advantageously for the General's ily. His son-in-law, who would have been private Secretary, (Mr. Taylor,) has been ap-nted Postmaster of Cincinnati. One of his is has been appointed to an honorable and rative office in a new and rising Territory.—two grandsons will be placed at West Point. e salary of President for one year, perhaps, for years, will be voted by Congress, for the efit of the family. The departed patriot will honored and remembered by the people in ry suitable manner. But the nation, and the n and the head of the government should not expected to admit the pretensions of all who nd them on their personal relations toward General, and his kindness and partiality, and o ask for the highest offices—foreign missions d the like—without any qualifications what-r for them.

PRICES CURRENT.—The prices of produce re-ins about a last week. We omit our quota-ns in this paper.

THE WEATHER.—As we anticipated in our t, the heavy shower we then mentioned, was clearing up shower. We have had a light n since to taper off with, but it has re-ined, in general, fine weather. The surface the earth is drying up fast. Monday evening had a shower.

CONFERENCE MISSIONARY.—We have received interesting communication from Br. Reeves late for this paper. It gives encouraging ws from Sandusky circuit, especially from Low-Sandusky.

REV. GEO. STORRS.—The New England Chris-n Advocate says that this gentleman has itten a pamphlet, in which he undertakes to ve, by repeating the arguments of Bourn and lylor, that the wicked will cease to exist after day of Judgment. The Advocate regrets that respectable talents should be wasted on theo-s so far removed from the general tenor of the pel.

PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE.—The Philadel-ia conference of the M. E. Church adjourned the 16th inst. in Philadelphia, to meet next ar in Wilmington, Delaware.

FOR SALE.—Mr. W. G. Clark, of the Philadel-ia Daily Gazette, in consequence of ill health, ers for sale is establishment. It is said to be a of the most permanent establishments in the ty.

MUSKINGUM IMPROVEMENTS.—Every attempt improving our river, heretofore, has rendered more difficult for us to get off with our produce. he last season it cost from 70 to 100 dollars to ke a small trading boat round through the ca-l to Portsmouth, which, if our river had been t as nature formed it, would probably not have st ten dollars to have conveyed it thither.—e tests that the freshets have been giving the rks now being constructed between this and arietta, have excited our fears that they will ove more than worthless. But such notices as e following from the McConnelsville Standard cite our hope a little, if it is only to be blast-by future dispensations.

A steamboat arrived at this place from Zanes-lle on Tuesday evening last. She was built at anesville, and does credit to the builder. We derstand she will ply on this river, in connec-on with a canal line at Dresden, and another at to run on the Ohio from Pittsburgh to Ma-etta. She will probably be down again this eek from Zanesville.

We have been informed that the dam near Waterford Landing cannot be passed. But small eam boats from below may possibly meet the e above referred to, so as to make an imperfect nveyance from our town to the Ohio river.

THE UNITED STATES BANK.—The Philadelphia ourier has the following statements and remarks, relation to the discoveries which the present crutiny into that institution is making;

It is to the stockholders that no facts should e kept back. They have a right to know every-ing. It appears by the report that "forty-eight ndividuals, firms and companies, have discounts xceeding $20,000 each, of whom twenty-seven ave discounts exceeding $50,000 each, and nine xceeding $100,000 each. A similar examina-ion of the suspended debts exhibits as the re-lt of fifty-two individuals, firms and companies, tanding charged on the books of that depart-ent with more than 20,000 each, twenty-nine ith more than 50,000 each, and eighteen with ore than $100,000 each. There are six indi-iduals and firms whose debts amount to 2,314,-00, two of which are over 650,000; a large mount of which will be lost; and four others who ave loans amounting to 569,000."

This is certainly an astonishing expose; but hy are the names withholden? Are not the tockholders entitled to know how and to whom he loans were made? Suppose the implicated ive in "gilded palaces," is that any reason for eeping back their names? The plundered tockholders and the entire public think not, and here is not a man, woman or child, in this or ny other community, (except those who may be mplicated,) who will not say out with every artjcular; and the resolution passed at the tockholders' meeting on Thursday, instructing he new directors to inquire into the true con-ition of the enormous and irregular operations, nd enforce the rights of the stockholders by due ourse of law, is not only cordially approved by very body, but is the only course which is looked pon as competent to prevent a like condition f things hereafter. We shall speak on this sub-ct again. Public interest is intense to know ll.

THE PRESS.—We commend the following article to the notice of the reader. The Press, one of heaven's best gifts to man, is most shamefully prostituted, at the present, to the purposes of slander. We have no idea that the editors themselves believe one half the defamitory tales they publish. They have an object in view, and that must be promoted at the expense of every other consideration. If the people would discontinue all those vituperative and abusive papers, it would have a salutary influence in regulating the press. But the article:

For the Western Recorder.

THE LICENSCIOUSNESS OF THE PRESS.—When, in the providence of God, arrangements are entered into to check and restrain to their proper limits, the press of the country, then each philanthropist may properly adopt the expression of old Simeon and say, "Now Lord let thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

A holy ambition should pervade every mind that can wield a pen when such a God-like theme is presented as that of the reformation of the press. There are such ponderous, such mighty consequences hanging upon it, that the individual who can contribute to its effectuation in the slightest degree, may, like Sir Isaac Newton, when testing a discovery, in which the interests of mankind were deeply concerned, tremble at every joint at the anticipated results. I should glory in a participation in this boundless blessing to our species. I glory in attempting any thing but impossibilities that are rife with such noble consequences.

In vain the proud eagle perches at the top of each party paper, with the noble inscription of E Pluribus Unum, when all underneath goes to rive the links that bind the union and spread hatred and detestation throughout this glorious land of brothers. If the present course of vituperation be persisted in; if our wisest and best men are to be represented as the most foolish and worst, for heaven's sake, gentlemen editors, pull down the glorious eagle, the emblem of liberty, the emblem of high feeling and loftiness of soul, and perch a cannabalistic vulture preying on the vitals of a Jefferson, a Harrison, a Jackson, a Van Buren, at the top of the column.

Do not give us to understand, through this emblem, that you are the advocates of liberty, when all beneath this heavenly bird declares to us, in terms not to misunderstood, that you yourselves are the perfect vassals of party, bound hand and foot, and hood-winked by the fetters of political bigotry and blind party predilections.

What editor in the union, shall reap the glory of being first and foremost in laying and endeavoring to carry out a plan of reformation? What must be the sober thoughts of the warm partizan editor, now the contest is over, on looking back on his columns teeming with abuse, falsehood and misrepresentation, from end to end?

Shall we have a national convention of editors to strangle the hydra, or shall necessity coerce the people in perfect defence of themselves and posterity, with whose interests they are entrusted, to hold a convention and pass resolutions that will shut down the flood gates of abuse, by discontinuing their support of all papers that indulge in this great vice? When shall the convention be held? Shall it be of the people, or of the editors of newspapers? We pause for an answer. F.

The Charleston (S. C.) Mercury is more honestly conducted than the great mass of political papers. Yet it will be seen by the following that the editor admits articles into his paper, against his political opponents, which does them injustice; but the death of the President having disarmed him, his conscience forces him to make the following concession and apology:

☞It is due to ourselves to explain that the first article among our selections of yesterday, speaking with some severity of the President, and therefore, under the circumstances, mistimed, was very far from being selected for the occasion, but came in from the copy on hand in making up the paper; and that our attention was not so much drawn as it might have been to the derogatory expression, touching the President, because we selected the article not for what it said against him, but altogether on account of the lively description it gave of the insolent herd of harpies who infested the White House and annoyed its new possessor on the 5th of March. This explanation is due to our own feeling, as well as to those of readers to whom parts of that letter must have grated discordantly with the sympathies excited by the sad news in another part of our paper. We bore the President no malice, and if we had borne it, never would have chosen for the exhibition of such a feeling a time and occasion which not only repressed, but extinguished in our bosom, all other emotions towards him, than of commiserating kindness.

CINCINNATI "STAR."—In our paper of the 7th inst. we published an article from the "Star," in relation to the "removal of Br. Atkinson," which appeared to be interesting to the editor of that paper. We requested him to reciprocate the favor by publishing one about as long from our columns. As Br. Gurley professes to be a very liberal man we had a right to expect he would accommodate us in this little matter. But as his paper of the 17th inst. has not reached us, we are at a loss to know whether he has complied with our request or not. This is the only paper we miss from our file of the "Star" since we exchanged with it. How is this my brother? Did you notice our request? Have you complied with it? If not, will you? Let us hear from you on this subject.

PRESIDENT.—Some of the papers are disputing whether Mr. Tyler is in reality President, or whether he is not still Vice President, discharging the duties of President ad interim. An article in the National Intelligencer decides that he is in fact and by the constitution "President of the United States."

PUBLIC MEETING.

Pursuant to adjournment a meeting of the citizens of Zanesville was held in the Senate Chamber on the 15th inst. James Henderson was called to the chair and Robert Lashley, appointed Secretary. Judge Harper addressed the meeting in a short but eloquent speech: After which Jno. W. Foster from the Committee appointed for that purpose, reported the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted.

In pursuance of the instructions of a former meeting, the committee of arrangements beg leave to submit the following RESOLUTIONS.

Inasmuch as it hath pleased an all-wise Providence to remove by death, our late illustrious and venerated Chief Magistrate, William Henry Harrison in the maturity of his powers, and within a brief period after his elevation, to the highest honors of the Republic. We, the citizens of Muskingum county, in meeting assembled, for the purpose of expressing our sorrow on account of this national bereavement, and for testifying our regard for the high character and illustrious services of the deceased, do hereby Resolve, That in common with our fellow-citizens throughout the Union, we deeply deplore the melancholy dispensation which has deprived the nation of her Chief Magistrate, and, our own State of her brightest ornament.

Resolved, That in the character of General Harrison we find much to admire and little to condemn. As a leader of our armies, during the dark and trying period of the war, he was sagacious and interpid, keenly alive to the sufferings of his soldiers and mitigating those sufferings from his own purse. In the Legislative councils of the Nation, he never sacrificed to party what was due to the country, but all his views were prompted by an elevated patriotism and directed to the good of the whole people. As an Ambassador abroad, he maintained the National honor unsullied. In the private walks of life, he won the confidence and esteem of all by the purity of his life, and his amenity of manners; and as Chief Magistrate of these United States—a station to which he was called by the almost unanimous voice of his fellow citizens—his course, we have every reason to believe, would have been mild and conciliatory at home, firm and respected abroad: and in that country, which he defended by his valor, improved by his talents, and exalted by his fame, and for whose prosperity his dying asperations were breathed, his memory will be cherished in all its splendor, whilst the Republic endures.

Resolved, That under this national bereavement, all sectional feelings should be forgotten, all party predilections sacrificed on the great altar of patriotism; and that it is incumbent on all true citizens, to unite as Americans, in paying funeral honors to the deceased.

GEN. HARRISON'S DEATH BED.—We have this morning had an interview with a gentleman, who was at General Harrison's bedside when he expired. In the room were present two physicians, and a young lady who was constantly with the President during his illness. Mr. Webster was walking in the hall; Mr. Granger stood at the door of the chamber; Mr. Ewing sat at the foot of the bedstead—a French bedstead—and leaned his head upon the scroll, not looking up and weeping continually. Our friend stood near the bed. General Harrison did not speak or move after nine o'clock. Just before that hour he uttered brokenly and feebly these words—"I wish you to understand the principles that govern me; I wish them carried out; I ask nothing more."

It will be noticed that the words in Italics differ from what has been reported; but our informant says that he heard the words clearly, as the room was hushed to deathlike repose. They were uttered, he says, not as if the President imagined himself addressing his successor; but as if he were in a Cabinet Council and conversing with his Secretaries. From wandering expressions, scarcely audible, and previously uttered, it was evident that the President's mind wandered upon his high duties—he seemed to dream that he was discharging them in conference with his Cabinet.

For some hours previous to his death, he had evidently not been in possession of his faculties; the only evidence he gave of being sensible was while Dr. Hawley was praying. During the space occupied in this act of devotion, the General seemed to suppress his sighs and groans—demonstration of pain which had till then been uninterruptedly frequent. After the conclusion of the prayer his groans of anguish were again audible. At twenty minutes before eleven, the lady who stood by the bedside, holding his hand, felt it grow cold; the pulse had ceased and could not again be traced. She dropped the icy hand—and the General lay utterly still, with his eyes closed, till the last glimmering spark of existence had gone out.

The friend, from whom we have derived these facts, was cognizant of every thing that occurred during the President's illness—from the Saturday morning when he put himself under the care of a physician, till the Sunday morning, when he died. The expression attributed to him touching the removal of office-holders, &c., &c., are wholly untrue. He said nothing of the kind. Of this, the lady who was near him day and night, is positive. Indeed he did not converse at all on business, he attended to neither public or private business—his thought did not seem to recur to such topics, and their introduction was strictly prohibited. Indeed, so rigid were the physicians in their decrees, that they would not, through fear of exciting their patient, even admit the clergyman, Dr. Hawley, till all hope had been surrendered. The General made no allusion to his family, of a serious character—he expected soon to recover and of course felt no anxiety on their account.

But there was a subject on which he seemed to feel great anxiety, and which constituted nearly the sole matter of conversation—and that was religion. He expressed a regret that he had not previously come into the communion of the church in Washington, and expressed his determination to do so the moment he recovered.

The sermon of Mr. Van Rensselaer, published in the New World of last Saturday, was very satisfactory to the friends of the President, and has elicited general approbation. It is in truth an excellent discourse. During that portion of it, in which it addresses President Tyler, that gentleman seemed much affected, and bowed his head two or three times as if in assent.—New York Signal.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP COLUMBIA.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Columbia, Capt. Charles H. E. Judkins, arrived at Cunard's Wharf at Boston on Monday evening, having left Liverpool on the 4th inst., at 10 o'clock, and performed the passage in fifteen days and eight hours. She arrived at Halifax at 1 P. M. on the 7th, and sailed at 7 same day for Boston. She encountered a heavy sea and head gales during nearly the whole voyage.

The Columbia came up the harbor with the America flag at half mast—the captain having been informed by a pilot of the death of the President. She took a sweep round by the Navy Yard, the band playing "Hail Columbia." Both flags at the Cunard wharf were at half mast.

She brings us our regular files from London and Liverpool to the evening of Saturday, the 3d inst. There is no news of importance.

The Columbia in hauling into the Cunard wharf was forced by the wind and tide against the pier, thereby breaking her larboard wheelhouse.

The Royal Mail Steamer Britannia, Captain Cleland, arrived at Liverpool on March 31st, in fourteen days and eighteen hours from Boston.—She experienced heavy gales through the whole passage.

A notice was up at Lloyd's for transports to convey 1,600 troops to Halifax, where 4000 are shortly to be sent to reinforce the battalions already there.

There was much less excitement in Great Britain respecting the relations between that country and the United States.

The British press has evidently cooled down in its tone towards the United States. The only pugnacious article is the following from the Liverpool Mail:

We understand that government has received despatches from Mr. Fox, the British minister, resident at Washington, intimating that his demand for the release of Mr. McLeod has been received in a most conciliatory spirit by the new President and the American cabinet, and that the strongest assurances have been given him that the unfortunate and much injured gentleman will be safely restored to his friends, and ample compensation made him for the insult he has sustained, and the sufferings he has endured.

All this is satifactory enough, as far as Mr. McLeod is concerned; but what reparation is to be made to England for the past, and what indemnity given for the future, in a matter deeply affecting the honor of this country and the laws of civilized nations? We cannot see how the release of Mr. McLeod alters the complex nature of the question at issue. If the State of New York is permitted to claim the right of arresting, imprisoning, and trying for life, every Canadian subject of her Majesty who, in the discharge of his duty, may fire a musket at an American citizen acting piratically, or assisting pirates on the lines, no man's life or liberty would be safe for a moment upon a disturbed frontier.—After all, we are only at the beginning of this business.

The supplement to the Liverpool Journal of April 2d, contains the following paragraph on this subject:

The Times states that government received despatches from Mr. Fox by the Britannia steamer, and that those despatches leave no doubt of an amicable and immediate settlement between the United States and Great Britain, so far as regards the question of McLeod. Mr. Fox had received a communication to that effect from the American government, couched in the most conciliatory language. We think, adds the Times, that the public mind may be at rest on this point.

The arrival of the packet ship Patrick Henry, with General Harrison's Address, and the arrival of the steamer Britannia, with despatches for the British Government tended to allay a most feverish excitement, which had prevailed in all classes, and our last advices show a much better feeling towards this country, and a rapid advance in the money markets.

At a recent operative Protestant meeting at Bath, a large number of Chartists gained admission, took possession of the platform and a scuffle ensued, which ended in the success of the Chartist party. The appearance of police was treated with groans, hooting and whistling. Three cheers were given for the Chartist party, and as many for Frost, Williams and Jones; and after paying the usual compliment to the chair, one of the most uproarous meetings ever held in Bath was dissolved.

A large meeting is announced to take place in Glasglow soon, which will embrace the broad, general question of the duties on every description of Goods and produce imported into the United kingdom, including, of course, the duties levied upon corn and provisions.

It is now stated that Sir William Parker will succeed Admiral Elliott in China.

General Harrison, in his last out-door exercise, was engaged in assisting the gardener in adjusting some grape vine. The gardener remarked that there would be but little use in trailing the vines, so far as any fruit was concerned, as the boys would come on Sunday, while the family was at church, and steal all the grapes; and suggested to the General, as a guard against such a loss, that he should purchase an active watch-dog. "Better," said the General, "to employ an active Sabbath school teacher; a dog may take care of the grapes, but a good Sabbath school teacher will take care of the grapes and the boys too."

Both Houses of the Pennsylvania Legislature have voted to adjourn on the 27th instant.

GEN. HARRISON.—The committee in Cincinnati requested Judge Burnet to deliver an eulogy on the late President. He declined, saying, "I cannot accept, I could not speak. I knew Harrison forty-six years ago; he was a brother to me then; we have been brothers ever since; our hearts were knit together, and I would choke were I to attempt to speak of him. He is the last of the little band who started this city. I am alone now, all alone, and I cannot talk of my friend, I cannot." And the manly tears fell down his cheeks, and the sobs which were heard coming alike from the aged and the young of both parties, told the deep sympathy which all felt.—The scene was touching. It overcame all who witnessed it.

FAST DAY.—The Governor of New Jersey has issued his proclamation, recommending the 14th of May as a day of fasting and prayer, in consideration of the late death of Gen. Harrison.

SMALL NOTES.—Small notes were sold in this city on Saturday by our Brokers at one per cent. premium over Philadelphia Bank notes of larger denominations.—Bicknell.

A French Catholic Church is about to be erected in New York.

IMPORTANT TO CONTRACTORS.—"We have certian information from Columbus," says the Dayton Journal, "to the effect that the Fund Commissioners have borrowed $581,000, the amount authorized by the Legislature to be procured without restriction of interest, for the purpose of paying the suffering contractors on the public works. The loan is doubtless taken by Ohio Banks. We are not appraised of the terms of the loan, nor of the particular banks which have subscribed to it. But the fact that the money has been obtained may be relied upon."—Leb. Star.

THE PRESIDENT'S FAMILY.—Almost all the papers have stated that the President is a widower. The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot contradicts this report, and states, that Mrs. Tyler, his wife, is living, though in delicate health. He has two sons and two daughters married, and one son and one daughter unmarried.

PRESIDENT HARRISON'S PHYSICIANS.—The Commercial of last evening contains a long article from a distinguished physician of our city, reviewing the card of the medical gentlemen who attended the late President, and showing pretty conclusively to our minds that those M. D.'s have made fools of themselves by their report, and very probably quacked General Harrison out of existence. The writer in the Commercial treats the matter ably and dispassionately; and if his views of the case be—as they seem to be—correct, these physicians will have a pretty serious account to settle with the people of the United States. We hope to see the matter more fully discussed.—N. Y. Sig.

HE DIED A CHRISTIAN.—The National Intelligencer says—"It is known that, for many years past, General Harrison had become daily more impressed with religious feelings, always treating seriously, and showing himself mindful of his future accountability.—A member of his family has stated that for many months past, he has never omitted the reading of the Scriptures every night before retiring to rest, however harrassed by company, or worn down by fatigue. On Monday, the third day of his indisposition, and before he felt himself in any particular danger, he declared to those around him that he had long been deeply impressed with the truths of the Christian Religion, and regretted that he had not connected himself with the Church as a communicant."

MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE.—The Rev. Mr. Griswold of the Baptist communion, died in this city on Wednesday of last week, in consequence of a brutal assault made upon him the Friday evening previous, by a young man named Layton. Mr. Griswold had held a series of religious meetings in a saw-mill at the west end of the city, which were attended, we understand, with considerable interest and many hopeful conversions. On the evening of the fatal assault, the young man, as we are informed, was made a subject of prayer. Exasperated at this, he watched for his victim, as he came out of the assembly, and directed a stone with fatal violence at his head. The perpetrator is now in prison awaiting his trial.—Cincin. Watch. 22d inst.

DISASTROUS SHIPWRECK.—The br. Opulences left this city where she was owned, for Apalachicola, on the 28th ultimo, and on the 3d inst. was struck by a squall, filled and sunk almost immediately. The crew, consisting of four men and the cook, with one passenger, were lost—the Captain and two mates escaping by clinging to part of the Cabin-deck, which was washed off by the Sea. The Captain arrived in this city yesterday, and says that on their insecure floating fragment, they saw a barque within three miles of them, steering South; but their signal of distress was unobserved. In the afternoon of the same day, a schooner passed them in the same manner. On the 6th, the third day of their exposure, they were observed and rescued by Capt. Chamberlain of the schooner Francis, on his way hither from Pensacola. While floating on this portion of their wreck, they subsisted on the flesh of a dog which escaped from the brig at the same time with themselves. The sea washed them off several times, but they succeeded in regaining their fragment, although sharks were swimming about them on every side.—N. Y. Signal.

THE FIRE AT NORTH BEND.—Notwithstanding the many contradictory rumors that have appeared, we learn from the Cincinnati papers that the main building of the Mansion at North Bend was saved by the strenuous exertions of the inhabitants in the vicinity, and the tearing away of the hall that connected it with the part destroyed, which was effected by the timely and active exertions of the Irish laborers at work on the canal near, and of the other neighbors.

The following extract of a letter from Col. Taylor, the son-in-law of the deceased occupant, shows the extent of their services, and how highly they are appreciated:

We are indebted to the active and noble exertions of Irishmen for the preservation of the house. They not only gave the alarm, but worked as I never saw men work before. They deserve the highest praise, as they have the warmest gratitude of the family and myself for their generous aid.—Phil. Chronicle.

INCIDENT.—The Cincinnati Republican states that as a steamboat was about leaving Wheeling, crowded with passengers, a heartless man observed, that he regarded the President's death as a public blessing. The remark startled those who heard it, and for a time deep silence was the only answer which was made. At length a man, venerable in appearance and years, in a voice stifled with grief, said, that such wanton levity was not consistent with a true American, and that he would not travel with any one who could so speak. All the passengers concurred in this opinion, and the heartless wretch was ordered on shore as being unfit to associate with men.

PORK TRADE WEST.—The only two houses in Louisville, Ky., engaged in the pork business, appear to have been fully employed this year. One has slaughtered 21,000 hogs, and put up 1700 kegs of lard; and the other have killed 11,000 hogs.

LATER FRGM CANTON.—The ship Panama, Capt. Benjamin, arrived yesterday, with a cargo of teas. She left Macao on the 6th of January, and brings news three weeks later than our previous advices.—The Panama sailed under a special permit from Admiral Bremer, Commander-in-chief of her Majesty's naval forces in India and China.

The news brought by this vessel is not of a very important character. The negociations, already so protracted between the two belligerant powers, are not yet terminated; nor does anything appear to indicate a speedier issue, either of peace or war.—N. Y. Sig., 17th inst.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Canada Temperance Advocate.

A TRUE PASSAGE FROM THE LIFE OF A DRUNKARD.

It was Saturday night—the rain was falling in torrents—in a miserable dwelling, on an old broken chair, almost the only one the house contained, sat a tall yet bowed-down woman. She still retained enough of youth to show that she had once been beautiful, though care-worn and emaciated. She was singing in a low, sweet, plaintive voice, to a sickly, restless infant; another child, a little girl, sat on the floor, gazing wistfully up into her mother's face; and that patient woe-worn mother smiled—smiled, to hide her tears as she stooped to smooth her cheek, and murmured, 'My darling, he will soon be here; and then my little one shall have her supper.' A few moments after, the latch was lifted. A slight, (and in spite of his tattered garments) a genteel looking boy entered. 'They will not let me have any more, dear mother,' said he, flinging down his ragged cap with an air of despondency. 'They say my father drinks; and there is little probability of their ever getting paid for what we have had;' and here the poor boy's voice faltered. The woman sat for some time in mute despair, at last she said, 'Well, Edward, what is to be done? To-morrow is Sunday, and we must certainly starve, unless you go again to——' she seemed almost afraid to say the word—'to your uncle's, and beg a few shillings: perhaps, if you tell him how absolute is our want, he will not, he can not refuse.' As his mother spoke, the boy's white cheek became instantly suffused with burning crimson; his large, dark yet sunken eye, flashed, as he exclaimed vehemently: 'Never, mother, never! Oh! I would a thousand times sooner starve, beg, die! Oh, mother, do not ask me;' and he hid his face in the arm that rested on the table.—A long silence ensued, which was at last broken by the little girl: 'Mother, you said I should have some supper when Ned come back.' A low suppressed sob was the only answer. The next instant the boy's head was raised, the cheek had settled to its ashy hue, the fiery light was quenched in his dark eye; and he stood at the woman's side, threw his arm around her neck, and stooping to kiss her prematurely furrowed brow, whispered, 'Forgive me, dear mother; I know not what I said. Oh! do not kill me by those tears, as if you had not misery enough without my increasing it. I will go this instant; and after all he cannot say more than he did the last time. Mother, look up; I will go.'

'Edward,' said the agitated woman, pressing him to her bosom, 'gladly, most gladly, would I lay down my own life to save my precious boy one pang, one moment's grief; but it is not for myself I ask you to do what I feel and know to be so humiliating, but for their sake, (and she glanced at the sleeping infants,) for their sake my boy will throw aside all selfish feeling; my Edward will I know do his duty.' Another instant and she stood, or rather kneeled, alone. How long, how weary was the next hour to the bleeding heart of the anxious mother? How often did she rise, and opening the door, peer into the darkness, or bend her ear in intense eagerness at every passing step? At last those loved feet approached; again the latch was raised, and again the boy appeared; but this time he brought joy and gladness. He did not tell his mother how he had again and again been spurned; how he had been taunted; how he had been told that the hard-earned bread of industry was not to be given to the drunken father and his lazy son; how he had borne all this opprobrium for her sake, and quelled his proud spirit, and on his knees sued again and again; and at last gained by his importunity, that which was denied to his misery. But the bright hectic spot that shame had called into his pale cheek, and that still burned there, told to that observant mother how great had been the mortification which the heroic boy had endured.

* * * * * *

All was silent in the low dwelling.—'Mother,' said the dying boy, 'raise my head and lay it once again in your bosom. Do you weep,' he said, after a short pause, and making a feeble effort to throw his arm around her neck, 'do you weep, dearest mother, that to-day you have a son on earth—to-morrow one in heaven? Do you weep, that I am leaving a world so full of wo—a world that you yourself are so weary of, for that bright heaven, that happy home, which we have so often talked about? The tho't of parting from you is the only sting that death has for me. Oh! if I could but take you, sweet mother, with me? But you will soon come: you cannot stay without me.' Here his whisper became inaudible; his head pressed heavier on her bosom; a short gasp—a low sigh, and the unhappy woman clasped convulsively to her breast a lifeless corpse!

Many long hours had passed, yet that mother still hung motionless over her son; so still and immoveable was she, you might have imagined that she, too, had bid farewell to earthly sorrow. Presently the door was pushed violently open, and a man staggered into the room. He stood for some time glaring around him, as if endeavoring to remember where he was. At last he recognized his wife; and reeling towards her, he seized her arm, and pulled her rudely up. As he did so, a low agonized groan showed that she was awakened to conciousness; but as her eyes rested upon his face, a long and loud appalling laugh rang thro' the cold dim room: then suddenly stopping, and laying one hand on the shoulder of the now sobered man, and with the other parting back the black locks from the face of the dead child; 'Do you see him, Charles?' she exclaimed, 'do you see him? and do you know who has laid him in his early grave? Do you know who clouded his young days with misery: that gave him for his portion here, poverty and hardship, and shame; that filled his cup of life so full of bitterness, that at the first taste he turned with loathing from it, and pined and died? Need I tell you, man, murderer!' she shrieked, 'that it was a drunken father?—need I tell you, that you have laid the head of your child in the dust, and broken the heart of your wife you had sworn to cherish?' then looking slowly and shudderingly round the dismal apartment, she sank again upon the body of her son. 'Oh! take me with you, my beautiful, my best: leave me not to this loneliness of heart—this living death. My boy, my Edward, take your wretched mother with you.'

And what were the drunkard's feelings during this scene? Did not his soul smite him? It did, it did. Most keenly did he feel the pangs of remorse; yet he rushed from the house, and entered the first dram shop!! 'Oh! thou invisible spirit of wine! if thou hast no other name to be known by, let us call the devil!' A COLLECTION OF DECLARATIONS.

Declaration First.—The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men.

Declaration Second.—All men are equal; they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; among these, are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights, governments are instituted among men deriving their just powers from the consent of the government; and whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it.

Declaration Third.—The principles of pure truth, sacred love, and perfect equity, compose a full, plain, and perfect constitution for the government of all rational beings.

Declaration Fourth.—The divine constitution which is composed of the principles of divine truth, love and equity, is not only the perfect rule of action for all mankind; but a perfect criterion, by which every man is divinely authorized to try all his own principles, and the public principles of all persons, nations, churches, and books; and to reject every principle (wheresoever found) that is not in perfect accordance with all the principles of the divine constitution.

Declaration Fifth.—History and observation hath declared to us, that politic men govern themselves and fellow men by the principles of inclination, selfishness, and power, which principles compose the world's governing constitution; and if these men who thus govern, were not endowed with rational faculties, and thereby rendered amenable to the divine constitution, they could not sin in thus governing; because the world's constitution allows all animals to do whatsoever they have inclination and power to do.

Declaration Sixth.—Beside the world's constitution, there are none, nor is there any need of a third; because the divine constitution is complete for the government of all rational beings, and irrational beings are not capable of governing by any principles but those which compose the world's constitution.

Declaration Seventh.—Politic men have disregarded their principles of the divine constitution, and divided the population of their countries into two grand classes, which are justly called bereavers and bereaved.

These politicians have chosen to govern by the principles of the world's constitution, that they may be exalted in worldly glory and power, and abound in wealth, and servants; and to strengthen themselves against divine truth, they have proclaimed absurd doctrines, concerning God, creation and revelation!!

The ancient bereavers at Hindostan taught, that, when God created the world he produced them from his head and body, and their servants from his feet! And those of Palestine told a corresponding tale; they said that they saw God, and he told them that the poor of their own nation should serve only as hired servants, and go free in six years; but they should get their bond-men and bond-maids from other nations, and they should be their inheritance, and the possession of their children forever!!! The doctrine from Palestine was so agreeable to the selfish inclination of the bereavers of all countries that they proclaimed it from pulpits and thrones as the real word of God, till it became the faith of empires and kingdoms in Europe, and is now believed by the bereavers of all the Republics of America! And if we look along the line from the Rocky mountains of America, to the country from whence this partial and oppressive doctrine came, we may see thousands of believing bereavers, with millions of sorrowing servants whom they have, by their faith and works, bereaved of all the most precious rights of man.

Declaration Eighth.—All men are born alike ignorant, needy, and dependent, and God and nature contains ample supply of all good, for the body and mind of all mankind; and man is endowed with all the faculties requisite to nurse the infant—feed the children—instruct the youth—support the aged—take care of the disordered and the disorderly—and to remove the dead; and all this the divine constitution requires to be done perpetually, universally, and without partiality.

Declaration Ninth.—All men have equal right to breathe the world's air—drink its water—warm by its fire—and feed on its vegetables to nourish and comfort the body,—and to the principles and spirit of the divine constitution, to direct, purify, comfort and save the soul forever. To be in union with these principles, and the spirit of them, is to be in union with God, and with all the good intelligent beings of the universe.

N. B. I have found the above principles which were declared at different times and by men unknown to each other; and this day, Dec. 14th, 1838, I have collected, and purpose to publish them without comment; and whosoever will, let him distribute them among the people; and whosoever discovers an erroneous principle in them, let him show error, and tell the truth he knows, that we may mutually arrive at the perfect knowledge of divine truth, that we may all be equally free, good and happy. COSMOPOLITAN.

ELEVEN REASONS FOR NOT ACCEPTING AN INVITATION TO A FASHIONABLE PARTY.

1. Because I have no desire to form intimacies with the fashionable world, to which christians are forbidden to be conformed, and from which they are called to come out and be separate.

2. Because, as a christian, I ought not, and cannot find pleasure in the displays of vanity, and in the frivolous conversation of those whose principal maxim is, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry."

3. Because in society I might insensibly imbibe the spirit of the world, which a christian is commanded not to cherish.

4. Because it would induce late hours, and necessarily lead to the neglect or sleepy performance of family devotions.

5. Because it would tempt to undue indulgence of appetite, and perhaps excite a taste for luxuries which would endanger health, and lead to unnecessary expense.

6. Because I should find few, if any christians there, and these alone should be my cherished associates.

7. Because it would give offence to my christian brethren, and might become to them an occasion of stumbling.

8. Because I can spend my time better.

9. Because such company and scenes appear inconsistent with taking up the cross, and walking in the narrow way.

10. Because it would encourage and confirm the thoughtless in their sinful alineation from God.

11. Because I should be very cautious where I am found, especially as I am forewarned, that in such a day and in such an hour as I expect not, the Son of Man cometh.

A SISTER.—He who has never known a sister's kind ministrations, nor felt his heart warming beneath her enduring smile and love beaming eye, has been unfortunate indeed. It is not to be wondered if the pure feeling flow in his bosom but sluggishly, or if the gentler emotions of his nature be lost in the sterner attributes of manhood.

"That man has grown up among kind and affectionate sisters," I once heard a lady of much observation and experience remark.

"And why do you think so?" said I.

"Because of the rich development of all the tender and more refined feelings of the heart, which is so apparent in every action, in every word."

A sister's influence is felt even in manhood's later years, and the heart of him who has grown cold in its chilling contact with the world, will warm and thrill with a pure enjoyment, as some incident awakens within the soft tunes and glad melodies of his sisters' voices. And he will turn from purposes which a warped and false philosophy has reasoned into expediency, and even weep for the gentler influences which moved him in his earlier years.

INTERESTING ANCIENT RELIC.—In 1834, a white oak tree was cut in the town of Lyons, Wayne county, New York, two miles west of the village, measuring 4½ feet in diameter. In the body of the tree about 3½ feet from the ground, was found a large and deep cutting by an axe, severing the heart of the tree, and exhibiting with perfect distinctness the marks of the axe at the present time. The whole cavity thus created by the original cutting was found to be encased by 760 years growth of wood—i. e: it was concealed beneath 460 layers of timber, which had grown over it subsequently to the cutting, and must have been in the year 1374, or 118 years before the discovery of America by Columbus. The section of the tree exhibiting the curiosity may now be seen at V. G. Barney's tavern in Newark. The tree was cut in 1834, by James P. Bratle, of Newark, a forwarding merchant, and the timber used by him in building the boat Newark, now belonging to the Detroit Line. The cutting was at least six inches deep.—Geneva Courier.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—Baron Dupolet, of Paris, has presented to the Academy of Medicine a Deaf Mute, ten years of age, whose speech and hearing he had restored by a magnetic process. The Academy immediately appointed a commission to inquire into the truth of a fact which threatens to overturn all previous notions of science. Their report is looked for anxiously.

Since that time the Baron submitted to his porcess a deaf mute of the age of five years. A certificate of a member of the Academy of Medicine proves that the child was both deaf and dumb from its birth. The miracelous process of the Baron was evident, for at the end of three sittings the child heard and repeated every word pronounced in its presence. The Baron states that he has cured nineteen persons by this simple process.

BETTING ON ELECTIONS.—A bill has been reported to the Senate of Maine, on the subject of betting on elections, which has the following provisions:

1st. That any person who shall bet upon the election of any man to any office, shall forfeit to the use of the town, city or plantation in which he resides, a sum equal to the wager.

2d. That the person who shall receive money for any bet, shall be liable to have the amount recovered back in an action of debt by the person losing it.

3d. The third section makes it the duty of Mayors of cities and Treasurers of towns and plantations to sue for the sums forfeited by the first section.

4th. All goods, chattels, or personal estate to bet, are forfeited to the use of the city, town or plantation; and the persons mentioned in the last section are empowered to sue for the same.

5th. All deeds of real estate, or other conveyances to fulfil any bet, are declared void.

For the Western Recorder.

"And they fell on Paul's neck and wept sore, sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more."

When the minister Paul in obeying his call,
Was about to depart he thus said to them all—
Behold I go bound the gospel to sound,
And publish the news of salvation around;
What may happen me there I cannot declare,
Except of one thing of which I'm aware,
That full well I do know, for the spirit saith so,
Afflictions abide me wherever I go.
But afflictions and pain and ills in a train,
In their efforts to move are ever in vain;
For I count all things loss and lighter than dross,
For since I am changed I delight in the cross.
To-day record take and memento make,
Jehovah's whole counsel I've spoke for your sake;
I've not ceased to pray by night and by day,
And labored to win you from your sinful way.
I covet not gold but you to behold
Dealing just and equal, and in mercy being bold.
These labor-worn hands food and raiment command,
And freely I've preached to the men of this land.
Then on Paul's neck they fell, they loved him so well,
And with sighs and kisses their sorrows they tell.
Tears like the rain's pour or the waves of the shore,
Lamenting the most they should see him no more.
O, could we but die and heavenward fly,
With the prospect that Paul had just then in his eye,
Our souls would be blessed when of Jesus possessed,
And with Him our spirits forever would rest.

LOOK OUT FOR AN IMPOSTER.—The Warren Journal informs us that a man professing to be a Siberian, and a convert from Paganism to Christianity, is travelling through the country and attempting to lecture upon the manners and customs of the people of Siberia. He arrived in that place on Thursday, and attempted to impose upon the people, but he did not succeed.—When his hypocrisy was exposed he was much enrathed, and swore bitterly. Before he left, he became very much intoxicated. He is a man apparently about 45 years of age, thick set and stoop shouldered, small eyes, bushy hair, no beard, and speaks broken English. He wore grey clothes, with buttons up the legs of his pantaloons. For the benefit of all classes of society, we should have extensive workshops, where such wandering humbugs could be "put up" to do labor for the advancement of the funds of the States.

SPIRIT OF THE AGE.—A writer in an English paper proposes the building of a rail road from "Pekin, in China, through Asia and Europe, to Lisbon, in Portugal." A rail road seven thousand miles long would be a pretty extensive concern.—We are sure we shall be ready to go on 'our tour' about the time that rail is stretched.

Dr. Owen, who was appointed by the Government of the United States to explore the mineral regions of Iowa and Wisconsin Territories, states that they now produce as much lead as the whole of Europe, Great Britain excepted; and are capable of yielding as much as all Europe, Great Britain included.

RATHER HENPECKED.—Fancy a man stuck on the sunny side of a barn nibbling an apple, for fear that his wife should see him at it in the house.

Mormonism, or Knavery Exposed.

Now in the press, and will be immediately published in pamphlet form, a History of the Mormons, giving an account of the discovery of the golden plates from which their Bible is pretended to be derived, the translation, and various tricks resorted to; the proceedings at Kirtland, building a temple, increase of the disciplies; establishment of a bank, a correct specimen of its notes of which two hundred thousand dollars worth have been palmed off upon the community; persevering efforts of Mormon preachers, and spread of the doctrines; the manner in which the community of Frankford, Pa., rid themselves of the Mormons; evidence of the depraved and swindling character of the Mormon leaders, and their fraudulent practices, as derived from documents printed by order of the Senate of the United States; incidents in the life of "Jo Smith," the ring leader in this scheme for fleecing the poor and defrauding the community under the cloak of a religious imposture. The whole being designed as a caution to the ignorant and unsuspecting against one of the most barefaced, blasphemous and wicked devices which has ever been witnessed in this country, not excepting that of the notorious Mathias, whose career of swindling and depravity was arrested by a criminal prosecution in New York. The Mormon imposters are so far successfully carrying out the most revolting features of that disgusting trick, affording a lamentable exhibition of the credulity and weakness of human nature, in so readily allowing itself to be made the dupe of artful and designing knaves.—Price 12½ cents single copies, or ten copies will be forwarded by mail or otherwise for one dollar.

Address, E. G. LEE, Philadelphia.

☞Editors of newspapers generally who may feel disposed to aid in guarding the community against a gross imposition, and will copy the above advertisement, shall have a few copies of the Exposure forwarded to their address.

SCHOOL BOOKS.
Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.—Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

1. The WESTERN RECORDER will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until all arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper, if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 00 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the WESTERN RECORDER will be open to discussion on all moral questions;—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current,—another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West.—These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The RECORDER will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

COMMUNICATIONS.

STERN HERALD.—We had determined to othing in relation to this enterprize, for e might give offence to brethren, and have ed publishing two or three communications west of the Scioto, making strictures on bject. But the following communication, member of the Ohio District, asking for nation, seems to place us in a situation that omes our duty to answer his interrogatoso far, at least, as they relate to us. The ions here proposed are just such as suggest elves to the mind of every business man, ants information on the subject to be subd for his action.

For the Western Recorder.

Editor: In the 23d No., Vol. 2, of the rder, I see a circular for the publication of kly religious newspaper signed by N. Snee-
A. C. Barnes, G. G. Moore and R. T.
In a former number you published the ectus for this paper, from which I learn it is ne before our conference for action. As I t to have to act on this subject, should I o be in conference, and should it come bes, I wish to know if the paper to be publish-d the "Western Recorder" can both be sus-ed?—or if it is to be published without any l to what becomes of the Recorder? If so, e find among us a better editor than that Recorder? These questions I think should tisfactorily answered to every member of onference before we can act upon the sub-1839 our conference passed the following lution:

Resolved, That we rejoice in the establish-of a western periodical, devoted to the est of the Methodist Protestant Church, e columns are pledged to be kept open for discussion of all moral questions,—and we ourselves to do all in our power to sustain ublication."
the conference of 1840, after having had haracter of the Recorder before us one year, ssed the following:
Resolved, That we heartily approve of the tern Recorder, and do cheerfully pledge our nued efforts to extend its patronage within ounds of our labors, and that the Secretary structed to forward a copy of this resolution e editor of said paper."
annot persuade myself that our annual con-ce will not heed its own resolutions; in view ich I confess, Mr. Editor, I do not under-the intention of those engaged in the es-shment of another periodical for our church.
e, therefore, we shall be informed through columns of the Recorder more definitely this subject.
ere are other members of conference who under the same difficulty with myself, for of definite information, relative to what e we ought to pursue in reference to this matter. The first reason given in the circular is that we have no paper exclusively devoted to the interest of the church in the West. Query: can we have a paper thus exclusively devoted? Can we furnish matter of this kind to sustain it?—And can it be sustained otherwise than at the expense or destruction of the Recorder? In view of what is assigned as a second and third reason in the circular, I wish to know if the matter there specified could not be published in the Recorder and promote the interest of the church, and prove "an auxiliary in spreading scriptural holiness through these lands?" I wish to know also if the editor of the Recorder has ever neglected or refused to publish any such matter as is specified in the circular, after having been furnished with it?

The above inquiries are made for no other purpose but to obtain information to enable me to determine what course I ought to pursue relative to this subject. JUNIUS.

1. In relation to the question, whether the "editor of the Recorder has ever neglected or refused to publish," &c., we answer nay! and challenge to the investigation. We have published every thing, almost, which has been forwarded to us for insertion.—Not more than a dozen communications, probably, have been omitted, and they for reasons, as we think, which would be considered satisfactory by all who might hear them. And further, we have taken more than ordinary pains to procure communications which might be interesting to the church, by paying postage, &c., on all such. And in fact we believe our paper contains more that relates to the immediate interests of the church than any other, if not all the periodicals under her patronage. 1. Because it is situated in her most prosperous field,—and 2dly, because we have been at unusual pains to procure that kind of information. If, therefore, there has been interesting matter not communicated to us, it is not our fault, as we have made every reasonable effort to procure it, and have always given the preference to that which relates to the church's interest.

2. As it respects the declaration that we have "no paper exclusively devoted to the interests of the church in the West," we think it peculiarly unkind on the part of those who made it, and it must have been done without proper reflection. It is true that the Western Recorder is not at present, nor will it ever be, while under the management of the present incumbent, devoted to the "interest of the M. P. Church," or any other "interest," at the expense of truth and righteousness. But within the limits prescribed to christians, we cannot conceive how a paper, or its editor, could consistently be more devoted to any cause than they are to the Methodist Protestant enterprize. The paper was got up for this express object. And the conference who originated it dictated the principles on which it was to be conducted, which the other conference west have approved. The following extract from the journals will shew what sort of a paper they wanted: "1. That it be strictly a free but not a party press; 2. That the paper be issued in folio form, and not less than super-royal size; 3. That a portion of its columns be devoted to general intelligence, foreign and domestic —Congressional news—agriculture—prices current and advertisements." We believe the paper has been conducted according to its original design, as near as it is possible for imperfect man to execute such a design. And when the brethren assert, "we have no paper in the west exclusively devoted to our interests as a church," they virtually say that the conference which originated the Western Recorder, and gave to it its character, and the others who have approved of it, do not understand the "interest" of the "church" so well as they do.—If we understood the conference, some of the reasons which induced them to give the paper this general and miscellaneous character, were, 1st, they were, from principle, opposed to patronizing any paper conducted on the principle of sectarian "exclusiveness:" 2, they did not believe such a paper could be sustained: 3, they were of opinion that one conducted on the plan which they proposed, would, in reality, serve the interests of the church better than an "exclusively" sectarian paper, even though it could be sustained, as it would tend to liberalize the minds of our own people, and also from its general character it would be likely to procure a reading from hundreds who would pay little attention to an "exclusive," sectarian paper, and thereby our principles and condition, as a church, would become better known to the public, which, it was thought, was all that was wanting to ensure our greater success. We know not how it is elsewhere, but about the office more than one half of our subscribers belong to other churches, or to no church, but patronize our paper for its general reading and liberal principles.

3. It is asked, can the "Recorder and Herald be both sustained?" We reply they cannot only by individual sacrifice. We have done the most of the financiering for a western periodical, and have a right to know considerable about the matter. And we are of opinion that these brethren could not sustain a paper, if they had the whole west, unrivalled, as their field of operation, for more than two years, and they would then be driven from their post with a debt hanging over their heads, unless they have a considerable amount of private means they wish to devote to such an enterprize. When we commenced the publication of the Western Recorder we regarded it as somewhat hazardous, thinking it highly probable we should have to make the experiment at considerable private sacrifice, and we prepared our mind accordingly. Whether we will or not will depend upon how successful we are in collecting dues from delinquent subscribers. If they pay up there will be no need of loss. Our readers may form some idea of how financial matters stand with us, when we inform them that our weekly expenditure, last year, was between 25 and $30, (without any thing for our own services or the use of our office,) when they compare this estimate with our receipts in their file of the Recorder. This year our out-lays are not so great.

4. That there are reasons why the Illinois brethern should have a paper, if they can sustain one, is evident without being stated. But for the life of us we can see no reasons why there should be two papers in the State of Ohio,—especially when both the conferences, lying within her limits, profess to be well satisfied with the one they already have. See the resolutions of the Ohio Conference. Zanesville, the place of our publication, is as near the centre of the two Districts as may be; her mail facilities are equal to any in the State. Nearly all the papers sent to the Ohio District will go for a cent per sheet, —few letters will cost over 12½ cents. So nothing would be gained by the institution of a new paper.—Beside, look at the moral principle involved in the matter. We have vested a considerable capital, at a risk, to accommodate this section of our work, with a periodical suited to their wants, in full confidence that the church would sustain us to the best of her ability. And, although she officially professes to be satisfied with our paper, yet many of her members encourage a private effort to get up a paper which will greatly injure us, if not break us down, without any probability, as we conceive, of its final success. The tendency of such movements is to destroy public confidence in our body, and to deter men who have the ability from risking any thing to serve us. If we are broken down again, by this kind of effort, we will give bond and security, if it be required, that we will risk nothing more, forever, to serve the interests of the church.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: I have seen with much surprise, in the last number of your paper, an official communication, from the Book Committee, respecting the "difficulty" between yourself and the Protestant. It is altogether unnecessary to attempt to show the origin of this affair, or set it before your readers with greater perspicuity and brevity than that in which it appears in the 76th and 81st number of the Recorder.

When I sent you the number of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate (for it was from me you received it,) containing the strictures of that editor on the action of our last Annual Conference, in reference to Br. Shinn's book, I was not then aware that you exchanged with the Advocate.* It was not, therefore, to provoke "controversy" or excite "ebulitions of editorial wrath," but that you might be informed of his conduct towards us; and to give you an opportunity to animadvert upon it, as in your judgment, you should think most proper.

To us, the conduct of the Protestant, in this affair, throughout, appears very extraordinary indeed. Without provocation, he attacks his "contemporary" with sharpness and severity, and that too, under circumstances which made it evidently appear of an invidious and aggravated character. When reproved, for his officious interference, he receives it with apparent surprise, and expresses his sorrow that the 'Recorder' should so far have mistaken his meaning as to charge him with such conduct; and most positively declares "he never dreamed of making an attack upon his brother;" for he had "higher and holier objects in view than the cultivation of strife." But how are we to reconcile his conduct, in this case, with his former grave and serious charge of "coarseness," &c., against the Recorder? We are sorry to admit it, yet the idea comes to us with resistless force, that, either he was very much mistaken in the meaning of his own words, or we have cause to call in question the sincerity of his assertions for who is there so dull as not to know, that to charge a man with coarseness, &c., under circumstances so very peculiar, is to attack him?

We are disposed, however, to question his sincerity, rather than his knowledge in this matter. For with an ingenuity that ignorance never knew, he makes a flourish about "self-respect," and having "higher and holier objects in view than the cultivation of strife," and thus craftly attempts to cover, from the sunlight of impartial investigation, a correct view of the cause of the dispute; Thereby giving evidence that, rather than make honorable acknowledgment, of his error, with the magnanimity of a noble mind, his dignity would prefer, by wily management to evade the performance of a duty, which, as a christian and a gentleman, he ought to perform agreeable to those principles of justice and honor which ought always to govern the conduct of one gentleman toward another.—Or does this editor, in whom no fault is found, pretend to assume the high prerogative of managing the affairs of the Recorder, while in dispute with the 'Advocate,' by occasionally giving the editor a lecture on his style of writing, and then very gravely judging of his conduct in a manner that would comport very well with the high-toned feelings of a senior Bishop. Surely, with such high pretensions to rectitude and propriety of conduct, we ought to look for a more perfect acquaintance with the pure and hallowed precepts of religion than is manifest in his attempt to screen himself from deserved censure, and justify his conduct by Pharasaic pretensions to high and holy motives. And yet if we judge from the present aspect of affairs, we have very little ground to hope that hereafter he will observe the rules of prudence more faithfully. The editor who thus openly attacks his brother rather than make acknowledgment of his error, when his sin had found him out, all at once learns that self-respect forbids collision with the Recorder, because, forsooth, he feels the protection which official action throws around him. What a specimen of magnanimity! Doubtless, Mr. Editor, you have observed a similar course of conduct in some frolicsome urchin, who in school-boy days, attempted to play off his pranks upon mature years, and when the deserved correction was about to be administered, the juvenile offender secured himself in some City of Refuge, where conscious of safety, instead of purposes of amendment, he only planned deeds of greater daring. Although we make no higher pretentions to perfection, then our neighbors, yet we feel confident that we "love religion better than controversy, and the general prosperity of the church rather than the success of party;" and even under the influence of such feelings we cannot but think that the official action of the Book Committee, in this matter, was as uncalled for as the conduct of the Protestant at first was reprehensible. Neither can we believe that official authority has the power to mitigate the criminality of his imprudent and injudicious conduct.

I entertain no other feelings toward the editor of the Protestant, and the members of the committee, than those of kindness and respect. I have lent my aid in public and in private for the promotion of the interest of the church paper; nor shall I fail to do so when a favorable opportunity presents itself in future. Yet I deem it, in justice due the editor of the Recorder, to express my unqualified approbation of his conduct in the affair;—and so far as my acquaintance extends I have not heard a contrary opinion.

THE SABBATH.

CHANGE OF THE SABBATH.

We give below two articles on the change of the Sabbath; one on each side of the question, so that our readers may have some idea of the arguments pro and con upon this subject. Let them, respectively, believe as they may in relation to this matter, it is proper they should know the reasons which induce in their opponents a different belief.—ED. REC.

THE SABBATH.

ITS CHANGE FROM THE SEVENTH TO THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK.

The view which we have given of the Sabbath, explains why comparatively little is said of it in the New Testament. Being moral, it is of permanent obligation: addressed, as it was originally, to the whole human race, it could not be effected by any change in the external administration of religion, or by the abrogation of any thing that was peculiar to one people or age.—Therefore, we have no express command respecting the Sabbath in the New Testament, for there was no new institution; an institution, moral in its nature, and of course permanent in its obligation, was in existence. The principle of this already existing and obligatory institution, is the employment of one day in seven in the worship of God. The command is to work six days and rest the seventh; but a change of the time of resting, from one day to another, would not be an abrogation of the Sabbath, inasmuch as the Sabbath is to be distinguished from the particular day on which it may be kept. The fourth commandment determines that a seventh part of our time is to be employed as a Sabbath, or day of holy resting, but does not determine on what particular day of the seven the Sabbath is to be held. The precept being moral is unchangeable and permanently binding, while the particular day on which it is kept, may be changed by Divine authority.

The Sabbath in its original institution was designed to commemorate the work of creation; and when re-published, along with the other precepts of the moral law, the same reason is still assigned: "For, in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day." But, another consideration was superadded: "Remember that thou was a servant in the land of Egypt and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence." Deut. v. 15. This new consideration was added to, but did not supersede the original reason for the sanctification of the Sabbath.

The Sabbath is now kept in honour of the resurrection of Christ, the time being changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. The glory of God was more illustriously displayed by the redemption of sinners, than by the work of creation: therefore, to this, the most glorious of the works of God, is the honor of the Sabbath conceded. Christ arose from the dead on the first day of the week, and thus rested from the work of redemption by finishing it. For he was "delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification."—And to commemorate this great work, the Sabbath is transferred to the day on which Christ arose from the dead. Not, however, to the exclusion of its original design. The glory of God, as appearing in creation is not overlooked, but the first consideration is given to the more glorious work of redemption; and this is shown by the change from the last to the first day of the week. "If the birth of the world was an event in which all mankind were interested; such too was the resurrection of its Saviour. If the primitive Sabbath commemorated, not the origin of one city or nation, but the origin of mankind; the christian Sabbath, in addition, commemorates an event, whose blessed consequences reach to all ages and nations, and throughout eternity. If the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted for joy, when they saw the earth come in its primeval beauty from the hands of its Creator; the angelic messengers who announced the advent of the Saviour were heard singing "glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good-will towards men." So far from the work of the primitive Sabbath being excluded by this slight change, the work of redemption has only opened our blinded eyes to behold anew the traces everywhere of his creative and provident wisdom, and the harmony of all his Divine attributes in the last and greatest of his works, the work of salvation.*

We proceed to show that the change was by Divine authority, though there be not an express precept for it in the New Testament. The absence of a direct command on this point will not appear surprising when it is remembered, that the change did not affect the law of the Sabbath, nor the obligation following from the law.

1. Old Testament prophecy anticipated this change:—"The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing —it is marvelous in our eyes. This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it." Ps. cxviii. 22 —24. This psalm is applied by the Apostle Peter to Christ, and is a number of times, quoted in the New Testament, in application to gospel times. "The stone" which the builders dissallowed is Christ the Saviour. He was refused by the builders, (the chief priests and rulers,) when he was delivered up, by them, and was put to death at their request. But, he was emphatically made "the head-stone of the corner," when he was raised from the dead. This resurrection proved that though disallowed of men, he was honored of God. Of this, the Psalmist says, "This is the Lord's doing." And the time on which this took place, is said to be "the day which the Lord hath made." That the christian Sabbath is spoken of here, the best expositors agree:—"Here is the doctrine of the christian Sabbath; it is the day which the Lord has made." † "The day of thanksgiving also, which David and Israel celebrated, was but a shadow of that blessed day which saw the Redeemer risen from the dead; "that was indeed "the day which the Lord had made." ‡ This psalm then contains a prophetical intimation, that the day of the Savior's resurrection would be peculiarly honored. "The day God made;" How? By setting it apart as the day of spiritual rest and gladness. For, says the Psalmist, "We will rejoice and be glad in it."

Again, "And when these days are expired, it shall be on the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt-offerings upon the altar, and your peace-offerings, and I will accept you, saith the Lord God." Ezek. xliii. 27. This prophecy refers to New Testament times. It announces the fact, that during these times, "burnt offerings and peace-offerings" should be presented on the eighth day. This eighth day is an intimation of the christian Sabbath: it is the eighth when counted in connection with the week or seven days preceding. According to the style of the Old Testament, christian worship and ordinances are called "burnt-offerings and peace-offerings." The conclusion is, that during the gospel, the eighth day should be appropriated to the purpose of public worship in the sanctification of the Sabbath; and this, counted in connection with the seven days of purification, is the same with the first day of the week.

2. The appearance of Christ to his disciples after his resurrection.

It is a remarkable fact in the history of Christ, that particular notice is taken of his appearing to his disciples on the same day of the week, on which he arose from the dead. "Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut, where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst; and saith unto them—peace be unto you." John xx. 19. "And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said—peace be unto you," verse 26. Although the Saviour appeared several times during that first day of the week on which he arose—a whole week is suffered to pass before he is seen of them again; or if he was seen of them during the interval, it was not deemed worthy of record; while his appearing to them on the next first day of the week is carefully recorded. Thus, the first day of the week was particularly honored by him, and appears to have been distinguished from other days.

3. The dispensation of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost.

This was the day following the Jewish Sabbath. The disciples were commanded to tarry in Jerusalem till this time; and when it was come, "the disciples were gathered together with one accord in one place." The promise of the Spirit was then fulfilled, "and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Thus, again a peculiar honor is conferred on that day of the week on which Christ arose from the dead. And taken in connexion with other circumstances, it shews that the first day of the week was designed by the Redeemer to have the honor conferred upon it of being thenceforth the day of weekly rest.

4. The practice of the Apostles.

This is of equal authority with a direct precept. They were extraordinary officers in the church appointed by Christ, and by him instructed to settle whatever pertained to her order and worship. The practice of the church, as authorized by the Apostles, and the example of the Apostles themselves, are the highest authority which we can have in the case. The disciples met on the first day of the week for religious services; and on that day the Apostles preached and administered the Lord's Supper. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them—ready to depart on the morrow, and continued his speech until midnight." Acts xx. 7. We have here, in the first place, the fact that the disciples were assembled, and that Paul preached and administered to them the Lord's Supper on the first day of the week. Secondly, It appears that the Apostle was in great haste—"ready to depart on the morrow." The cause of Paul's haste was his determination to be at Jerusalem by the day of Pentecost, "if it were possible for him." To enable him to accomplish this object he must lose no time unnecessarily on the journey. But, it appears from the sixth verse, that he abode no less than seven days in Troas; six of these preceded the first day of the week on which he preached and administered the Lord's Supper. Considering that Paul was in such haste, that he departed without retiring to rest after an extraordinarily protracted service, there must have been some very strong reason why he delayed his departing till the close of seven days. Set aside the fact that the first day of the week was the Sabbath or day appropriated for weekly public worship, and no satisfactory reason can be assigned for his remaining so long at Troas. But let this be admitted, and we have a most satisfactory reason for his remaining over the first day of the week.

"Now, concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the Churches of Galatia, even so do ye; upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store." 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2. Thus we learn that the Churches of Galatia and Corinth, though at a great distance from one another, were in the habit of meeting together on the first day of the week. This furnishes another proof that the weekly Sabbath was held on that day by the Apostles and the Apostolic Churches.

"I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day," said the venerable Apostle John. Rev. i. 10. There can be no misapprehension as to what is meant by the Lord's Day; it is the day of the week on which our Redeemer arose from the dead. First, John speaks of "the Lord's Day" in such a way as evidently presupposes that the churches of Asia to whom he was writing were familiar with the expression. Secondly, it appears that he was employed in religious services and that day —"I was in the Spirit." The noticing of the particular day, and the state of mind in which the Apostle was, show evidently that there was something peculiar to that day. Why mention the day if it were nothing different from other days?

5. The practice of the church in the first ages of Christianity.

By the aid of ecclesiastical history we learn the important fact, that the first day of the week has been kept by the Church as the Sabbath ever since the days of the Apostles; the practice which in Scripture is authorized by their example, is followed by the Primitive Church. This we hold to be unquestionable evidence that the change from the last to the first of the week, as the day on which the Sabbath was kept, was founded on the authority and example of the Apostles themselves. "There are," says Mosheim, "certain laws, whose authority and obligation were universal and indispensible among all Christians, and of these we shall here give a brief account. All christians were unanimous in setting apart the first day of the week on which the triumphant Saviour arose from the dead, for the solemn celebration of public worship. This pious custom, which was derived from the example of the Church of Jerusalem, was founded upon the express appointment of the Apostles, who consecrated that day to the same sacred purpose, and was observed universally thoroughout all the Christian Churches, as appears from united testimony of the most credible writers."*

*Mosheim's History of the Church, century first.

Ignatius and Justin Martyr, the earliest christian fathers, whose writings have survived the wreck of ages, distinctly speak of the "Lord's Day," as that on which our Saviour arose from the dead; and as kept by all his disciples, as the Sabbath, in their public assemblies. The former of these fathers is understood to have been the disciple and friend of the Apostle John; he suffered martyrdom about ten years after John had written the Book of Revelation. The early period of the Church in which Ignatius lived, the opportunity which he had, as the personal friend of at least one Apostle, gives his testimony the highest value. In one of his epistles, reasoning against the observances of the Jewish Sabbath, (as some of the Jewish converts were thus disposed,) he says, "Let us no longer Sabbatize, but observe the Lord's Day, on which our Life arose." Justin Martyr suffered about sixty years later than Ignatius, but his testimony is equally explicit as to the observance of the first day of the week.

Besides the above conclusive evidence, we submit the following considerations on a passage which appears to us to be direct authority. Heb. iv. 9. "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." Commentators, generally, apply this passage to the heavenly rest. This interpretation is so agreeable to the faith and the hope of believers, that it has obtained a pre-occupancy in the minds that may not be easily shaken. The application of the passage to the Christian Sabbath does not in the least affect the sureness of the heavenly rest but confirms it. The point to be proved is the proposition contained in the third verse. "For we which have believed do enter into rest." Having proved this, the Apostle draws a conclusion from it, which is contained in the ninth verse. In the preceding context he speaks of three rests —one, that of God when he had finished the work of creation; a second, that promised to the children of Israel in the land of promise; the third is that of heaven.—To prove this, is the point to which the Apostle's argument is directed, and the proof is summary and complete. He had stated the proposition in the commencement of the argument, "For we which have believed do enter into rest." This could not be the creation rest; nor could it be the rest in the land of Canaan, as he shows in the 7th and 8th verses. The subject of the ninth verse is not then the point which the Apostle had undertaken to prove, but it is a conclusion which he obtains from that point, after it has been proved. The conclusion is this:—As the first and second rests had each of them a day by which they were weekly commemorated, so the third rest into which all the people of God do enter, has also its day of commemoration. The work of God in creation being finished, it is commemorated by the weekly Sabbath; the work of bringing the children of Israel into Canaan being finished, is also commemorated by the weekly Sabbath; this being given to the Jews as an additional reason why the Sabbath should be sanctified. The work of Christ being finished; he having obtained for God's people the heavenly rest—this finished work too, is to have a Sabbath day's rest as a commemoration of it. And this is what the Apostle asserts in the ninth verse, "There remaineth, therefore, a rest (a Sabbath) to the people." The work of redemption is honored, not by by being added as an additional reason for keeping the seventh day rest, but by changing the day from the seventh to the first day of the week.

Unless the Apostle had designed to intimate a day of rest during the gospel dispensation, as well as a real spiritual rest by believing, no reason can be given for his referring to the works of God; his rest and the appointment of the original Sabbath. Besides, he does not use the same word to express the idea of rest in the ninth verse, which he use in every other instance in the context. In the context it is a word which signifies rest in general; but in the ninth verse the word used signifies the rest of the Sabbath—a Sabbatism. * This shows plainly that he does not speak in the ninth verse of the same rest, concerning which he argues in the context. But, of a Sabbath rest which remains to the people of God—the first day of the week—the day on which Christ arose from the dead.—This view is further corroborated by the comparison stated in the 10th verse, between the ceasing from the work of creation on the part of God, and the ceasing from the work of salvation on the part of Christ. "For he (Christ) that is entered into his rest. He also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his." And as a token of the resting of God from the work of creation, the primeval Sabbath was appointed; so the Sabbath was changed from the last to the first day of the week, as a pledge and a token to the church that Christ had ceased from the work of salvation by finishing it.—Reformed Presbyterian.

CIRCULAR—TO THE CHRISTIAN PUBLIC.

Feeling that in order to convince mankind of the real worth of the Sabbath institution and observance, there should be unity of action by all the friends of the Sabbath, and that such unity of action should be qualified with the command of God, and be based on "the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the corner-stone." The writer will here propose such a stand according to the best of his judgment, humbly and earnestly praying any christian friend to correct any mistake through the medium of the Register.

1. "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: Therefore, the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath." Mark ii. 27,28. The first seventh day was blessed and sanctified, and made a Sabbath for man, for all mankind, before man had sinned. Therefore, the Son of man is Lord of this same seventh day Sabbath which was made for man, teaching us that this is "also" an institution of his kingdom.

2. "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Ex. xx. 10. It is a part of the royal law of God which cannot be altered, changed, nor pass away, not "one jot or tittle of it, till heaven and earth pass away." Matt. v. 17, 18, 19. Luke xvi. 17. Ps. cxi. 7, 8. Rom. viii. 4. Rev. xiv. 12.

3. This Sabbath is mentioned some fifty-five times in the New Testament.—Matt. xii 1 to 12, and xxiv. 20, and xxviii 1. Mark i. 12, and ii. 23 to 28, and iii. 2, 4, and vi. 2, and xvi. 1. Luke iv. 16. 31, and vi. 1 to 9, and xiii. 10 to 16, and xiv. 1, 3, 5, and xxiii. 56. John v. 9, to 18, and vii. 22, 23, and ix. 14, 16. Acts i. 12, and xiii. 14, 42, 44, and xv. 21, and xvi. 13, and xvii. 2, and xviii. 4. Heb. iv. 4, showing that it was Christ's "custom" and Paul's "manner" to observe the seventh day Sabbath; and that it was the practice of the followers of Christ to "rest the Sabbath day, according to the commandment," after Christ was crucified. Luke xiii. 56: that Jews and Gentiles, believers and unbelievers, held their religious meetings for worship on the seventh day. Acts xiii, 42, 44. And that so late as A. D. 53, Luke, the writer of the Acts of the Apostles, knew of no other 'Sabbath' except the Seventh day. Acts xviii. 4.

4. The first day of the week is mentioned, Matt. xxviii. 1. Mark xvi. 2, 9.—Luke xxiv. 1. John xx. 1, 19. Acts xx. 7, Cor. xvi. 2, and in all these places the word day is in italics. And all these places show that "the first-day of the week" was not then the "Sabbath day;" but that the first day of the week was always understood to mean the very next day after the Sabbath, as Matt. xxviii. 1.

The places quoted by many to prove the first day of the week to be "the Sabbath day," after the resurrection of Christ are, John xx 19. But here the disciples "were assembled in the evening for fear of the Jews," and not to celebrate a new Sabbath. Again, they quote verse 26, "And after eight days again the disciples were within," &c. But the day of the week is not mentioned in this place, it must have been about the second day of the next week at evening. Again they quote Acts xx, 7, where the "disciples came together" in the evening after the Sabbath "to break bread," (verse 8 shows this to be an evening meeting, and not intended as a "Sabbath" meeting for preaching and worship, as Acts xiii. 42, 44.) This evening meeting where "there were many lights in the upper chamber" then, is no proof of a new Sabbath day!! Again, they quote 1 Cor. xvi 2, "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him." But Paul did not tell these brethren to do this individual business on the "Sabbath day," but as the very first business of the week; no meeting, no congregation, no new Sabbath here mentioned!! Again, they quote Rev. i. 10. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." But no where is the first day of the week called the "Lord's day" in scripture. But the seventh day is called the Lord's day. Isa. lviii. 13. Mark ii. 28. Luke vi. 5. But many believe John had reference to being in visions on the Lord's day, that is, on the "great day of the Lord"—the great day of events which was then revealed to John.—Again, they quote Psalms cxviii. 24. But this is the day of Christ the day of salvation. "Have they not spun a fair thread" says a Roman Catholic writer, "in quoting the scriptures to prove Divine authority for the change of the Sabbath? Could we produce no better to prove purgatory and prayers for the dead, they might have good reason to laugh us to scorn." [The Catholics urge the change of the Sabbath, as an act of their church.]—There is, then no authority, no precept, nor example in the New Testament for calling the first day of the week the Sabbath, or Lord's day. But if the words, "The Sabbath day"—"The next Sabbath day," and "every Sabbath," meant the seventh-day when the Acts of the Apostles were written, then, the same words mean the same thing now; the Man of sin, the Mystery of iniquity, the great changer of "times and laws," (Dan. 7th ch.) to the contrary notwithstanding. Neither will the example of Christ in travelling with two men seven and a half miles to Emmaus and back to Jerusalem, making fifteen miles, prove that first day after his resurrection to be intended as a christian Sabbath or rest-day! Luke xxiv. 13, 15.

5. Christ our Lord was crucified "the midst of the week," the fourth day of the week "about the ninth hour," (three o' clock in the afternoon,) and the same day "at even" as the "high Sabbath" of the Jews (the fifth day of the week.) "drew on," "Joseph and Nicodemus took the body of Jesus" and laid it in "a new sepulchre," "because of the Jews preparation day," for the "high Sabbath" or feast day was to be held on the next day, the fifth-day of the week. And Jesus was to be precisely "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, as a sign that he was the true Messiah. Matt. xii. 40. Jonah i. 17. John ii. 19, 21. Mark viii. 31. So that he must rise the seventh-day of the week "at even," just the same time of day that he was interred on the fourth-day. Thus, Christ our Lord was risen before the end of the seventh-day Sabbath. Matt. xxviii. 1, 6. But to say to say, as many do, that Christ was crucified on the sixth-day, (called Friday,) and that he rose first-day morning, is to contradict the Scriptures and the true "sign" of his Messiahship, which he repeatedly gave to the Jews! To say that he arose the first-day morning, we will count back to seventh-day morning, is one day and one night; and still back to sixth-day morning, is two days and two nights; and still back to fifth-day morning, is three days and three nights. But the reader cannot believe that Jesus was laid in the new tomb in the morning of any day.—Where it is objected, that Mark has said Mark xvi. 9. "Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week," &c., I answer, that this scripture, nor no other scripture says that Christ rose on the first-day of the week. But that he "was risen," early, &c., in the past tense. He "was risen" even before "the end of the Sabbath." Matt. xxviii. 1. But even if he had risen on the first day of the week, that could not have altered or changed the Sabbath of the seventh-day which was to be kept so long as there should remain an Israelite on this earth. Exo. xxxi. 13 to 18.

6. That the seventh day was regarded as the Sabbath for several hundred years after Christ, we may see, by comparing Acts xiii. 42, 44, and xvi. 13, and xvii. 2. and xviii. 4. 7. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." Rom. iii. 20. "Sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John iii. 4. "For He that said, Do not commit adultry, said also, Do not kill. Now, if thou commit no adultry, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law." James ii. 11.—Also, He that said, Do not kill, said also, "The seventh-day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Now, if thou do not kill, yet if thou do not keep the seventh-day Sabbath, thou art become a transgressor of the law. "The law of God is spiritual," "the law is holy, the commandment is holy, and just, and good." And if those who have had the law "shall be judged by the law" "in the day of Judgment," Rom. ii. 12, 16. James ii. 12. John xii. 48, then, what does the law of God know concerning keeping any other day of the week for the Sabbath, besides "the seventh," which God commanded, blessed and sanctified? The answer is given, Mark vii. 7, 8. Matt. xv. 6, 9.—"Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition." "But in vain do they worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

If, then, "By the law is the knowledge of sin," and if "sin is the transgression of the law," and if he that offends in one point, or in one command, "is guilty of all," and if we know by the law that it is sin, and a trangression of the holy law of God for a Roman Catholic christian to bow down to images; we know also, by the same law that it is sin and a trangression of the holy law of God for a Protestant christian to disregard "the seventh-day Sabbath," which "was made for man," whether he kept any other day or not.

Editors, who with Paul "delight in the law of God after the inward man," without any alteration, are respectfully requested to give the above circular a place in their papers, with such corrections as truth may require, and much oblige a humble friend to union on the basis of the truth.

ROBBERY.—The Dry Goods Store of Jas. Dougherty, Esq, was broken into on Tuesday night last, and robbed of Silks and other valuable articles, to the amount of 15 hundred dollars.—Stub. Herald, 29th ult.

STEAM BOAT ACCIDENT.—The Steam Boat Czar and Tarquin came in contact on Sunday night last about 15 miles above this place, and caused the former to sink almost immediately in 6 feet water. The Czar was on her downward passage, and was richly freighted with Dry Goods, Queensware, &c. The Tarquin was but slightly injured.—ib.

MRS. HARRISON had reached Cincinnati on her way to Washington the morning on which the intelligence of the President's death reached there. She bears her bereavement better, in her infirm state of health, than could have been hoped. Most of her family are near her, to support and comfort her.

A late Belgian paper announces the elopement of a Portuguese-Jewish gentleman, who has for many years resided at Brussels, with one of the most wealthy heiresses of Belgium, who has refused several offers. The fugitives were supposed to have proceeded to London.

CONSUL DEAD.—Henry D. Gale, of this city, American Consul to Velasco, Texas, was drowned on the passage out.—N. Y. paper.

MR. BIDDLE'S FOURTH LETTER is published in the National Gazette of yesterday, and the editors of that paper announced the receipt of a fifth to be published to-day.

This letter is devoted to an explanation of the writer's private account with the Bank as set forth in the Report of the Committee; and furnishes, besides, certain testimony to prove that Mr. Biddle, while President, did not show any favor in the way of loans, &c, to his relatives. The explanation of the account is in our judgment, satisfactory; and the proof that favor was not extended as alleged, is conclusive. The concluding paragraphs of the letter are intended to show that the proceedings of this Reporting Committee have very much injured the Bank; and this, too, is as we think pretty clearly made out.

Indeed, as we have already remarked, Mr. Biddle has succeed in putting a brand on the members of this Committee which they can never obliterate: whether, in the event, he will clear himself remains to be seen.—N. Y. Signal.

MR. BIDDLE'S FIFTH LETTER, published in the National Gazette of Saturday, is devoted to a defence of Mr. Jaudon, and it is the most able and finished letter of the series. It is confined to the single point we have mentioned, and triumphantly refuses the charges brought against Mr. Jaudon in the Report.

We make a single extract from this fifth letter; which extract sets forth an obvious truth in a striking light, and in language remarkably simple and polished:

"Now here are the facts—'We have given,' says the Committee, 'the simple facts without comment.' But nine times out of ten these simple facts without comment are made to tell the greatest falsehoods. Facts are not truth—they are only the materials of truth—and their value, nay, their very meaning depends on the manner in which they are presented. Forty-nine facts may make a falsehood until the fiftieth fact makes truth of the whole, and quite as much deception is produced by misplacing facts as by total fiction. The case of Mr. Jaudon is a remarkable instance of this, for here are a parcel of statements called facts, and I suppose they are facts, but they are so scattered and separated that the truth which they contain is studiously hidden, and while these facts, as stated by the Committee are intended to operate to the disadvantage of Mr. Jaudon—when you put these very facts in their proper places they reflect great credit upon him."—N. Y. Signal.

GOING FAR FOR TRADE.—In one of our Pittsburgh papers we have a statement that a regular trade is kept up between that enterprising city and the Santa Fe country. A merchant there, a Mr. Beeler, ships goods in a steamboat for Independence, Missouri, which are taken thence in wagons to Santa Fe, a distance of 897 miles by land. Goods are also consigned to him for the American Fur Company, from the Eastern cities, to be sent on steamboats to St. Louis, and then be loaded in steamers to Yellow Stone, 3060 miles—there re-loaded into keel boats, and taken to the very head of the Missouri river, to the Company's fort and store, in the Rocky Mountains, 600 miles farther. The whole distance to which from the Eastern cities, is about 5640 miles. Such is the spirit of trade and commerce.

MR. ESPY, THE METEROLOGIST.—The Paris correspondent of the Boston Courier in a letter received by the Acadia, has the following notice of this distinguished gentleman:

Mr. Espy has been here for some time, trying to get an opinion from the academy, respecting his theory of storms, &c., and at last has succeeded. The committee has made a very favorable report, which was to have been read in public session yesterday.—He delivered last week a course of lectures upon the subject, to a select circle of Americans and French savans, and has gone to Havre, to embark in the packet of the 6th, for New York. Mr. Espy has lectured in England and Scotland, and I believe he is the first American that ever has given a lecture on any science, in Great Britain.

GERMAN BANK, WOOSTER, OHIO.—We some weeks since copied a small witty paragraph, stating that a person having borrowed $150 of the German Bank of Wooster, Ohio, offered its own notes in payment of the debt, but they were refused by the Cashier, who required better funds. The Cashier has written us a letter denying the truth of the story, and offering the amount in question to any one who will prove that ever a dollar of the Bank's own money was refused at the counter.

We looked upon the item as a joke which could not injure the interests of the bank in any quarter, believing that no person would possibly regard it in any other light than a harmless witicism.—Saturday Courier.

"There is a tear for all who die,
A murmur o'er the humblest grave,
But nations raise the funeral cry,
And Triumph weeps above the brave."

The death of Harrison has created a deeper and more melancholy sensation throughout the Republic, than any other event of the kind since the decease of the Father of his Country. In every city, and town, and hamlet, where the mournful intelligence has been received, the expressions of respect and grief has been strong and universal.

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... MAY 5, 1841.

In looking over a back number of the Protestant, we see a notice of the death of the Rev. John Haughton, of Cincinnati. Br. H. was a man of fine talents, uncompromising religious integrity, and a firm friend of the M. P. Church. We have been much afflicted at his late misfortunes, but God has safely delivered him from all his earthly calamities. May the most high protect his bereaved family.

The Massillon Gazette, of the 22d ult., says, the water was let into the canal on Monday last, and that boats were then loading for the north.

YOUTH'S MAGAZINE.—We have received three numbers of this work from Pittsburgh, Pa. From a brief examination, we should judge, it will be both amusing and instructive to the young. The price is 62½ cents with a cover,—50 cents without. Address B. F. SMITH, editor, Pittsburgh, Pa.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION.—The steamboat Henry Eckford, while lying at the wharf at New York, burst her boiler and killed some half a dozen persons, being about the half on board at the time.

DR. ELDRIDGE.—This person is now undergoing his third trial in Philadelphia, on a charge of swindling some of the Banks of that city. The Chronicle censures his prosecutors very severely for so long persisting in their attacks upon Eldridge without any additional light upon his case, and thinks the Banks, who are themselves depending upon the lenity of the public for their existence, should be the last to persecute a man after this style.

The Ohio State Journal says, "we understand (not officially) that Mr. John G. Miller is appointed postmaster of this city."

SWINDLING.—It will be seen by the following articles, which we take from the New York Signal, that another swindler has been bleeding the banks very profusely:

THE LATE FORGERY AT CINCINNATI.—The Cincinnati Gazette of Saturday, referring to the previous article, (noticed yesterday) detailing the means by which a certain "W. M. Parker" managed to defraud the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati out of the sum of $13,000, has the following additional particulars:

"In addition to the facts then stated, we have since learned that the same villain, under the name of Robert Dawson, appeared at Louisville on the 31st ult. and called at the Bank of Kentucky for a half certificate of deposite of the Commercial Bank of New Orleans, which had been enclosed to Mr. Gwathmey, the Cashier, in a letter which is an exact copy of that to Mr. Gano, except the names. The amount of the certificate was $13,000 which was purchased by Mr. Gwathmey, and paid for in Kentucky, Indiana, and Cincinnati bank notes, in about equal amounts. Mr. G. describes the swindler as a rather short, thick set man, with a broad forehead hair thin, face sallow, a defect in the fore tooth and thinks he was a little stoop shouldered.

A letter was also received by Mr. Bush, Cashier of the Branch of the N. Bank, of Kentucky at Covington, purporting to be from Mr. Copeland, Cashier of the Merchant's Bank, New Orleans, dated March 17, enclosing a forged certificate of that Bank for $11,000 specie, to Mr. Bush, to be delivered to W. M. Parker, which letter bears the New Orleans post mark, but having been first sent to some wrong office, did not reach Mr. Bush until three days ago. This certificate has never been called for.

It is now evident that Mr. Dawson, or Mr. Parker, is operating largely, and has probably made attempts upon other banks. As he is, evidently, an Englishman, it is not improbable he is the same adroit villain whose arrival in the United States from London was lately announced in the papers. His frauds have, already been great, and the public eye every where should be on the look out.

We are authorized by the officers of the Bank of Kentucky, and Com. Bank of Cincinnati, to say that a liberal reward will be offered by these Banks for the apprehension of this rogue. From the magnitude of his scheme of operations it is most probable he has accomplices.

ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL OPERATION.—The rogue, who under the names of W. M. Parker and Robert Dawson, has been doing the Western banks out of large sums, has made a successful movement upon this city in the same manner. On or about the 15th ult. Mr. Thompson, Cashier of the Bank of America, received the following letter which it will be perceived is word for word like the one received by Mr. Gano, of the Lafayette Bank, Cincinnati, save the substitution of "Nathl. Britton" for "W. M. Parker," and the increased amount of the certificate.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF NEW ORLEANS.
March 17, 1841.

D. Thompson, Esq., Cashier Bank of America, N. Y:

Dear Sir—In conformity with the request of Nathl. Britton, Esq., of London, I hand you enclosed half my certificate of deposite in his favor, for $23,000 specie, which please deliver him on presentation of the first half.

Mr. Britton is unacquainted with your city, and has adopted this course for safety and identity.

I recommend him to your favor.

Yours, Respectfully,
GEO. O. HALL, Cashier.

Soon after this was received Mr. Nathl. Britton made his advent in this city, and on applying to Mr. Thompson with one half of the certificate was by him introduced to Messrs. Jacob Little & Co., who purchased the certificate of him and paid the proceeds in a check on the Union Bank. His deportment is said to have been such as not to give the slightest suspicion, and such was his coolness that we understand, on presenting the check at the Bank, and, being requested to prove his identity, he returned to Messrs. Little & Co.'s and obtained the necessary proof. He afterward attempted a similar operation on the Girard Bank, Philadelphia, but on some doubt being raised in the matter, he stepped out, saying he would return, but has not since been heard of. The whole amount which Mr. Parker alias Mr. Dawson alias Mr. Britton has gained by his swindling forgeries, as far as known, is $49,000. We learn that little hope is entertained of the recovery of this large sum.—Courier.

We give from Bicknell the following additional particulars in relation to the operations of this swindler.

The particulars of the case of the Girard Bank, are thus stated in a slip, for which we are indebted to our neighbors of the Ledger:

"On the 2d of April inst. Mr. Lewis, Cashier of the Girard Bank, received a letter from G. O. Hall, Cashier of the Commercial Bank of New Orleans, containing one half of a certificate of deposite of that Bank for 21,000 dollars, made in the name of Matthew Draper, of London; the letter is the same, word for word, except the names, as the one that has been published, addressed to the Cashier of the Lafayette Bank, Cincinnati.

"On the 13th of April, Mr. Draper called at the Girard Bank, and produced to the Cashier the other half of the certificate, curiously cut, which matched the other half Mr. L. had previously received. After going among the brokers trying unsuccessfully to sell it, he returned to the Girard Bank, when Mr. Lewis purchased it of him. No doubt of the genuineness of the letter or certificate existed in the minds of the officers of the Girard Bank, but from subsequent circumstances, and the conduct of Mr. D., an apprehension arose in their minds as to the identity of Mr. Draper, and it was thought best by the officers to require the return of the money, which was obtained on condition that it should be made up as soon as advice of the payment of the certificate at New Orleans was received. The certificate was forwarded to the Commercial Bank on the 13th of April, and no doubt existed in the minds of the Bank here, that it was a certificate from the same plate (an elaborately engraved one) as that used by the Bank, from which it purported to come.

"It has been since ascertained that Mr. Draper arrived in this city, and put up at Sanderson's Merchant's Hotel, on the 11th of April. The money was obtained from the Bank on the 13th, and not recovered from him again until a half or two days after, although he earlier sought for. He remained about the until Friday or Saturday last, since when he not been heard from here.

"We have examined the forgery, and compared it with various other letters, received from the Cashier of the New Orleans Bank, and find in every particular, to resemble the genuine. The body of the letter is in blue ink, perfectly resembling the hand of the clerk that performs that duty in the Commercial Bank, as does the color and texture of the paper, and the Cashier's signature; and even the seal upon the wafer, the number and distance of the indentions, perfectly tallies with those of the genuine. So well does the counterfeit represent the genuine, that it is only from reading it that it can be distinguished.

"This is one of the most stupendous frauds ever practised in this country—that is, the fraud, by an acknowledged rascal—some bank transactions, under the sanction of law, and throw it in the shade. He has obtained from the Cincinnati Bank, 13,000 dollars; from the Louisville Bank, 13,000 dollars; and from the New York Bank of America, 23,000 dollars; and now in his possession, 21,000 dollars from the Girard Bank; in all, 70,000 dollars; besides others which may not yet have come to light. It is generally believed that the depredator has sailed for Europe, and that he is the same adroit villain who, on arrival in the United States from London, was lately announced in the papers.

"Since the foregoing was in type we have since learned that the person from whom the money was obtained was not the person who obtained the money from the Bank, but that it was questionably the same money, and was obtained through the intervention of the police in the lower part of the city. The person holding it was evidently an accomplice, who made every exertion to escape, and as evidently returned the booty through a compromise that had for its object the return of dollars to the Bank, and to the rascal the permission to run unwhipped justice.

"We have also learned that efforts were made by this same gang to obtain from the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank, and from the Bank of Pennsylvania, of this city, through the instrumentality of duplicate certificates, 30,000 dollars; from one 17,000, and from the other 13,000 dollars, but they were unsuccessful in both instances."

MCLEOD AFFAIR.—A great deal has been said and written on this subject, by both the nations immediately concerned, but the following article from an English pen, has as much calmness and candor as any thing we have seen. The article though long is well worth a perusal. It satisfies us that there is at least one man in England who has not lost his sober sense:

From the London Examiner.

THE SEIZURE OF THE "CAROLINE."—We believe that the general excitement respecting McLeod rests on the assumption of the following facts. That he had either nothing to do with the burning of the Caroline, or, if concerned, it acted in obedience to the orders of the British Government; that the service on which he was employed (supposing him to have been actually engaged in it) was a lawful act of self defence, that the responsibility of the act was assumed by the British Government, that it has been the subject of negociation between the countries, and that McLeod therefore is obviously irresponsible, whatever be the course which the negociation may take: that notwithstanding this he has been arrested by the war party in the State of New York, that an indictment has been found against him on perjured evidence, that after the judge had, as he was bound to do, admitted him to bail, an American mob prevented his reclaiming his liberty; that notwithstanding the remonstrance of our ambassador, he is in violation of public law, to be tried; that he will propably be convicted, and without our forcible intervention, hanged, and that our honor and our duty to one of our fellow subjects requires us to rescue him, though it be at an expense of a war.

Happily of this assumption, only a portion is true, and that not the most material is true; and we shall show the degree in which it is inaccurate by stating the real facts of the case.

In December, 1837, a set of ruffians consisting of several hundreds of Canadian refugees and American borderers, seized Navy Island, an Island in British waters, and from thence attempted, though ineffectually, to cannonade the British village of Chippewa, and threatened an actual invasion of the continent of Upper Canada. To prevent this a body of militia, commanded by Mr. Macnab, the Speaker of the House of Assembly, were ordered to the frontier.

"He received orders," says Sir Francis Head (see his despatch, 20th January, 1838) "to act on the defensive only, and to be careful not to do anything of which the American Government could justly complain as a breach of neutrality. On the 28th of December positive information was given that a small steamboat, the Caroline, had been hired by the pirates who called themselves patriots, to be employed in carrying down cannon and other stores and men between Fort Schlosser, (on the American side) and Navy Island. He resolved, if she came down, and engaged in this service to take and destroy her.—She did come down; she transported a piece of artillery and other stores to the island, and made repeated passages between it and the shore.

"In the night he sent a party of militia (it appears from Capt. Drew's despatch that they were volunteers in boats,) with orders to take or destroy her. They found her moored to the wharf opposite to Fort Schlosser. She was boarded and after a resistance, in which some desperate wounds were inflicted upon the assailants, she was carried. If any peaceable subjects of the United States perished in the conflict, it was and is equally unknown, or whether any such were there. Before this vessel was taken not a gun had been fired by the force under the orders of Col. Macnab. The party loosed the vessel from the wharf, set her on fire, and let her drift down the stream;" that is over the Niagara falls. Such are the facts, as stated by Sir F. Head.

nd they appear to be substantially correct.—Ir. Marcy, the Governor of New York, states fficially the number of persons killed on board ne vessel, or destroyed with her as she went own the Falls, at twelve, besides one shot on ne wharf, but it has subsequently appeared nat this was an exaggeration. Mr. Forsyth the merican Secretary of State, complained to Mr. ox, our minister at Washington, of the atack made on the Caroline while moored to the merican shore. Mr. Fox defended it on the round of self-defence, and the apparent inaility of the New York authorities to control ne ruffians who sallied from her shores to attack urs.

"This extraordinary state of things" he adds, eemed to have impelled her Majesty's subjects Upper Canada to consult their own security y pursuing and destroying the vessel of their iratical enemy wheresoever they might find er."

Mr. Forsyth, in his reply,

"Denied that the facts referred to by Mr. Fox ere justification, the American Government aving adopted measures prompt, vigorous, and uccessful, to repress the unlawful interference f their inhabitants—the great obstacle to which as the excitement occasioned by the burning of ne Caroline."

Mr. Fox, in his reply, refers Mr. Forsyth to er Majesty's Government in England.

Mr. Forsyth made a formal complaint to her Majesty's Government in England, and that overnment returned no answer. Under such ircumstances Mr. McLeod, who is supposed ot to have really taken part in the affair though his brother was present,) has more than nce visited New York, and as we understand oasted to the English party there, that he had ared in the glory of the attack. Now the atack, prima facie, was unlawful. It was a midight attack on American citizens in an Americn boat moored to the American shore. It as not an attack in the progress of hostilities r it appears that not a shot had before been ed by Mr. Macnab or his militiamen or his olunteers. Whether any circumstances of rovocation, or any inability of the State of New ork to restrain her subjects, would have made e act lawful, is a question; the better opinion mong jurists seems to be that they would not. ut, prima facie, it was we repeat, unlawful; e American government had treated it as such h their complaints to the British Minister, had en by him referred to the British Government d from the British Government had received answer.

Mr. McLeod, apparently concerned in this prima facie unlawful act, was arrested some time go in the territory of New York by the local auorities, and we know not by what means, he t off. In the beginning of last December he turned there, and was again arrested, and mmitted to await his trial for murder.

Mr. Fox demanded his release on the ground at—

"The burning of the Caroline was a public act persons in her Majesty's service obeying the ders of their superior authorities; and that the esident of the United States had made it the bject of a remonstrance to the British Govnment, and the matter was still under negotiion.

Mr Forsyth replied—

"That the President had not the power to inrfere with the independent jurisdiction of the ate of New York; that the offence was comtted within the territory of New York, against r laws and citizens, and within the competncy of her tribunals. That it was an unjustifie invasion of the United States territory by armed band from Canada; and that if the deruction of the Caroline was a public act of rsons in her Majesty's service, the obeying lers of their superiors, this fact had not before en communicated to the Government of the ited States by a person authorized to make e admission; and that it would be for the Court decide on the validity of such a defence when ally established."

Now this is all that the American Government s done: indeed, the local authorities have enavored to do even less, for they have endeavorto let McLeod get off by bailing him, though a capital charge. Of course he must be tried, d will be tried. If he fail in proving that he s not implicated, he will plead the orders of r. Macnab. We hope that the Court may feel tified in allowing this plea: it would transfer e discussion from the legal to the political forn in the easiest manner. But if the Court overr the plea, and its validity is purely a legal estion, of course he must be convicted.

But we have no fears of his being executed. It uld be a rash and a cruel act; and an act without motive, since the conviction, or indeed en the allowing the plea that he acted under orders of his superiors, would sufficiently se the question between the Governments.—e have no doubt that, if he be convicted, his ecution will be respited until the issue of the litical negotiation is ascertained. If the isue be favorable to peace, of course his pardon d release must be the consequence: and even t be unfavorable, we cannot think that vengance would be taken on a solitary captive. His e, therefore, we consider safe. But how is the estion between the Governments to be decid? How are we to avoid a war, which would tainly throw back America twenty-five years d England fifty, and which might open to one ntry, or to both, a series of evils such as neithhas endured or even feared?

We see no means of coming to an agreement ile each party remains judge in his own cause. ery week of discussion makes them more confint that they are in the right, and us that we in the right. The only positive issue is a refence to a third party, before whom an agreed ate of facts, or, if the parties cannot agree on e then the whole evidence, shall be laid, and o shall say, first whether the seizure of the Carme was or was not justifiable. If justifiable, at indemnity, if any, is to be given by the merican government for the suffering of Mcod? If not justifiable, what indemnity, if y, is to be given by the English Government the owners and crew of the Caroline? We y, if any, because the referee may hold that, ough the seizure was lawful, so was McLeod's al, and that he must take his indemnity, if y, from the British government; or the referee y hold the seizure was unjustifiable, but yet at the services to which the Caroline has been t deprived those connected with her of any ht to satisfaction.

The local authorities made, indeed, it appars to us, an attempt to evade trying Mr. Mcod by admitting him (certainly by a great tretch of law, for murder is not bailable offence) bail; the mob, however, interfered and caused n to be detained.

Now as far as these proceedings have gone, of om have we a right to complain?

In the first place, of Macnab, for having, in olation of Sir F. Heads's express orders to reain on the defensive and do nothing of which e American Government could justly complain gan his campaign by an act prima facie illegal, d defensible only on the extreme plea of nessity.

Secondly of Lord Palmerston, who allowed the merican remonstrance, on so grave a subject, remain three years unanswered. We are are that it was a disagreeable question. We d to defend ourselves by the most offensive of guments—recrimination; and Lord Palmerston obably thought that the conduct of neither parhaving been irreproachable, the best plan was make no answer, in the hope that no answer uld be required. And we are not sure that is conduct might not have succeeded. But the ly, and, if the facts which we have are correct, e vanity of McLeod, in going among a people fore whose tribunals he must have known that e burning of the Caroline was a questionable t, and boasting of his part in it, have prevented e success of Lord Palmerston's dilatory policy, and now force on the controversy, and certainly under favorable circumstances.

But have we not also a right to complain of the American authorities, either of the supreme government or of the local authorities? We say decidedly that up to the latest intelligence, we have a right to complain of neither. The American authorities have done precisely what we should have, and indeed must have done under similar circumstances. If a mixed band of French refugees and English ruffians were to take part in a French civil war to land on the French coast and annoy the neighboring country, if they derived recruits and supplies from our shore, and before our government could prevent their doing so, a steamer should run from Dover to France and carry them arms and men, and return at night and moor in Dover harbor—if, we say, under these circumstances, a band of French volunteers should at midnight enter Dover harbor, attack the steamer, loose her from the pier, and endeavor to kill the crew and scuttle the vessel, should we or should we not, on the alarm given in the town, interfere to stop such preceedings? If we should interfere, it could be on the ground only that such proceedings, within our own territory, were unlawful. If the whole matter were effected before our coast guard could interfere, should we, or should we not attempt to intercept the actors in their retreat? If that could not be effected, should we not remonstrate with the French Government? If that Government gave no answer and a person describing himself, or described by others as implicated in the attack, came to Dover, or in any part of Kent, would he not be arrested and committed for trial?—And if the French Government required him to be released, on the ground that he had acted in obedience to the lawful commands of his superiors, would not the answer be—"This is the first time we heard of this act officially: let it be pleaded at the trial, let the Court decide whether he acted in obedience to his superiors, and whether the act was of such a nature as their commander could justify. But we will not, (the Americans say they cannot) interfere till the trial is over."

We have received a communication from "Porter & Cullin," which we decline publishing on account of the disrespectful character of its style. For fear we might be accused of exercising a dictatorship over the press, we have heretofore published communications, the language of which was in several instances very exceptionable, hoping that our readers would have discrimination enough to attach the blame to the authors and not to us. But we have been liberally censured for admitting such into our columns, and by the very men, too, who were the first to impose on us in this way. We will now try the log awhile on the other shoulder; that is, we will indure the censure which may come from persons rejected from our columns for indecorousness of style.—For unless our correspondents will couch themselves in respectful terms we will be under the necessity, in future, of rejecting them; a task which is alway painful to us.

The Fayetteville Luminary is the organ of the "Reformed Methodist." Some time since we proposed to it, the following questions.

"What were the circumstances which gave rise to the formation of the 'Reformed Methodist Connection?' How are your conferences formed? How are your preachers appointed to their fields of labor? What are your probable numbers?—The brief information which might be comprised in a half a column or less will satisfy us.

It responds in the following language:

To the first of these questions we reply in the language of the framers of the first edition of our discipline:—A number of Methodists in the States of New York and Vermont, considering themselves too much restricted in their christian privileges under the present mode of Episcopal Church government in America, met at Readsboro, Vt., on the 16th of January, 1814. ELIJAH BAILY, moderator; EZRA AMADON, Clerk. After prayerful deliberation on their grievances, the situation of the church and themselves in relation thereto, unanimously passed the following resolution:—

"To form ourselves into a church under the name of REFORMED METHODIST CHURCH, and to adhere, as far as possible, to the practical principles of primitive Methodism, and to renounce the Episcopal mode of Church government."

The above refers to the organization of the Church. The principal secession which led to the organization occurred in Readsborough a short time previous; and we judge that this branch of the secession constituted one-half of the whole number of the connection, at the time of its organization.

To the second question, "How are your conferences formed?" we answer. Our Annual Conferences are composed of delegates from the several classes or societies within the district. The ratio of representation is fixed from year to year by the Annual Conferences. Our preachers are not entitled to seats in their respective Annual Conferences, by virtue of their office as preachers—though the classes or societies are at liberty to elect them as delegates if they see proper.

Our General Conferences are composed of delegates from the Annual Conferences and each Annual Conference is entitled to one member for every ten members regularly delegated as members at its annual session.

To the third question, "How are your preachers appointed to their fields of labor?" we reply. They are self-appointed. The preachers and societies are at liberty to make their own arrangements both as to the length of time, support, &c., without the interference of the Annual Conference or any other body. These arrangements are sometimes made by the delegates and preachers at and during the time of the session of the conference, but not by the conference. Circuits are sometimes formed by the mutual agreement of the delegates and preachers—but this is a matter which belongs wholly to themselves and over which the conference has no authority. The privileges of societies to settle their own pastors, and preachers to select their own fields of labor are among the reserved rights of local churches and preachers which have never been surrendered up to the conference.

The visiting elders are the only preachers whose field of labor is appointed them by the Annual Conference. It is their duty to travel and preach and hold quarterly meetings on a given district, during the year. It is their duty to preside in the quarterly conferences, on their district.

We are not able to give the exact number of our members, as we have not at our command the returns of the several Annual Conferences.

The number will probably fall between 2 and 3 thousand. We perceive that the Olive Branch, upon the authority of one of our eastern brethren, has put down our number at five thousand, but we think he has got his calculation too high.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST.—This is a spirited little half medium monthly sheet, published by the seceders from the M. E. Church, at Utica, N. Y.; David Plumb editor. We have received the fourth number, the following article from which will give some idea of the prospect of a union of the seceding Methodists so far as they are concerned:

UNION OF SECEDING METHODISTS.—We have before indirectly alluded to the subject of a union of Seceding Methodists. The Reformed Methodist paper and the papers of the Protestant Methodist Church have have all spoken out favorably to the measure. We do think that a union of the kind should be effected if it can be done without a compromise of principle. We are sorry however to say, that at present we do not see how we could enter into union with the Protestant Church, who, in violation of the principle upon which all the secessions have taken place from the M. E. Church, viz: the principle of inalienable human RIGHTS, tolerates Slavery within her pale, and by Disciplinary law has allowed the conferences the privilege of depriving the colored members of their rights. The Wesleyan Methodist Church is organized on strictly Anti-Slavery principles. Our general rule on the subject of Slavery prohibits,

"The buying or selling men, women or children with an intention to enslave them, or holding them as slaves, or in any way, apologizing for or advocating the practice of slaveholding."

The rule on "Fellowship with other Churches" is as follows:

"While the Wesleyan Methodist Church cordially extends the hand of christian fellowship to other evangelical churches, at the same time, we do not admit to our pulpits nor to our communion any slaveholder or apologist for Slavery, nor any person who is in the use of spirituous liquors except in the cases provided for in our general rule on that subject."

Now if we can unite with our brethren without yielding the principle involved in the above rules, we shall be happy to do so. At any rate we are ready to meet in convention to see what can be done.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP GREAT WESTERN.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steam ship Great Western, Capt. Hoskin, left Liverpool on the 8th inst and arrived here on Sunday the 24th, thus making the passage in 16 days. She had a very stormy passage, encountering frequent fields of ice, and in some instances getting clear of them with no little difficulty and delay.

The greatest anxiety was felt in consequence of the non-arrival of the President. She had been out 27 days. Insurance which at first was readily effected at 5, could on the 7th, scarcely be obtained at 30 per cent. The most probable conjecture is, that she has been forced to put into the West Indies for a fresh supply of coal as was the Liverpool steamer in the winter of 1839.

Nothing of political interest has recently taken place. In the House of Commons on the 6th, the case of McLeod was brought up by Mr. Hume, who gave notice that he should move for copies of the correspondence on this subject. The following debate ensued:

Viscount Palmerston said that the next motion on the paper was one of the Hon. member for Kilkenney, relating to the differences at present existing between this country and the government of the United States, and to the arrest of McLeod. He put it to his honorable friend whether, at the present moment, he would think it necessary to bring this question under the consideration of the house. For his part he did not see the expediency of bringing forward this question at the present moment.—(Hear.)

He trusted that there existed, on the part both of the government of the United States and that of this country, an anxious desire to bring this matter to an amicable and satisfactory termination. (Hear, hear.) These matters had excited a strong feeling both at this side of the Atlantic and the other, and whilst these matters were the subject of communication between the two governments, any thing like a discussion of their details could only tend to delay, perhaps to defeat the object, not only of his honorable friend, but that of the English government and of the United States. (Hear, hear.) He hoped, therefore, his hon. friend would postpone his motion. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Hume said no person was more anxious to see relations of friendship maintained between this country and the United States. He was opposed to war of any kind, but a war with the United States would be a most unnatural war. (Hear, hear.) After what had been stated by the noble lord, he had no objection to postpone his motion.

There was a rumor at London on the 5th, received by way of St Petersburg, of the settlement of the Chinese difficulties. It was not confirmed, however, by subsequent arrivals, and was generally discredited. The overland mail was hourly expected when the Great Western sailed.

FRANCE.—The Courier Francais of the 5th says—'It seems certain that M. Guizot has offered the mediation of France to terminate the differences existing between Great Britain and the United States.' No reliable authority is given, however, for this statement.

The Fortifications of Paris were still progressing. The Presse says that, independent of the troops of the line, 30,000 laborers are to be employed in carrying on the works. There was talk of dissolving the Chambers.

The Chamber of Deputies has been occupied with a motion to diminish the number of public functionaries in that body. The whole number of these, 179 are functionaries, more or less dependent on the bounty of the crown.—New York Signal, 26th ult.

ITEMS.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—At the meeting yesterday, after considerable debate, the motion to appoint a Committee for the purpose of preparing a memorial to Congress in favor of a National Bank, was adopted by a vote of 38 to 18.

The funeral of Richard Haughton, the lamented editor of the Boston Atlas, took place on Monday. An impressive pathetic discourse was pronounced by the Rev. Hubbard Winslow, and the body was followed to the tomb, under King's Chapel, by a sorrowing multitude of friends. It will, by and by, be removed to the Cementry at Mount Auburn, where, we doubt not, a chaste and beautiful monument will soon be erected to his memory.

NARROW ESCAPE.—The Hon. J. R. Giddings, of Ohio, was recently brought to the verge of the grave by a mistake in taking some medicine.—At the last accounts his recovery was not certain, but highly probable.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.—A young man in Milford, N. Y. was knocked down by lightning, on the 2d ult. while pasting near a large oak tree, which was shivered to atoms and scattered over an area of five acres. Although completely surrounded by the fragments of the tree, yet, strange to say, he received no other injury than being severely stunned by the shock.

The Erie canal was open for navigation on the 15th ult.

THE MORMONS.—The corner stone of the great Mormon Temple (that is to be) at Nauvoo, Illinois, was laid on the 6th ult. in the presence of seven or eight thousand persons, and the Nauvoo Military Legion, consisting of six hundred and fifty men. The Warsaw (Ill.) World says: "Mr. Rigdon officiated at the laying of the chief corner stone, and addressed the assembly in a very energetic manner in a speech of about an hour's length. On the whole, the exercises passed off with the utmost order, without accident or the slightest disturbance. Gen. Bennett commanded the Legion, under the direction of the Prophet, and acquitted himself in a truly officer-like manner."

The hearing of Alfred H. Davis, charged an accessory to the murder of Julianna Jordan, has been continued till Monday next.—Phil. paper.

The progress of the trial of Dr. Eldridge has been retarded by the sudden demise of the lady of John M. Read, Esq., one the counsels for the prosecution.

The President receives visitors on business daily between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock.—After the latter hour he receives visits of compliment, of friends, and of strangers who desire to be presented to him. The courtesy and urbanity, habitual in him, with which he receives his fellow-citizens make the most favorable impression on all who approach him.—Nat. Int.

President Tyler is 51 years of age. He is therefore younger than the late President, Van Buren, and, indeed, the youngest President we have ever had.

We understand, says the Oswego Herald of the 5th ult., that orders have been received here for the completion and arming of Fort Ontario on the east side of the river. It is also stated that Fort Niagara is forthwith to be put in condition of defence.

The true name of Williamson, the great Boston burglar, turns out to be James Webb. He is an arch old dodger.

It has been ascertained that the fellow who committed the great forgeries at Cincinnati, Louisville and here, did not go in the Acadia from Boston last week. He set a trap for $21,000 at the Globe Bank at Boston, but it did not spring. That Bank received the half of a certificate on the same plan with the rest.—N. Y. paper.

SENTENCED.—A young man has been sentenced by the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, for selling counterfeit lottery tickets, to two years imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

DR. ELDRIDGE.—The evidence on the part of the Commonwealth against Dr. Eldridge, concluded yesterday the 23d ult. Forty-six witnesses have been examined upon this trial. At the last trial of the doctor, eighty-eight witnesses were examined on the side of the Commonwealth.

LOOK OUT FOR A SCOUNDREL.—The Sheriff of Wayne county, in New York, offers one hundred dollars reward for one George N. Williams, better know as Deacon Williams, who was arrested for swindling through his operations in the Wayne County Bank. Said Williams is about 5 feet 10 inches high, rather lank in the face, long neck, head something bald, genteely dressed, had on a black beaver cloth overcoat. The newspapers think he has gone to Wisconsin or Iowa.

FARMING.—We see it stated, that many of the farmers of Chester county have sown their oats and barley, planted their early potatoes, and commenced gardening. On Wednesday last the early flowers were loaded with snow, and the green shrubs looked like the smiling brow of boyhood covered with the gray hairs of age.—Phil. Chron. 23d ult.

Cape of Good Hope paper of the 17th of January, announce the destruction by fire, of the brig Australia, from Dundee, about 600 miles to the westward of the Cape. The Captain and crew escaped in the boats.

MAIL ROBBERY.—The way-mail from this City to Albany on board the North America, was robbed on Friday morning last—the bags cut open, the letters rifled and thrown into the river.—N. Y. paper.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania has rescinded its resolution to adjourn on the 27th inst. It will probably adjourn the first week in May.

Hon. Walter Forward has accepted a complimentary dinner, tendered by the Members of the Bar of Pittsburg.

The Ohio Fund Commissioners have effected a loan of $500,000.—N. Y. Sig.

THE SWINDLER.—The New York Times says,—It is stated, on the authority of letters from Boston, that the accomplished scoundrel who has been fleecing the banks so severely, did not sail in the Acadia. Officer Blaney from Philadelphia, is in this city on the look out for him. He would be a handsome prize to whoever should be fortunate enough to capture him—$10,000 being offered for his apprehension. He is said to have been seen in Philadelphia since the sailing of the steamer. It may be so, but it seems to us that the swindler would not have neglected the opportunity of putting the Atlantic between himself and justice. There are circumstances connected with the affair, such as the alleged genuineness of the certificates and of the signatures of the letters in which they were enveloped, which pass our comprehension. The solution of the mystery will arrive in due time, however, from New Orleans.

MORE ILL NEWS FROM FLORIDA.

Pilatka, April 19.

GENTLEMEN:—I am sorry to inform you that the war has broken out anew. I have just learned that all the Indians, save about twenty have left Tampa, among them Wild Cat, and in fact all of any note. They have killed a couple of express riders. The bag containing the mail has been found perforated with two bullets. one of which was found in a package of letters. I fear we shall hear bad news shortly from the Indians.—Savannah Republican.

ARRESTED—The Cincinnati Chronicle of the 16th ult., states that Edward Layton, the young man who had been arrested on the charge of having caused the death of Mr, Griswell, a Baptist preacher, was brought before the Mayor for examination. After hearing the testimony in the case, he was committed for trial on the charge of murder.

Williamson, the artful dodger from England has been sent to prison in Boston, charged with stealing the $20,000 worth of goods from Davis, Palmer & Co., and the $5000 in specie from Gilbert & Son's. He must have been a very bad fellow to steal specie "in these times."

EPISCOPAL CONVENTION.—A Conventon of Clergymen of the Episcopal Church, will assemble at Harrisburg, Pa., on the 18th of May.

AWFUL OCCURRENCE.—A few nights since, twelve negroes, belonging to the Rev. Welsey Adams, of Jefferson county Florida, were burnt to death. They were all in one building and it is supposed were suffocated, and rendered insensible, as they gave no alarm, and when the doors were opened uttered not a groan. The building was entirely destroyed.

A very destructive fire occurred at Williamsport, Pa., on Saturday night of last week, by which property to the amount $30,000 was consumed.

The Lancaster Intelligencer contradicts the reports of Gen. Jackson's insolvency, 'by authority.'

THE MCLEOD CASE.—The Montreal Herald of the 15th instant, states that a British officer, a passenger in the British Queen steamship, brought out despatches from the British Government to Mr. Fox at Washington, instructing him to demand the release of McLeod or his passports.

A Washington correspondent of date April 4, says:

"The report to-day is that Mr. Fox yesterday received from the Department of State a communication which has decided him to waive the question of his passport till further developments. It is said Mr. Webster offers him the olive branch and the thunderbolt, and told him to take his choice. And this, however, with amicable wishes."

A drowned man was found floating opposite Wellsville, Ohio, on the 19th ult. and after a close examination and inquest, was decently interred. A double case watch, with a card and the name of Samuel Mc Elroy was found upon him. A letter respecting him from Joshua Hart, Esq. can be seen at Harris Intelligence office.—Pitts. Intelligencer.

The Wheeling Gazette says: "George H. Flood, our late Charge d'Affaires to Texas, has resigned and returned to Ohio."

The Ohio Medical Convention will be held at Columbus, on Wednesday, the 5th day of May inst., according to adjournment.

C. F. Mitchell, member of Congress from the Niagara District, New York, has absconded in consequence of forgeries he recently committed in Philadelphia to the amount of $3,000. He has left a family, and is supposed to have gone to Texas.

MORE INDIAN TROUBLES.—Advices from Wisconsin, under date of April 10, are that large bodies of Sioux were gathering in the neighborhood of Fort Snelling, with the design, as was supposed, of making an attack upon it. One of the tribe, it seems, being drunk and disorderly within the limits of the garrison, and resisting an attempt to remove him, was shot down; hence the hostile aspect of the tribe. Two companies from Forts Winnebago and Crawford, has been ordered to Fort Snelling.

TWO VICE PRESIDENTS have died in office, George Clinton and Mr. Gerry, and in both cases the Senate filled the chair pro tem.

There is a glorious revival of religion in Br. Stagg's neighborhood, at this time; 28 have united with our church; there are two from the M. E. Church. We are looking for better times in this city.

Yours, &c., A. C. BARNES.

CONFERENCE MISSIONARY AGAIN.

In Lower Sandusky, "the Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad." "He has" indeed "turned again our captivity,as the streams in the South." And "our mouth is filled with laughter and our tongue with singing." In our former communication mention was made of the refreshing season at our first visit to this place. Also our solemn regret to close the meeting with such notable indications of a revival. But having no meeting house, and the school house could be had only in the evening, with other kindred difficulties in the way of prolonging the meeting,—rolling the responsibility of closing with such a state of feeling in the congregation upon the church, with great reluctance our first delightful visitation terminated on Tuesday evening.—Two weeks afterwards, Hannah preached here again, and again her labors were blessed. (It was under her ministration chiefly that the former occasion was so signally refreshing.) On Sunday (evening,)for the accommodation of the people, she yielded to the solicitations of friends, to occupy the Episcopal Methodist meeting house. It was liberally thronged with attentive hearers. This visit increased the interest of feeling, and strengthened the general desire of the people for a protracted meeting. Appointments were left for me in two weeks, with encouragement that I would consent to their wishes. On my arrival, the call for a protracted meeting was renewed, and the responsibility of refusal, rolled back on me. We had a promised meeting of two weeks continuance, at another place, to commence a week hence. But considering ourselves this year peculiarly providential creatures, the conclusion was to follow this cheering opening in Sandusky. Accordingly we went forthwith into a protracted effort. Hannah returned on Tuesday from Tiffin, the little church, having had those precious seasons of joy and hope, were pretty well prepared for the arduous duties essential to the success of protracted meetings. So that we commenced immediately, regular addresses to sinners. But during the first week, but little yielding appeared among the ungodly. It seemed that at the former meeting they were ready to submit, probably because they were measurably taken by surprise. And in the interim they entrenched themselves, and were not so accessible. But in the second week, we endeavored to rout them from their hiding places, and expose their refuges of lies. And blessed be God, this was truly a successful week,—about 30 souls were happily converted to God. A regular stream of mercy flowed, varying only from about 3 to 5 souls per day. This week was remarkable, moreover,for a steady and unterrupted flow of divine enjoyment. But early in the third week, we had some most solemn encounters with the powers of darkness. Such temptations and awful distress of mind, as are rarely witnessed. Now then the "tug of war" with Satan, came on in deep and solemn earnest. But having some experienced soldiers of the cross and their armour bright, we were nothing intimidated. To arms! to arms! forthwith sounded the spiritual clarion. And, glory be to God! soon the "colors turned" in favor of Zion. This week was replete with the alternate emotions of conflict and conquest. During the meeting we had one fast day, but not one midnight wrestle in prayer. In the day time prayer meeting at 10 o'clock, and conference meeting at 2. Generally, however, they differ but little in their exercises. Preaching every evening, and prayer meeting preceded and often succeeded. On Thursday, preaching morning and evening, and a "social" meeting in the afternoon; the latter were seasons of great interest and benefit. Such were our means and measures, and behold the blessed fruit. Upon the whole, the meeting was one of memorable worth. The faith of saints strengthened by remarkable answers to prayer. As near as ascertained, between 45 and 50 souls were converted and reclaimed! The greatest number of backsliders here, we have ever met with; and many of them were gloriously reclaimed! During the meeting nearly 40 joined the church. And since our first visit to this place between 60 and 70 souls have united with us! And at other places on the circuit, upwards of 30 have been received through other hands. Making in all upwards 100 members added to the Sandusky circuit this conference year already!! Surely this is a spring tide of encouraging accessions after the foggy season, this people had last fall! A goodly number of these were among the choicest members in this region of country, and received from the United Brethren Church. In this accession from a neighboring denomination, we cannot forbear sympathizing with them for their loss, while naturally enough we rejoice at our gain. Our protracted meeting, we trust, has exerted a salutary influence in this town, said formerly to have been noted for infidelity and wickedness. Our convert prayer-meetings, on Tuesday and Friday evenings, are truly occasions of spiritual delight. It is to many astonishing to witness the proficiency of these children of grace. Some of whom having been among the chief of sinners.

We confess our neglect of some parts of the circuit, but this was occasioned, not by disinclination to attend to them, but a moral necessity created by the excitement here. It is hoped that they will now be revived and blessed. For happily, we may now announce the safe arrival of Br. Mercer, the person first appointed to this circuit last conference. And joyfully add that his reception is generally both cordial and encouraging. May his labors of love be abundantly blessed! Also a Br. Darkus, a minister of years and experience, late an itinerant among the United Brethren. He was not only received into the church, at our late quarterly meeting, but also employed to travel with Br. Mercer. Awaiting, of course, the sanction of the President. Probably this may not be officially brought before Br. Ragan, till his 'Presidential' visit in June. At the quarterly meeting in Tiffin, above referred to,we had a season of great spiritual enjoyment. It is true none were added to the church, and none that we know of were converted. But the labors of the meeting were not directed to sinners. The society needed reviving and encouraging, and to this end were the pulpit efforts appropriated and designed. And, praise the Lord, his word did not return unto him void, but revived and refreshed this thirsty hill of Zion. Had it not have been so late in the season, we would have protracted this meeting a few weeks. As it was, some sinners evidently felt the force of truth. Oh! that they may repent of their sins, and give their hearts to God. A 3 days meeting we held at a Br. Henry Bosenberger's two weeks previously, will not soon be forgotten by some, if ever.—It was a most precious season to saints.—Praise the Lord.

In conclusion, permit me to say that, so far this has been one of the happiest years of my itinerant life. With deep sincerity we can say that we envy no brother in the district his appointment or place. And from the bottom of our glad hearts we thank God that we ever saw Sandusky! In addition to the spiritual felicities enjoyed among this people, their extreme kindness and liberality,both professor and non professor, in contributing to the relief of our secular necessities, to enable us to discharge what we feel to be filial duty,not only endears them to the heart, but will engrave them upon a grateful memory as long as life shall last. And if a cup of cold water, given to a disciple, "with a proper motive shall not lose its reward;" may we not hope and pray that a rich reward will be theirs. The same we might say of Mt. Vernon; but we have spoken of them before. In these two protracted meetings alone, we have seen more immediate fruits of ministerial labor, than in 7 years of our common travel and exercise! Perhaps we may afford to rest awhile after these protracted exercises. And a sea voyage may be profitable as well as desirable. And when we return from our contemplated visit to our native land, we hope the conference will grant us again the relation of "Conference Missionary." Rather, to resume our labors on the district, and continue the same year after year at least, till we have gone once thro' the Conference. The discipline fortunately is silent upon the subject how long a Conference Missionary may continue in that field of labor. Yours. &c.,

WM. REEVES.

MISSOURI, MARCH 21, 1841.

Br. Springer: I gladly embrace the opportunity of informing you, and my brethren in Indiana, of my whereabouts.—Through the mercy of God I have located myself on White River, in the State of Missouri. I have travelled pretty much through this State, since I left Indiana in October last, and I have found friends dear and kind. I have much encouragement here. The harvest is great and the laborers are few. Our brethren are few in number in this country, but few as they are, they appear to be resolute,faithful and strong. They are praying for help. If you have in your conference young men to spare, encourage them to come to the west.

I expect to remain located for one year, in which time I shall be engaged in improving my farm, so as to not be burthensome to the church in her infantile state. If I was able I could have calls to fill appointments at three or four different places on every Sabbath. But there are no societies of any order here. The people appear to be well pleased with our form of government and doctrine. I am trying to preach once or twice every Sabbath to very much affected congregations, and prospects appear to be very flattering. Br. Springer, tell our brethren in Ohio, through your paper to pray for us.

Yours, &c., JOSIAH HOPKINS.

IMPORTANCE OF A WELL SPENT YOUTH.

Mr. Editor: This article is addressed to the young. I am but young myself, and although it may appear presumptious in one of my age to give advice, yet if it be observed some may profit by it. The young of this generation must soon fill an important page in this world's history. On us, will, ere long, devolve the duty of preserving in their original purity, our free institutions. In a few years those men who now fill high and important stations, and are at the head of the general and state governments, will have passed away, and with their enterprise and eloquence will be laid in the tomb.—Yea, our law-givers—our ministers of the pure and holy gospel; our men of high moral and intellectual attainments—stars in the church, where they move bright ornaments of society—our high minded mechanics—our honest and intelligent farmers, will soon be inmates of the cold, silent grave, and the rising generation will soon fill their places.

How can we become useful members of society? How can we fill the stations we may be called on to occupy in after life, with credit to ourselves, and honor to those connected with us? How can we discharge the duties of upright and honorable citizens, and daily appreciate the liberties we enjoy, unless we improve the time allotted to us during our youth? It is time for us then, to abandon boyish plays and boyish feelings, and to assume the character and occupation of men.—When we were children our ways were disregarded, because we were children. But now our condition is altered, the world will scrutinize our actions, and will criticise and form their opinions of us thereby. Therefore, we must begin soon to improve our minds; we cannot learn too much—we cannot be too strict in weighing our actions.

But, what are we to understand by a well spent youth? It consists in seizing every opportunity to improve our mental and physical powers, so as to fit ourselves for usefulness, both as it respects our own interest, and the welfare of the community, through coming life. He, who thus improves himself, is prepared to encounter all the vicissitudes of life; he will be an observer of passing events—study the character of eminent men,—learn wisdom from their virtues,and profit by their failings. If he store his mind with useful practical knowledge, and then add the stern and independent character of a Washington, he may be enrolled among the great men of the nation. Whatever situation of life we may then be placed in, whether high or low, rich or poor,we are prepared to render ourselves useful to our fellow men, and will not be dependent on the caprice of any one man, or party of men, for support. With a proper regard for the rights and feelings of others, relying upon the great disposer of events, we may breath defiance to the taunts and jeers of the world; we will be far above the reach of their malice or envy, and may be a blessing to our race.

PARTING OF FRIENDS.

Life, with all its endearments, has (apparently) many ills and inconveniences, to enhance its pleasures. And among the most keen and heart-rendering emotions, is that of parting with near and dear friends. The sad pang of separations has caused many an eye to be suffused with tears, many a heart to beat with sorrow, that was callous to every other emotion of pity, or of grief. Was life annoyed by no troubles, we should not have so lively a relish,for its charms and pleasures, But mingled feeling of joy and grief pervade the heart of every rational being. When we part with friends for a season, how cheering, how delightful the thought, that we can retire from secular business, and by recourse to pen, ink and paper, hold correspondence with those whose virtuous acts we cherish. And in the hours of contemplation too, how will the [illegible] on the wing of fancy fly to the embrace of a kindred and congenial soul. We pour into their bosoms feelings of our own, and receive the sympathising consolation. Even the Grim Messenger Death, with all his terror, severing the strongest earthly ties, imparts to us the pleasing, happy consolation,—

That we may hail our dear friend's spirit,
In a fairer, purer clime;
And eternal joys inherit,
Beyond the stormy sea of time.

SPRING ON THE MOUNTAINS.

This is that season of the year which naturally awakens within us an association of ideas which is pleasing in the highest degree. We recall to mind the early scenes of our childhood and youth, when we trod the verdant grass beneath our feet in quest of early flowers, o'er plains, o'er hills, or by the margin of water courses started the hare from his concealment, or was almost electrified by the sudden uprising and whurr of the pheasant. There is in this season of the year an eloquence in all nature sweeter than the dulcet sounds of the violin, more soul-stirring than the martial notes of the fife. The air, the green grass, the fresh blown flowers of the garden, or still more numerous tribes of forest blossoms, the glittering vernal springs of chrystal waters—all, all are too enchanting for complete description or perfect delineation. How often, when young, have we hied away to the woods for sweet annis, snake root, or elm bark, or as the sap arose in the butter nut got wood made whistles and filled the air with our music.

Spring is a beautiful season of the year in any country—beautiful in Ohio,—but it was my peculiar felicity to have been born a mountaineer. Elevated "above the storm's career," on the very vertebre of a mountain, surrounded even in winter with the poetic laurel or ivy and the ever-green pine,—to these were added on the arrival spring the bloom and aroma of the dogwood, the maple, the locust, the red bud, the honey-suckle and mountain rose, balm mint, and these with a thousand nameless and indescribable trees, scrubs, herbs, plants and flowers, whose odour and beauty associated with the gushing springs, the clear drops of cold water that trickled down from the disc of some shelving massive rock, the many keyed tones of the bells of browsing cattle, the variegated notes of a pack of forty hounds leaping down the steeps of the mountain in hot pursuit of the fox, formed a constellation of beauties, an association of sounds, a compound of odours too thrilling to behold, too delightful a confusion to be fully understood by any but a mountaineer. The wild vines twrilling around saplings that had just burst the integuments that covered their leaves, and spread their foliage to "the powerful king of day," the violets that shot up in nature's ample abundance on every side, through the woods, the turfs of green grass that crowned the summits of the rocks, "like velvet on a cushion," the miseltoe that protruded irregularly from the trunk of some aged tree, and seemed to invite respect and admiration, render a mountain residence in the spring of the year, delightful and romantic in the highest degree. No sounds of contending neighbors,no disturbance to the free contemplation of nature in this part of her happy dominions,unless, perhaps, the merry song of the cow-boy in the pursuit of his cattle, or those sounds already alluded to, which but tended to vary agreeably, prevent monotony, and consequent satiety, were to be heard in all the range. But the gobbling of the turkeys, the whurring of pheasants, the whistling of partridges, the music of the mocking bird and the moan of the dove, make a varied though harmonious kind of music, each part seeming needful to complete the choir and perfect the result. Lead me then this season of the year back to my mountain. Let me drink at the clear spring as it leaps from some stupendous rock. Let me hear the music of my native hills and breathe in peace the uncontaminated air of native elevations, far removed from strife and contention, far removed from earthly ambition and from every base desire, and you may take the city, you may unite your stately edifices and fountains of water, you may summon your musicians to a grand entertainment of flute, pipe, harp, viol and organ, and I will exchange at a word.

JAMES M. FULTON.

ELLEN AND THE BIRD.

BY A LITTLE GIRL.

One day Ellen was standing at the window, playing with a bird in a cage. It belonged to her brother Thomas, who had as many as four. She happened to look up, and saw a little girl of her acquaintance looking at her very much amused, her name was Mary; Ellen did not like her very well, and wishing to show her what she could do, she said, 'Mary, I can open the door of the cage and the bird will not fly out.' 'I should like to see you,' replied Mary. Ellen had done so before, but this time she kept it open too long, and before she thought of it, the bird was gone. Mary laughed triumphantly; this provoked Ellen, and she began to think what she should do. Thomas had a very bad temper and she knew she should have a scolding and perhaps a slap. She was frightened at what she had done, and she thought she might conceal it. The more she thought of it, the more she liked the plan. But still she felt something whispering that it was wrong; this was her conscience, and if she had minded it, all would have been well, but her fear overcame it, and she waited impatiently till Thomas should find it out, which he did soon, and run over the house crying out, 'where is my bird?' Ellen declared that she knew nothing about it, and got off very well; but she was to be found out in a way she little expected. Mary had told it about in school, and it reached Thomas's ears; he came home, and saluted his sister with a push which knocked her down and cut her head against a chair, then slapping her, he went away saying, 'learn not to touch my things.' Ellen got up and told her mother; this led, however, to the disclosure of her falsehood. Their mother, much shocked at the behavior of her children, punished them both severely.

From this it may be seen that a falsehood can never do much good in the end, however it may seem at first; and that a person who tells one cannot be believed afterwards. There is no person among children and grown people who is so much despised as a liar. No one can put any trust in such an one, and she is universally disliked.

FEMALE COLLEGIATE HONORS.—The catalogue of the officers and pupils of the "Wesleyan Collegiate Institute," which has just been published, presents a goodly array of names. This institution is located at Wilmington, Del., and has been in operation several years, but we are not prepared to believe that the young ladies who graduate there, will make better wives, compound a pudding with more nicety, or darn a stocking more neatly, by having the title of "Mistress of Arts," or any other that is bestowed by the faculty, than she would by rejecting all such nonsensical stuff after having completed her education. It is bad enough for men to play at such a child's game, and for the fair sex, we hope they will not follow the foolish habits.—Phil. paper.

VERY MODERATE.—At the convention in Boston, last week, for the discussion of the divine origin of the institution of the Ministry and the Sabbath, it was stated by Mr. Torrey that statistical returns from the whole of New England showed that the average compensation of the entire clergymen did not exceed $300 per ann.—In most of the towns the salary is from three to five hundred, and a large proportion of the clergy get but about $200 in cash.

MAIL CONTRACTS.—We understand the post master general has made his contracts for transporting the mail twenty pr cent. less, on an average, than they have been made at any time within the last twelve years. This arises from the increased cheapness of labor, and the extraordinary amount of competition.

SUGAR.—By a document concerning the culture of sugar, transmitted by the Legislature of Louisiana, to Congress, it appears there are 525 sugar estates in that State, employing 40,000 hands, and the average crop is equal to 70,000 hhds of 1000 lbs.,or 70,000,000, lbs. sugar, and 350,000 gallons molasses; the average value of sugar is six cents per lb., and molasses 20 cents per gallon.

SUMMER PROSPECTS.—The Standard thinks there will probably be fewer marriages and fewer funerals than in former seasons. Young men and women find it so difficult to support themselves, they will not like to incur the farther expenses of marriage and going to house-keeping, in times like these. Hard times induce frugal living, which is beneficial to health, and plays the deuce with the doctors.

MITCHELL, THE FORGER.—A gentleman from New Orleans via Cincinnati,reports that Mitchell was seen going down the Ohio River,on board the New York steamer, a very fast boat, and that about one hundred miles astern of Mitchell, was seen his pursuers, headed by Robert W. Bowyer, the New York police officer, who were makimg the most strenuous exertions to come up with him. The latter party were on board of a fast boat, but it was doubtful whether they would overtake the fugitive.

ANOTHER TORNADO.—The Natchez Free Trader of the 26th ult. says—"On Monday night last, a destructive tornado, passing from the south west to the north east, about one hundred and fifty yards wide, and we have no information how long in extent,struck down in Amity county, between the dwelling of Thos. Tolbert, Esq. and Col. Casten, near Liberty. It was, ruinous to the timber, as the great Natchez tornado.

"BRAVE OLD OAK."—In Monroe Co., (N. Y.) the stump and roots of an old oak were recently sold for boat knees, for $50. The body made 4340 staves, worth $30. Four logs sold for $10, and the top limbs made seven cords of wood. The whole tree sold on the ground for over $100! Some old locusts sold for double thatmoney.

☞The Richmond Whig says, in reference to the paragraphs which have gone the rounds about President Tyler's successions to offices for which he was not elected: How this world is given to lying. Excepting the fact, that Gov. Tyler succeeds to the Presidency by the death of Gen. Harison, there is not one particle of truth in it. He was not made Governor by the death of his predecessor; he was not elected to the Senate as stated.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A most distressing accident occurred in this city on Saturday last. Col. John Means, the keeper of a livery stable, accompanied by Samuel, the second son of Mr. Wm. H. Douglass, merchant, had driven a buggy and two horses into the river, at the upper end of Mulberry street, for the purpose of watering the horses and cleaning the carriage, when it is supposed the horses took fright and ran off into the current. Col. Means sprang out to catch the horses, but after struggling with them for some time, received a blow from one of them in the back part of the head, when he immediately sunk. The youth who was in company with him was also drowned in his attempt to swim to the shore. The most strenuous exertions were made by some of the citizens who had assembled, and both the bodies were found in a short time, but all attempts at resuscitation proved ineffectual.—Chillicothe Advertiser.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

POETRY.

THE FAITHLESS WORLD.

The faithless world promiscuous goes,
Enwraped, in fancy's vision,
Allured by sounds, beguiled by shows
And empty dreams, and scarcely knows
There is a brighter Heaven!

Fine gold will change and diamonds fade,
Swift wings to wealth are given,
All varying time our forms invade,
The seasons roll, light sinks in shade,
There is nothing sure but Heaven!

Creations mighty fabrics all,
Will be to atoms riven,
The sky consume, the planets fall,
Convulsions wreck this earthly ball,
There is nothing firm but Heaven!

Empires decay and nations die,
Our hopes to winds are given,
The vernal bloom in ruin lies,
Death reigns on earth and seas and skies,
There is nothing lives but Heaven!

The world is poor from shore to shore,
And like a baseless vision,
Its lofty domes and brilliant ore,
Its gems and crowns are vain and poor,
There is nothing rich but Heaven!

A stranger lonely here I roam,
From place to place I'm driven,
My friends are gone and I'm in gloom,
This world is all a lonely tomb,
I have no home but Heaven!

The clouds disperse, the light appears,
My sins are all forgiven,
Triumphant grace has quelled my fears,
Roll on ye suns, fly swift ye years,
I'm on my way to Heaven!

Adieu to all below, adieu,
Let life's dull charms be driven,
The charms of Christ have caught my view,
The world of light I will pursue,
To live with him in Heaven!

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

ave just returned in company with my col- e from the "Village of the Dead," a very ble piece of ground at the head of Main for the reception of the last remains of lity. From this spot of ground we had a ltful view of the surrounding landscape on hand, and the pleasant village which lay what below us was not the least object of dmiration. Various were the reflections occupied my mind as we passed through ave yard, and glanced at the appropriate ptions engraven upon the white marble pointed out the places where lay the aged, iddle aged, and the young. The graves of gave signs of recent interment, on which a spire of grass could not be seen. The g tops of others gave us to understand that short months had intervened since the im- d spirit had left the earthly tenement which neath, but there were others yet on which hick set grass of years had taken root, and seemed to say in language more eloquent words can express, that many long, long had passed away since the spirit had re- d to the bosom of its God. Here, thought he end of human greatness; for on my right I see a large neat stone, supported by a foundation; my eye caught these words ved thereon,—"Sacred to the memory of ——, M. D., aged 24 years." Just began le! but now gone to the gloomy charnel beneath. What are worldly honors! what man titles! since man is but an ephemera ay, a bubble floating on the sea of time. I are that this important subject assumes a y aspect to the unregenerate mind, but to ans the idea of life! life!! eternal life!!! ates the sparkling gem of hope, that shines gh the dark turrene and drives the fear of away. Should we not then revere that who "hath brought life and immortality t through the gospel!" C. C.

LIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Mt. Vernon, O., April 24, 1841.

Springer: We have had a revival of reli- n the neighborhood of Br. Westbrook's, 12 miles west of Mt. Vernon, where we enced a protracted meeting on the 5th of esent month, which continued until the g of the 16th. In consequence of the lack of erial aid Br. Roberts and myself were un- e necessity of preaching and attending to her exercises alternately throughout the g. But notwithstanding this the Great of the church, who is always more willing e than we are to receive, regarded the s of the church, and blessed the feeble ef- ade. A spirit of unity seemed to prevail the different orders of christians who at- our meeting. This is certainly consist- istianity, and where such a state of things God will certainly bless the labors of His witnessed an interesting scene at this g, which might here be named. Two en who had been companions in sin, and the ruination of their families, became ly concerned for the salvation of their A son of one of these persons was con- at this meeting, after which he prayed tly for his father. The father wept, and d to forsake sin and be religious; said he, ty-five years ago my mother departed this d her dying charge to me was, 'prepare to hy God.' All this I soon forgot, but now I am resolved to serve God as long as I live."—The other man exhorted his companion to persevere in the good cause he had espoused, that they both might end their days in peace. As the result of the labors of this meeting about twenty-five resolved to be on the Lord's side, and four or five backsliders reclaimed. And as might be expected we had accessions to the church. To God be all the glory. Yours, &c.,

Br. Springer: We are still prospering in this place. We now number one hundred and four, making a nett increase of 94 members since conference; we are in union among ourselves and have a lively state of religious feeling at all of our meetings. Br. Inskeep has not been able to preach for us for some three months: but he is now here and has recovered in a great measure his usual health, and is able to resume his regular labors on the circuit. Br. Stevens has arrived on the circuit in good health.

We are about to engage in building our church, and as it is considerably larger then we first intended, and as the lot will cost us more than we anticipated, assistance from our friends would be very acceptible. Br. Clark has interested himself for us, and the result of his timely assistance is about one hundred and fifty dollars, for which we feel very thankful to him and his subscribers.

We have a flourishing sabbath school now in operation, numbering some one hundred members. I remain yours, &c., WM. B. MILLER.

Morgan Co., O., May 4, 1841.

Br. Springer: The President's visit on the fifth of April was to us a profitable visit. His labors were we trust highly beneficial. Since then two of our beloved members in the Church Militant have been called to the Church Triumphant.

Br. John Barlow, a young man of great promise who was much beloved by the church, after forty-eight hours, sickness, left us in joyful hope of endless felicity

Our aged and much beloved sister Bell, who was a member at Ebenezer, after long illness closed her mortal existence on the twelth of April.—From the life of piety she lived, and the confidence she had in her Redeemer, and the pleasure she took in conversing with us on our frequent visits, during her illness, about her hope of heaven and glory, we were left upon a foundation producing confidence that she has gained a blissful immortality.

These calls of death should be regarded by us as a loud admonition to be also ready.

Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Olive Green, in our new meeting house, to commence the 29th of this month, at 11 o'clock. If our Conference Missionary, or agent, or both of them could attend, we should be thankful.

Yours, in the bonds of love,

C. WOODRUFF, Sup't Pisgah Ct.

AGRICULTURAL.

☞We have received the following communications in reply to our inquiries about grafted fruit.

Near Smithfield, O., 4th Mo. 27, 1841.

C. Springer, respectfully; I this day observed in your paper your wish to know where grafted fruit trees could be procured, and the price per hundred, &c. I wish to give information that I have grafted apple trees, and can furnish from fifteen to twenty thousand, if arrangements are made before any other engagements are entered into.

I have been engaged in the Nursery business twenty-five years, and from the experience I have had in that line think I can give satisfaction as to the quality of fruit, of various kinds. My scions are from one to four years old, from the time of grafting—the scion being two years old before.

My prices.—Apple trees at the Nursery $10 per hundred. If immersed in a preserving composition and boxed, delivered at Abraham Liten's ware house, on the bank of the Ohio river, $12,50 per hundred. Pear trees, plumb trees, cherry trees of a superior quality, some of them are grafted so as to bear three or four different kinds of cherries, ripening in rotation on the same tree, 25 cts. per tree. Grafted peach trees on peach roots, with directions how to preserve them from being destroyed by the worm, at 12½ cents per tree. If grafted on other kinds of wood more durable than the peach itself, 25 cents per tree.

The last lot of trees I packed of much importance, were to be conveyed by boat two thousand miles from Steubenville, Ohio, where they were shipped to Iowa territory.

If any person wishes to purchase fruit trees of me I would like them to come in the fall of the year and examine the fruit for themselves, so they may make choice out of my large collection. When the choice is made I will furnish trees and warrant them to be of the kind chosen.

*This should be spelled "Gate Apple." It is one of the best fall apples within our knowledge. But it looses its flavor by the last of December. We have found it no where in the west but in Jefferson and Columbiana counties in Ohio. It is sometimes called the "Mamma Beam." The history of its origin, as we were informed, is this; it grew in its natural state at the gate of old Mrs. "Beam." The family called it the "Gate Apple," the neighbors after its owner. If this history be correct the possessive case should not be used in spelling its name, as it is not called after any person, but after the gate beside which it took its origin.—ED. REC.

Coshocton, O., April 20, 1841.

Dear Sir: In reply to inquiries in your paper I advise you, that you can get grafted fruit trees at Samuel Myers', five miles north of Mansfield in Richland county, Ohio. Mr. Myers cultivates the very choicest varieties, and you can get from him kinds not to be had at any other Nursery in the State. I believe his price is fifteen dollars per hundred. I have made the cultivation of fruit trees a study for some years, and would recommend the following varieties to you, which I know Mr. Myers has for sale.

I consider the fall the best time for planting, if the trees are of good size.

Respectfully, yours,

THO. S. HURUNCKHOUSE.

Our favorite fall apple is the Cooper,—and winter, the Seek-no-further, neither of which is given in the above lists.—ED. REC.

Mr. Editor, having noticed your request in relation to fruit trees, I inform you that John Stephens, who resides about six miles from Brownsville, and two from Cookstown, Pa. has a large assortment of grafted fruit trees, which he sells for 10 dollars per 100. I have no doubt, if you or any of your neighbors should call on Mr. Stephens you can be accommodated with any varieties you may want. B. DOTSON.

THE SOFT ANSWER.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

'I'll give him law to his heart's content, the scoundrel,' said Mr. Singleton, walking backwards, and forwards, in a state of angry excitement.

'Dont't call harsh names, Mr. Singleton,' said lawyer Trueman, looking up from the mass of papers before him and smiling in a quite benevolent way, that was peculiar to him.

'Every man should be known by his true name. Williams is a scoundrel, and so he ought to be called,' responded the client, with increased warmth.

'Did you ever do a reasonable thing in your life, when you were angry?' asked Mr. Trueman, whose age and respectability gave him the license to speak thus freely to his young friend' for whom he was endeavoring to arrange some business difficulty with a former partner.

'I can't say that I ever did, Mr. Trueman. But now I have good reasons for being angry: and the language I use in reference to Williams is but the expression of a sober and rational conviction,' replied Singleton, a little more calmly.

'Did you pronounce him a scoundrel before you received his reply to your last letter?' asked Mr. Trueman.

'No, I did not. But that letter confirmed my previously formed impressions of his character.'

'But I cannot find in that letter any evidence proving your partner to be a dishonest man; he will not agree to your proposed mode of settlement because he does not see it to be the most proper way.'

'He won't agree to it because it is an honest and equitable method of settlement, that is all! He wants to overreach me, and is determined to do so if he can!' responded Mr. Singleton, still excited.

'There you are decidedly wrong,' said the lawyer. 'You have both allowed yourselves to become angry, and are both unreasonable, and if I must speak plainly, I think you the most unreasonable in in the present case. Two angry men can never settle any business properly. You have very unnecessarily increased the difficulties in the way of a speedy settlement, by writing Mr. Williams an angry letter which he has responded to in a like unhappy temper. Now, if I am to settle this business for you, I must write all letters that pass to Mr. Williams in future.'

'But how can you express my views and feelings?'

'That I do not wish to do, if your views and feelings are to remain as they are now, for any thing like an adjustment of the difficulties under such circumstances I should consider hopeless,' replied Mr. Trueman.

'Well, let me answer this letter, and after that I promise that you shall have your own way.'

'No, I shall consent to no such thing.—It is the reply to that letter which is to modify the negociation for a settlement in such a way as to bring success or failure; and I have no idea in allowing you, in the present state of your mind, to write such a one as will most assuredly defeat an amicable arrangement.'

Singleton paused for some time before making a reply. He had been forming in his mind a most cutting and bitter rejoinder to the letter just alluded to, and he was very desirous that Mr. Williams should have the benefit of knowing that he thought him a 'tricky and deliberate scoundrel,' with other opinions of a similar character. He found it, therefore, impossible to make up his mind to let the unimpassioned Mr. Trueman write this most important epistle.

'Indeed I must write this letter, Mr. Trueman,' he said; 'there are some things that I want to say to him that I know you won't write. You don't seem to consider the position in which he has placed me by that letter, nor what is obligatory upon a man of honor. I never allow any man to reflect upon me, directly or indirectly, without a prompt response.'

'There, is, in the Bible,' said Mr. Trueman, 'a passage that is peculiarly applicable to the present case. It is this, "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grevious words stir up anger," I have found this precept, in a life that has numbered more than double your years, to be one that may be safely and honorably adopted in all cases. You blame Mr. Williams for writing you an angry letter, and are indignant at certain expressions contained therein. Now, is it any more right for you to write an angry letter, with cutting epithets, than it is for him?'

'But, Mr. Trueman———.'

'I do assure you, my young friend,' said the lawyer, interrupting him, 'that I am acting in this case for your benefit and not my own; and as your legal adviser, you must submit to my judgment, or I cannot consent to go on.'

'If I will promise not to use any harsh language, will you not conset to let me write the letter?' urged the client.

'You and I, in the present state of our mind, could not possible come to the same conclusion in reference to what is harsh and what is mild.' said Mr. Trueman; 'therefore I cannot consent that you shall write one word of the proposed reply; I must write it.'

'Well, I suppose then, I shall have to submit. When will it be ready?'

'Come this afternoon, and I will give you the draft, which you can copy and sign.'

In the afternoon, Mr. Singleton came, and received the letter prepared by Mr. Trueman. It ran thus, after the date and formal address:—

'I regret that my proposition did not meet your approval. The mode of settlement which I suggested was the result of a careful consideration of our mutual interests. Be kind enough to suggest to Mr. Trueman, my lawyer, any plan which you think will lead to an early and amicable adjustment of our business. You may rely upon my consent to it, if it meets his approbation.'

'Is it possible, Mr. Trueman, that you expect me to sign as cringing a letter as that?' said Mr. Singleton, throwing it down and walking backwards and forwards with great irritation of manner.

'Well, and what is your objection to it?' replied Mr. Trueman, mildly, for he was prepared for just such an exhibition of feeling.

'Objection! How can you ask such a question? Am I to go on my knees to him and beg him to do me justice? No! I'll sacrifice every cent I've got in the world first, the scoundrel.'

'You wish to have your business settled, do you not?' asked Mr. Trueman, looking him steadily in the face.

'Of course I do, honorably settled!'

'Well, let me hear what you mean by an honorable settlement.'

'Why, I mean———' the young man hesitated a moment, and Mr. Trueman said,

'You mean a settlement in which your interest shall be equally considered with that of Williams?'

Yes, certainly. And that———'

'And that,' continued Mr. Trueman, 'Mr. Williams, in the settlement, shall consider and treat you as a gentlemen.'

'Certainly I do. But that is more than he has done.'

'Well, never mind. Let what is past go for as much as it is worth. The principal point of action is in the present.'

'But I'll never send that mean, cringing letter, though.'

'You mistake its whole tenor. I do assure you, Mr. Singleton. You have allowed your angry feelings to blind you. You, certainly, carefully considered before you adopted it, the proposed basis of settlement, did you not?'

'Of course I did.'

'So the letter which I have prepared for you states. Now, as an honest and honorable man, you are, I am sure, willing to grant to him the same privilege which you asked for yourself, viz: that of proposing a plan of settlement. Your proposition does not seem to please him; now is it but fair that he should be invited to state how he wished the settlement to be made? And in giving such an invitation, a gentleman should use gentlemanly language.'

'But he don't deserve to be treated like a gentleman. In fact he has no claim to the title,' said the young man.

'If he has none, as you say, you profess to be a gentleman, and all gentlemen should prove by their action and their words that they are gentlemen.'

'I can't say that I am convinced by what you say; but as you seem bent on having it in your own way, why, here, let me copy the thing and sign it,' said the young man, suddenly changing his manner.

'There now!' he added, passing across the table the brief letter he had copied.—'I suppose he'll think me a low-spirited fellow, after he gets that. But he's mistaken. After it's all over, I'll take good care to tell him that it did not contain my sentiments.'

Mr. Trueman smiled as he took the letter, and went on to fold and direct it.

'Come to-morrow afternoon, and I think we'll have things in a pretty fair way,' he said looking up with his usually pleasant smile, as he finished the direction of the letter.

'Good afternoon, Mr. Singleton,' he said, as that gentleman entered his office on the succeeding day.

'Good afternoon,' responded the young man. 'Well, have you heard from that milk and water letter of yours? I can't call it mine.'

'Yes, here is the answer. Take a seat and I will read it to you,' said the old gentleman.

'Well, let's hear it.'

'Dear George—I have your kind, reasonable, and gentlemanly note of yesterday, in reply to my harsh, unreasonable and ungentlemanly one of the day before. We have both been playing the fool; but you are ahead of me in becoming sane.—I have examined, since I got your note more carefully the tenor of your proposition for a settlement, and it meets my view precisely. My foolish anger kept me from seeing it before. Let our mutual friend, Mr. Trueman, arrange the matter according to the plan mentioned, and I shall most heartily acquiese.

Yours, &c.,

'He never wrote that letter in the world!' exclaimed Singleton, starting to his feet.

'You know this writing, I presume?' said Mr. Truman, handing him the letter.

'It's Thomas Williams' own hand, as I live!' ejaculated Singleton, on glancing at the letter. 'My old friend Thomas Williams, the best natured fellow in the world!' he continued, his feelings undergoing a sudden and entire revolution. 'What a fool I have been.'

'And what a fool I have been,' said Thomas Williams, advancing from an adjoining room, at the same time extending his hand towards Singleton.

'God bless you, my old friend!' exclaimed Singleton, grasping his hand. 'Why, what has been the matter with us both?'

'My young friends,' said old Mr. Trueman, one of the kindest hearted men in the world, rising and advancing, 'I have known you so long, and have always esteemed you both. This pleasant meeting and reconciliation you perceive, is of my arrangement. Now let me give you a precept that will both make you friends and keep friends. It has been my motto thro' life; and I don't know that I have an enemy in the world. It is—"A soft answer turneth away warth, but grievous words stir up anger."

BARBER'S POLE.

"Rove not from POLE to POLE but here turn in."

The origin of the Barber's pole is to be traced to the period when the barbers were also surgeons, under the denomination of Barber Surgeons, or Barber-Chirurgeons, none other in former times being allowed to "let blood." To assist this operation, it being necessary for the patient to grasp a staff, a stick or pole was always kept by the Barber-Surgeon, together with the fillet or bandaging used for tying the patient's arm. When the pole was not in use, the tape was tied to it, that they might be both forthcoming when wanted. On a person coming to be bled, the tape was disengaged from the pole, and the pole was put into the person's hand; after it was done, it was again tied on, and in this state the pole and tape were often hung at the door for a sign or notice to passengers that they might there be bled. At length, instead of hanging out the identical pole used in the operation, a pole was painted with stripes round it in imitation of the real pole and its bandagings, and thus came the sign.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

From the Sabbath School Messenger.

POOR HARRY, OR THE FATAL QUARREL.

There were two boys, who once lived in a small village, the one named Richard and the other Harry. Richard's father was rich, but Harry was the son of a lonely widow, who was extremely poor. Now, Richard was one of those quarrelsome boys, who are often doing mischief.—Sometimes he would throw stones from the hillside upon the passing traveller, and hardly a day passed in which he did not fall out with some of his schoolmates.

One fine summer's morning, as Harry was going to the store with a bottle to get some molasses, Richard met him.

"Holloa, Mr. Harry," said he, "where are you going?" as he aimed a kick at his bottle.

"To Mr. Day's store; but don't kick my bottle," replied Harry.

"There, get out with you, Mr. Ragmuffin," said Richard, as he pushed him violently into the road.

Harry fell down, and in falling broke his bottle against a stone. This made him feel angry, though he was generally a pretty quiet boy. So, getting up, he stepped up to Richard, and said:—

"Don't push me down again;" and he clenched his fists in great wrath.

"Look out! Poon! Who cares for such a bunch of rags as you are. Why, I could thrash a half a dozen of you," replied Richard, as he tauntingly shook his fist in the other's face.

"Don't shake your fist at me again," said Harry, "or I'll whip you, till you are sick of it."

"Whip me!" responded Richard, as he clenched his fists, and looked more like a little savage than a civilized child; "it would take half a dozen like you to do it; but if you want to fight come on," and he pulled off his coat in all the madness of wicked passion.

By this time, a number of idle boys had gathered around them, and were saying in their noisy tones, "A fight! a fight!" and some were sneering at poor Harry, who now felt disposed to settle the matter without coming to blows. But some of them set up the cry of "Coward! coward!" while others patted him on the shoulder, and told him "not to be afraid, but to give Dick a licking for his impudence." So poor Harry consented to fight, and the battle commenced.

Oh! it was a sad and painful sight, at which angels might weep, to see those boys rushing at each other, like wild beasts and striking with all their mights at each other's faces.

Their eyes glared furiously, and their hands were soon smeared with blood. Sometimes they fell, and then the wicked boys around them raised them up and urged them, all tired, exhausted and giddy with pain, to the strife again.

At last, after fighting for half an hour, poor Harry, in falling, struck his head against a rock by the road side, and was taken up senseless, and was carried home to his mother's cottage.

Alas! how it pains my heart to finish this sad tale. Harry never spoke again. The blow he received from the rock was fatal. After lingering a few hours he expired, and his young spirit was hurried away to meet its God! O, awful meeting. Alas! that Harry should have been so wicked as to fight.

Dear children, let this teach you a lesson. If you meet a bad boy whom you know to be quarrelsome, avoid him! Don't stop to talk with him. If he says something impudent to you, don't reply, but in your heart ask God to forgive him. Whatever he does to you, don't fight.—No not if boys call you a coward. It shows more real courage to do right, than it does to do wrong, because idle boys laugh at you. Would not Harry have shown more courage if he had refused to fight, than he did by fighting?

Then think of the awful result. It cost him his life. And Oh! his precious soul! It went into eternity with all its sins upon it. And how his poor widowed mother must have felt. She loved him tenderly, for he was her only son.—Her husband was dead, and now her child was taken away. And by such a death! Oh, it came like a dagger to her heart. She never smiled again, but sunk in sorrow to the grave!

How wretched was the guilty Richard! Surely if he should live to be gray-haired, he will never forgive himself for that shameful battle.

Dear young readers, never quarrel or fight; and if you are tempted to either, repeat the following lines and pray God to help you.

"Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
For God hath made them so,
Let angry lions growl and fight,
For 'tis their nature too.

But children you should never let Such angry passions rise,
Your little hands were never made
To tear each other's eyes."

A drunken fellow in Kentucky lately set fire to a distillery, which was in consequence burnt down. An exchange says that the distillery set fire to the man, and then the man fired the distillery. This is, we suppose, what a lawyer would call lex talionis.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... MAY 12, 1841.

MURDER AND ARSON.—Lengthy details are furnished in the St. Louis papers of the late horrid murder, burglary, and arson perpetrated in that city. No doubt remains that the fire was communicated by design, and that the young men, Weaver and Baker, were murdered by the incendiaries. But the murderers failed, in what undoubtedly was their principal object, that of entering and robbing the vault of the bank; for when the heat had so far subsided as to admit of its being opened it was found that not a dollar of the money nor a single paper had been touched.

The fire was discovered about one o'clock in the morning bursting out of the windows and various parts of the large stone store on the corner of Pine and Water street; the front on Water street occupied by Messrs. Simonds & Morrison, and rear by Pettus as a banking house, formerly Collier and Pettus. Several gentlemen who arrived early, after some difficulty forced open the door of the banking house, and through the smoke discovered a body lying on the floor near the stove. The body was taken out before the fire had reached it, and found to be that of Jacob Weaver a young man, a clerk in the store of Messrs Von Phul & McGill, who usually slept in the room immediately in the rear of Mr. Pettus' banking room, with Jesse Baker, the clerk of Messrs. Simonds & Morrison. Mr. Weaver was found in the dress he had worn during the day, but his head dreadfully mangled. He had been shot through the head, the ball entering above the left eye, and so near had the weapon been to him that his face and left hand were blackened with the powder, and the little finger nearly cut off, apparently by the ball.—His head was also cut open in several places, the wounds appearing to have been made with a bowie knife or hatchet.

Baker was not found till sometime after daylight when his remains were disinterred after much labor in removing the rubish and accumulated ruins. The body was found in front of the door of the vault, as if killed in the banking room. From the remnant of clothes it was apparent that he had been murdered before he had undressed for bed, and consequently the murderers must have been in an hour prior to the arrival of Mr. Weaver.—When the body was found the head and feet had been destroyed and portions of the hands. From the position of the legs and hands it was thought by many that he had been tied. The chest and most of the body remained undestroyed. A deep gash or wound was found on the breast which leaves no doubt of his having perished by violence.

From what yet appears there is no evidence that the robbers obtained any booty. Perhaps the resistance of Baker, the coming in of Weaver, at a later period, and the impossibility of opening the safe, prolonged their stay till they deemed it dangerous to remain any longer.

No clue is yet obtained to the authors of this dismal tragedy.

Ansel S. Kimball, first engineer of one of the fire companies, a worthy and enterprising citizen, was crushed to death by the falling of a wall while attempting to extinguish the fire.

The total loss of property by the fire is not far short of $75,000.

McLEOD.—Alexander McLeod arrived in this city on Monday morning, in custody of the Sheriff of Niagara county. He comes here by a virtue of a writ of habeas corpus, issued by the Supreme Court, now in session. An application will be made on Thursday for his discharge from custody. Joshua A. Spencer, Esq., U. S. Attorney for the Northern District, and Mr. Gardner of Buffalo are McLeod's counsel, and Mr. Attorney General Hall, and Mr. Wood, District Attorney at Lockport, counsel on behalf of the commonwealth. The Commercial of yesterday says:

If we are rightly informed it has been agreed between Mr. Fox and the Government of the United States that no farther opposition shall be made by the former to the trial of McLeod. That trial is to go on, under the jurisdiction of New York, without interference either by the British Minister or the National Government. If acquitted, as is most probable, McLeod will be discharged, of course, and the matter thus be disposed of. If convicted, the National Government will then take the necessary steps to afford him that measure of justice and protection which all the circumstances of the case may require.

As to the boundary, we learn that a convention has been signed on the part of Great Britain and the United States, which provides for the appointment of six commissioners, three for each party to the dispute. These six, if they can agree, are to give a final decision on the question. If they cannot agree, they are to appoint three others, and a decision by the majority of the nine is to be conclusive.

Such we understand to be the argument agreed upon. Some of the details may be incorrectly stated, but we have every reason to believe that the general fact of a convention being signed, will prove authentic.—N. Y. Sig.

A PLEASANT COUNTRY.—The Arkansas State Gazette says a gentleman in Poinsett Co. recently killed forty rattlesnakes in one day; the length of the largest was five feet, and of the smaller eighteen inches.

CONFESSION OF A MURDERER.—To-day, about noon, the black man, Harry Cisco, will be hung in the village of Hackensack, N. J., in an open lot, close to the Court House, for the murder of Alfred Myers, of the English Neighborhood, N. J., on Sunday, the 22d of November last.

This black, it will be remembered, was sentenced shortly after Robinson, by the same Justice. The Reporter of the N. Y. Herald, has furnished that paper with the following from the murderer's own lips:

CONFESSION OF CISCO.

"I was born, sir, in Closter, in 1818, where my mother and sisters now live, and where all as know 'em respects 'em. I never had no education, so I can neither read nor write; although I once went for a short time to sunday school, when I worked up near Tienick. I have always worked hard, sometimes a farming, sometimes a boating, and sometimes doing any odd jobs that I could get. But I never did any thing that was wrong nor dishonest till just before I helped to murder Alfred Myers. Sometime last year I got acquainted with Harry Moore, and in November, seeing as we was both out of work, we was going to get married, and as we had no clothes fit, nor no money, it was agreed upon as I should steal a horse and sell it to make a raise.

"So accordingly, on the Friday, as we murdered Alfred Myers on the Sunday night, I stole a horse from Mrs. Smith, of the English Neighborhood, (just by where Alfred Myers lived.) I rode off with him away towards Patterson to sell. When I got up to Godmansville, however, I got lost; and I asked Mr. Wodendyke the road; and finally I offered to sell him the horse for $50. He asked if I hadn't stole it. I said "No!" and I offered to sell it for $25. And if he'd bought it and given me the money, we would never have killed Alfred Myers. But he insisted I stole it. So I left the horse with him and told him I would go and get proof where I bought it. He let me go, and I got back to the English Neighborhood on Saturday night.

"Here I again met Harry Moore; and as we wanted to contrive some plan to make a raise, and it come to storm hard, we crept into Alfred Myers's barn, and there we laid all day Sunday, (Nov. 22.) It rained hard all that day, and whilst we were talking things over, Harry Moore says to me, says he, "Let's kill Alfred Myers, and then we shall get some clothes and some money." So we agreed to kill him that night! Well, it was night, about 12 o'clock, when all was still, that we crept out and went round to the door of Alfred's store. Harry Moore knew he slept alone, and as Alfred knew Harry Moore's voice, and had every confidence in him, we agreed that Harry Moore should call him out of bed to come down stairs, and when he opened the door I was to open the door and hit him on the head with a stone. Well, Harry Moore called him up. Alfred came down stairs lighted the lamps, and we went in; his dog was there; as soon as we got in, I made a grab at him and missed him; we then had a pretty smart scuffle; finally, I hit him on the left temple with a large stone, and knocked him down; this did not kill him; and his dog flew at me and tore my pantaloons, and bit my leg and my face. He called for help, and "murder," and Harry Moore told me to hold him by the throat, and said, "D—n him I'll fix him!" Harry Moore then took a black silk handkerchief, wound it fast round Alfred's neck, drew it tight, and so choked him to death! The dog then run off.

"After this, we searched about, but didn't find any money; we tied up two bundles of dry goods, some handkerchiefs, Rob Roy shawls, a roundabout and so on and then we took a large cloth; and was going to tie Alfred up in it and throw him in the creek; but then we heard a noise at the next house opposite (Doremus's, I believe,) and we left the store with the two bundles. We then went back into Alfred Myers's barn, and staid there all day Monday. And from there we could see the people going in and out of the store to look at the dead body! And young Doremus come into the barn that day, and nearly put his fork into me whilst he was getting some hay. We left the barn that night, and walked down to New York—and got to New York very early on Tuesday morning. Harry Moore went to his aunt's, and I went to a pawnbroker's in Chatham street, to try to sell one of the bundles of clothes. The pawnbroker (Davis) suspected I stole 'em, and so kept 'em; and told me to go and get a note from the auction where I told him I'd bought 'em. Finding we couldn't do any good with the clothes, we tied stones to the other bundle, and sunk it in the North River. And then on Wednesday we went back to English Neighborhood, intending to get what things we had their and clear out for good. But we were both caught the same night; me at the blacksmith's shop at the Liberty pole; and Harry Moore at the Sand Hills.

"And, now I have to be hung, and I know I deserve it. I know that the sentence is right, but I know, too, that Harry Moore ought to be hung with me. I freely forgive every body, although Mrs. Smith's nigger had swore to a lie against me on the trial; and I hope God will forgive me and save my soul; but Harry Moore deserves to die as well as I do."

The Gamblers at Vicksburgh are so numerous that they talk of vengeance against that city, for the Lynching of their comrades some years ago. Trouble is expected with them, as they are already so bold and audacious as to defy the civil laws and outrage moral principle.

Mr. BIDDLE'S SIXTH LETTER was published in the National Gazette of yesterday: we quote its opening paragraphs to show its specific object:

"At the close of their report, they say "It must also be mentioned that among the expenditures of the bank there is entered at various dates commencing May 5th, 1836, sums amounting in all to $618-640 15, as paid on the receipt of "Mr. N. Biddle and J. Cowperthwaite and 'Cashier's Vouchers.' As the committee were unable to obtain satisfactory information upon the subject of these expenses from the books or officers of the Bank—application was made by letter to Mr. N. Biddle and Mr. J. Cowperthwaite, from whom no reply has been received.

On reading this no one could fail to understand that here were $618,000 which I had obtained from the Bank, and on being questioned about it declined giving any answer, from which the natural interference was that these funds were never accounted for. This is evidently what the Committee intended to be understood—this is what every body does understand.

Now what I am about to say is so incredible that I would not say it unless I could prove it. It is—

First, that at the moment of charging me with these $618,000, the committee knew perfectly well, that nearly three hundred thousand dollars of that sum, had been expended since I left the Bank—and Second, that the remainder had been regularly passed by the board of directors on the report of a committee of which the Chairman, Joshua Lippincott, was the identical Joshua Lippincott, Chairman of this very Committee of Investigation."

We have to remark that the two propositions here stated are conclusively proved. Of course, the Report Committee, with Mr. Lippincott at their head, have thus received another blow from Mr. Biddle which they cannot return and under which they must sink. The course pursued by these gentlemen is, certainly extraordinary, both as regards the welfare of the bank and their own reputation.—N. Y. Sig.

Is it a fact that candidates for office are in the habit of paying the taxes of citizens to obtain their votes? If such be fact, we hesitate not to pronounce it moral bribery, though possibly it may not be legally so classed. When money can be employed to procure votes, farewell freedom: for then only the rich man can hope for success, while the poor man can neither represent, nor be represented, except as the tools of the wealthy.

Look at the base corruption in electioneering in England, where members of Parliament receive no direct pay as such and of course none but the rich can be members. There the inventions for carrying on a system of moral bribery, without incurring the penalties of legal bribery, are numerous and cunning.—One of many is this, a candidate meets a voter and says: "I'll bet you ten pounds you dont vote for me at the election."—If the voter can be bribed he of course takes the bet. But perhaps the next day another candidate accosts him, "Who do you vote for?" He answers "I thought of voting for Mr. B., and have made a bet of £10 on it." "Well I'll bet you £25 you don't vote for me." The voter takes the bet because he can clear £15 after paying his forfeit on the first bet. Now we regard the morality of the action about the same, whether the candidate says: "I will pay your taxes if you will vote for me," or "I will bet you $5 you don't vote for me," or "I will give you $5 for your note"-Louisville World.

DREADFUL INFATUATION.—A terrible tragedy of blood occured last Wednesday in Summer, Oxford county, Me., where Mr. Moses Butterfield, hitherto a highly respectable citizen of that town murdered his wife and two youngest children, while two others of the family only saved themselves by flight. Mr. B. had previously had fits of insanity, and this last fatal attack took the form, it is said, of religious phrenzy, and his alleged reason for murdering his family was to save them from eternal ruin, at the approaching end of the world! He has been committed to jail.

MR. SPARKS RETURNED.—Mr. Jared Sparks, who went to Europe to procure original materials relating to a history of America, has returned in the Columbia. From the public archives, as well as from the British Museum, and the Royal Library in Paris, he has procured copies of some curious and highly interesting manuscripts relative to the first settlements of this country. On a former occasion Mr. S. was engaged abroad more than a year in the same pursuits. The results have been seen in the works which he has since published.

The Utica and Schenectady Rail Road is the best stock in the United States at present. The capital of 1,500,000 dollars paid in, has earned 13 per cent. per annum. The rail road is seventy-eight miles.

A Mr. Sandoe, a candidate for Mayor of Louisville, pledges himself if elected, to apply the revenue of the post office of that city to improvements! This is a novel way to obtain popularity.

It is said Col. R. M. Johnson, late Vice President of the United States, is a candidate for a seat in the Legislature of this State.—Ky. paper.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Journal of Commerce, says,

"There was a very disreputable expression of difference of opinion yesterday in our Custom house, between the Surveyor, Mr. Tyson and Mr. Roberts, the Collector—all in the presence of the clerks too. It grew out of some of the subordinate appointments. Mr. Tyson it is said, has a letter from the President, in which he suggests the propriety of the Collector yielding to the Surveyor the right to name a certain number of inspectors. The scramble for office everywhere has grown disgraceful in the extreme."

Per Contra. Matters here go on very peaceably, for our Collector makes no removals or appointments. Why this is we do not know. But the course pursued disappoints both parties—the ins agreeably and the outs disagreeably.—N. Y. Signal.

MELANCHOLY SUICIDE.—On Saturday, 24th ultimo, while her husband was absent at Brownsboro', Mrs. Caleb Dorsey, the wife of one of the wealthiest farmers in this county, eluded the vigilance of her attendants, and shot herself with a rifle, the ball taking effect in her head, and tearing in a most shocking manner the lower part of her face, producing almost instant death. We understand that her mind has been unsettled for some time, and that she had been carefully watched lest she should commit violence upon herself, but in the momentary suspension of the exceeding care of those attending her, she found means to deprive herself of life in a speedy but most horrid manner. —Lou. Gaz.

THE WELSH PORCUPINE YOUTH.—This wonderful production of nature, says an English paper, is now exhibiting in the town of Ruthin. His name is Thomas Jones: he is about ten years of age, of healthy appearance, and quick apprehension, three feet three inches high, and all his body, with the exception of the face and the palms of his hands, is entirely covered with thick horny thorns, similar to those of a hedgehog or porcupine. He sheds them gradually, but, apparently without any pain; and the roots, remaining in the flesh, gradually grow to the same length and hardness. He is born of Welsh parents, in the parish of Kilrhedin, Pemonshire.

STEAMER PRESIDENT.—It is generally believed, that the steamer seen on the 20th March, in lon. 58, was the Brittania from Boston, and not the President. The barque Fame arrived at Provincetown which left Fayal on the 4th of April, makes no report respecting her. As regards this boat, all is yet shrouded in mystery, and we wait impatiently for expected arrivals from England. That she met with some accident is more than probable, but a staunch sea boat, like her, would not be apt to founder in the heaviest gale. Her commander, Captain Roberts, is a thorough going, efficient seaman, and the utmost confidence is placed in his ability to encounter danger upon the ocean.

MORMONISM.—We learn from the London Athanæum that this preposterous humbug has gained many proselytes among the mechanics at Preston, and other manufacturing towns in England. A grosser and more palpable imposure was never palmed off upon poor human credulity. The "Book of Mormon" is full of the most absurd anachronisms, vulgarism and historical absurdities. For instance the use of the compass is represented as introduced some dozen centuries before it was discovered; and a hundred similar absurdities occur at every page. No person of tolerable education could fall into this pitiable delusion.

SWINDLER.—M. F. Downs, a merchant of Cincinnati, who was committed to prison some time since on the charge of perjury, by his partner in business, C. H. Haven, has accomplices in Vicksburg, as it appears from a letter published in the Republican. John Conovan and Martin Dyer had been arrested in Vicksburg by Haven, on the charge of swindling. Large quantities of goods belonging to the firm of Downs & Haven were secured by the Sheriff, and the parties arrested were bound over in the sum of $5000 each.

BLOWN UP.—A trading house near the the Sacs and Fox villages, in Missouri, was set on fire to a short time since, as it was supposed, by some of the Indians. The fire communicated to some powder, which was in the building and ignited fifteen kegs, blowing the whole into atoms, killing two men asleep, within the house, and scattering pieces of timber for a considerable distance around.

OLD SUBSCRIBERS.—The Hartford Courant states that a gentleman called at that office a few days ago, and paid his subscription to the paper, and he remarked that he had taken it 49 years, that his father took it 27 years before him, making the whole time of its existence, 76 years.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Evening Signal.

Washington, May 1, 1841.

It is understood here that Judge Bronson of the Supreme Court of your State has granted a writ of habeas corpus in favor of McLeod, and that personage is now probably on his way from Lockport to New York. It is further stated that on his arrival in New York a motion will be made by his counsel, Mr. Gardner, for the discharge of McLeod, and that it will probably be granted by the court, and this notable person be discharged, and given safe conduct to St. Johns. These facts come from an authentic source: and as this has been the subject of conversation here for a few days in private circles, I am somewhat surprised at having seen no reference to them in the public journals. The ground upon which McLeod's counsel will ask for his discharge is, that the question is now of an international character purely, since the British Government has distinctly recognized the attack on the Caroline.

General Scott has made a very full report to the President and Secretary of State of all the circumstances connected with the Caroline affair. If McLeod should be discharged the case will be relieved of a very productive source of difficulty and exasperation; but yet it will have a very grave aspect, and we can only hope that two governments, whose sole interest and true glory it is to cultivate peace and harmony, will take care to accommodate the difficulty in an honorable and amicable manner. Thus far there has been no communication between Mr. Fox and Mr. Webster on the subject that has not been perfectly respectful, and friendly in its spirit and dency.

What a creature is this Alexander McLeod to have thrown into a flame the bellicose spirits on both sides! Undoubtedly he had no more to do with the attack on the vessel in question than you had. His boast was a double entendre, meaning only to boast of his brutal triumph over a young woman named Caroline, whom he had seduced!—but giving the impression that he had boarded the Caroline. The British officers in Canada express freely the utmost scorn and disgust for his profligate character, while they protest against his seizure and imprisonment, and would not cry out much if he were brought to severe punishment on their own side of the lines.

Singular Proposal for the Creation of a Wesleyan Bishop.—We have before us a curious pamphlet, just published by a clergyman of the church of England, in which the 'creation of a Wesleyan bishop' is proposed, who shall ordain the Wesleyan ministers presenting themselves at the Annual Conference, but the veto to rest with the Archbishop of Canterbury. This plan is proposed as 'the only concession' requisite on the part of the Church, in order to secure a more effective co-operation between Wesleyan Methodism and the establishment. The proposal is evidently put forth as a feeler; and the writer seems at no loss to fix upon the man whom the Conference would elect by acclamation, and whom the Archbishop of Canterbury would delight to honor. Dr. Bunting is the Wesleyan minister alluded to.—English paper.

MURDERER ARRESTED.—In July last a man named Beauchamp committed a cold blooded murder on the body of one Mickleberry in Indiana, and made his escape to Texas.

In March handbills reached the place where he resided, and from which he had then recently gone, describing his person and offering a reward for his arrest. A Mr. Anderson and Mr. Keel pursued and arrested him, and on the 1st day of this month they started with him from Texas, and on the 19th arrived at Terra Haute. On the day following he was examined before the Mayor of that place and by him fully commited to take his trial for murder at the Circuit Court.

If all the villians who fly to Texas as a refuge from justice were treated in the same manner, it would much promote the ends of public justice, and tend to elevate the character of Texas at the same time.

A GREAT AND HONORABLE TRIBUTE.—The members of the Legislature of Maine went to the foundation head of all goodness to find consolation for the loss of the beloved Chief Magistrate of the nation. The Governor sent a suitable message to the Legislature announcing the melancholy event, and resolutions were adopted commemorating the name and services of the illustrous dead. In joint meeting, also, the following order was adopted, creditable alike to the State and the Legislature:

Ordered, That, in view of the death of William Henry Harrison, President of the United States, the two branches of the Legislature, immediately after their adjournment, will repair to one of the meeting houses of this town, and attend prayers, that this dispensation of Divine Providence may have its proper influence upon the people of this State and of the nation.—N. Y. Express.

A MISTAKE.—The Boston Daily Advertiser says:—"Yesterday forenoon, a person was arrested in this city, on suspicion of being the principal actor in the recent daring forgeries, but, on examination, he proved to be a highly respectable merchant from one of the neighboring British Provinces, and his arrest was owing to his appearance answering, in a remarkable degree, to the discription of the forger, which had been published.—Phila. Chron.

ANOTHER FRESHET.—The pier and docks and the streets near the river, at Albany, are again inundated. The water, which was over the docks on Tuesday, rose eight feet during the night. The business of the river and canal, which opened briskly, is for the present almost wholly arrested by the freshet.

From the Baltimore Commercial Journal.

We find an article of which the following is a copy in a New York paper. There are few among us in these degenerate days, who do not see how true to life the picture is drawn! On the next page of this (our) paper, under the London head of "Money," an act of great moral turpitude is noticed, of a father and son, who appear to have been distinguished brokers, absconding with the funds of those who confided in them. Such a father, engaged in a business which would naturally attract to his counter, respectable men to train up his son to the commission of such infamy, as in the end they should find it necessary, to promote their further interest or to escape the punishment of some crime not yet probably discovered, to abscond—how revolting to the mind to think of! We have heard of mothers training up their daughters to wickedness, but then the cases were rare, and confined to those who were capable of setting a virtuous example:

JUSTICE.—The law says that whoever plunders people of their property, shall, on coviction, be punished. This is right, for if such plundering were permitted, all security for property would vanish, and society would be overturned. As property may be plundered in various modes the law provides various modes of reaching the wrong; and therefore indicts one for theft, another for forgery, another for swindling, according to circumstances. The law always means right, and if honestly administered would almost invariably do right. But it is often administered by bad men, and sometimes, through the influence of bad men, it is not administered at all, it is frequently made the active or passive instrument of much wrong.

A few days since, Wm. H. Griswold, a young man, was convicted, before the Circuit Court, in N. York, of robbing the bank of Western N. York of 500 dollars, and sentenced to the State Prison at Auburn for four years. We doubt not the justice of his sentence, and hope it will have a salutary effect in deterring other ignorant inconsiderate young men from petty larcenies. But while hoping this, we fear that the examples of people whom he and similar persons have been taught to regard with respect, will have a different influence. The laws never find any difficulty with the perpetrator of a petty larceny. But against gigantic magnificent plunderers, they are powerless. William H. Griswold, who stole a few hundreds, was convicted very expeditiously; and in the course of his defence, if any were made, we have heard nothing about demurrers and motions to quash and bills of exception, and certioraris, and motions for a new trial. Such things are the privilege of wealthy scoundrels. But he or they, whichever it were, who robbed widows and orphans of hundreds of thousands in the Schuylkill Bank, and he or they, which robbed widows, orphans and others of millions in the U. S. Bank, are yet untouched by criminal laws, and probably will remain so. Is this Justice?—An officer in the navy once, in the plentitude of his quarter deck insolence, said that there was no law for post captains. The insolence and knavery of financiers have realized an immunity to which the epaulette vainly aspired.

We insist that before depredations on property can be restrained, we must hang a few rogues in ruffles. If suspension were more common among financiers, it would be more rare among the banks. Their wholesale frauds have probably induced the ruin of this youth. Seeing our most respectable men stealing millions he tho't that he might be indulged in taking a few hundreds. A poor sailor was imprisoned in London for stealing mahogany. He thought it very hard to be denied a plank for himself, when he had assisted the captain and owners to steal a whole ship load from the Spaniards.

A Knowing Dog.—A gentleman owns a spaniel, which, owing to his daily official avocations he cannot take out for a run, except for a Sunday after morning church service. Dash never ventures to show his black nose in the drawing room during the week, but, as sure as Sunday comes upstairs he trots, between one and two o'clock, wagging his tail and saying as plain as he can: "well, here I am, ready for a walk."—(A fact.)

A Monument to Gen. Harrison.—We notice with much gratification that the South Carolina delegation to the National Convention of Young Men held in this city on the Fourth of May last have proposed, thro' the National Intelligencer the erection of a monument to William Henry Harrison, late President of the United States.—Baltimore, Washington, and North Bend are named as the places at one of which the monument should be built.—Balt. Amer.

The Throne of Louis Phillippe.—A Paris letter writer of the New York Commercial, in announcing the success of the Fortification Bill, says:—"The moral force of two thousand cannons on fourteen bastiles round Paris is to ensure the stability of the throne of Louis Phillippe. I hope it may prove successful, for the tranquility of Europe depends upon the pacific temper of the present government."

An Aged Nun.—A Madrid paper mentions that a nun died lately in the Franciscan convent at Albacetta, at the age of one hundred and nine. She was born in 1731, during the reign of Phillip V. She entered the convent at the age of fourteen, made her profession at fifteen, and consequently had worn the garb ninety-two years.

Bridge over the Mississippi.—The St. Louis New Era states that the Illinois Legislature incorporated a company, with a capital of 1,000,000 dollars, to build a bridge over the Mississippi, at Alton.—It is not in any manner to obstruct the navigation of the river—is to be commenced in two years, and to be completed in ten thereafter.

Alexander McLeod.—It is stated that the gentleman, who doubtless much against his will has become a lion of the first magnitude, is to be brought to this city to-day on a motion of habeas corpus, As the court is now in session a motion will probably be made to have the prisoner discharged, in order to get rid of the troublesome question.—N. Y. paper.

More Freshets.—Black River, in this State, has been raised to an unusual heigh, by the melting of the snow among the hills of Lewis County. One or two buildings have been swept away as well as a vast quantity of saw logs and timber and the whole of the dam at Brownsville.—N. Y. Signal.

Snow.—The Albany Argus states that the snow in Lewis county, N. Y., is two feet in depth. Many cattle and sheep had perished.

E WEATHER, CROPS AND FRUIT.—Some since we had a few promising days, but it gain relapsed to its old habit of raining.— al it continues cold and the season is re- ably backward—pasturage scarce, and some s stock dying. Some farmers have not yet, e told, ploughed any for corn, and some not even all their oats sowed. If the weath- as to be favorable from now on, of which is no prospect, there could be little corn ted before the 20th. Wheat looks quite un- ising. There was a fair prospect for abun- e of fruit of every variety, until last week. a warm sun after a slight frost at night, has nsively blasted this prospect. It is yet ewhat hard to determine the amount of the hief done, but on the flat land, where we e examined, the cherries, peaches and pears ear to be mostly destroyed and a considerable tion of the apples, though some trees of the er are not from appearance so much injured.

TAR IN THE WEST.—We published the follow- article a short time since and requested the ar" to copy it in its columns as an offset inst its account of Br. Atkinson's leaving the thodist Protestant Church and joining the iversalists:

"Some years since, the Rev. B. W. Johnson the Methodist Protestant Church attached self to the Universalists, and if we mistake , they said to the effect that in getting him y had gotten one of the most talented minis- s of the church whence he came. Br. Johnson s since given up the charge of his congregation d says he has become satisfied that it is not ht to preach the doctrines of Universalism.— ill the Star be so good as to insert this article the information of its readers. We have pub- hed its article for the benefit of our readers, d ask the favor to be reciprocated."

To this the editor responds:

The idea is conveyed in the foregoing, that . Johnson has changed his faith back to end- ss misery, and the same has been quite cur- ntly reported. Now, it so happens that we ve a letter written on this subject by himself, which he explicitly states that he firmly be- eves in the final salvation of all men, and that has not wavered from that belief. At the arnest request of his former brethren, in Madison , he proposed to undertake to revive the Meth- dist Protestant Church there, which had gone to uins, but with a full understanding that he was believer in the ultimate restoration of all man- kind. He was willing on this ground to receive ne fellowship of the conference. He left the 'atriot society not because he had changed his iews, but because the friends were not able to ive an adequate support. And in his letter to he writer he bears the following testimony in avor of that society:

"Relative to the society in Patriot I must ay that I have never seen a religious society more uniformally peaceful and harmonious in their intercourse with each other, nor more kind and benevolent as neighbors. Among no people with whom it has been my lot to be as- sociated have I been treated with more untiring friendship than by that people, and I shall carry the remembrance of their kindness with me to the grave. I shall deeply regret it if I shall do or have done anything to wound their feelings. It is not to be wondered at, that I should seek fel- lowship in the Methodist church, when it is re- collected that I am a Methodist in almost every thing but endless punishment, and that nine- tenths of all the personal friends which I have are in that church, and that their habits of feel- ing, thinking and worshipping have been familiar with me twenty or twenty-five years."

Here is the reason of his willingness to become a member of the Methodist conference; but mark, if he attaches himself to the church, he does it with the full belief of the final salvation of the whole world. And I may here add, he never was in fellowship with any Universalist association or convention, and never received a license from either to preach among us. So, Mr. 'Recorder,' you are altogether mistaken in saying he attached himself to the Universalists. He only became an Universalist in sentiment, and he is the same now.

We remark upon this:

1. Br. Gurley says, "the idea is conveyed in the foregoing that Br. Johnson has changed his faith back to endless misery." Now, we should like mighty much to know how this 'idea' is "con- veyed" in the "foreging." It certainly is not "conveyed" in the language there used. We saw a letter from Br. Johnson in which he stated to the effect, that he had became satisfied it was wrong to preach the doctrines of universal re- demption, and that he should, in future, desist therefrom; but, remarked, that he still believed in their correctness, but should retain them as private opinions. Now, all the "foregoing", "conveys" is simply that he was satisfied it was not right to preach Universalism, not that he had renounced it. But it is tolerable easy to un- derstand this matter; our liberal friend of the "Star" could not make Br. Johnson's letter con- tradict us until he had the goodness to put a meaning upon our words that is at war with ev- ery rule of construction. We should judge from the whole of this case that our old friend John- son is pretty near cured of his liberalism. The pride of opinion may prevent his formally re- nouncing these sentiments, but when he has scruples about preaching them it must be a gone case with him.

2. The "Star," after denying that Br. Johnson was ever in fellowship with the Universalists, adds, he "never received a license to preach a- mong us." From this we make two inferences: first, the Universalists must have a very loose way of doing business if they permit men to take the spiritual charge of their congregations with- out a regular license and appointment according to the rules of the church: second, if such a man as Brother Johnson, of respectable talents and standing, and who had graduated in the ministry to elder's orders, could not be admitted to that church without a formal license from an "Asso- ciation or Convention" to preach, after all their boasting of liberality there can be but very little in practice. We know churches in the land who make no extra claims to liberality, that receive ministers from other branches in the standing they had whence they came, thus recognising the validity of the acts of sister denominations. But it seems that a minister of another branch going to the Universalists cannot be considered as a member until he receives a formal license from an Association or Convention. This practice virtually unchurches every other order of chris- tians.—But if we are in error in relation to Br. J's membership in that church, we were led into this by the statements of their own papers, which we understood to say he had joined them, and that in him they had got the flower of the flock, &c.— But we may have misapprehended their meaning.

3. The address of the "Star" is a little pecul- ar;—"Mr. Recorder." Why not address us with the usual christian style of Br. Recorder? By this mode of address we hope Br. Gurley does not intend to indicate we are not entitled to the appellation. He complains much of others treat- ing the Universalists as though they were not christians; he certainly ought, therefore, to set a good example on this subject, and do nothing that might be construed into a want of christian courtesy or liberal sentiment.

Will the "Star" be so good as to publish this article, and we will reciprocate the favor.

GRAFTED FRUIT.—We refer the reader to our first page, where he will see several responses to our call for information where Grafted Fruit Trees could be obtained. From public inquires which have been made, we are satisfied there is no good assortment of the kind very near this place. As we have heard frequent inquiries for the article, whoever in this vicinity may want will please to let us know soon and arrange- ments can be made to send in the fall for them.

We have given the communications, to us, on this subject, an insertion in our paper, for the information of such readers as might be interes- ted, and for the benefit of those who have been at the pains to cultivate the article of fruit. And we presume there are few better means of gener- al information in the west than ours. Our paper circulates through about 500 post offices, distribu- ted through the country from the foot of Laurel Hill to Iowa Territory.

Since writing the above we have received the following communication:

C. Springer: Having understood that thou hadst advertised for Grafted Fruit Trees, I felt willing to write a few lines to inform thee some- thing about the number and kinds that I have for sale. I shall have between ten and twenty thousand for sale next fall, of the following kinds, viz:

Apple.—Summer fruit.—June, July, Early Bough, Early Pennock or Non-such, Cheese, Sum- mer Sweet, Scidmore, Pearmain, Maiden's Blush, Ladd's Summer.

Fall and Winter Fruit.—Pusey's Sweet, Mo- lasses, Rambo or Seek-no-further, Gate, Holland Pippin, Warren Pippin, Golden Pippen, Yellow and Green Newtown Pippin, Melting Mouth, McGrew's Sweet, Cann, Morgan, Blair, Wine Sap or Spitzenberg, Newtown Spitzenberg or Bethlehemite, Roman Stem, Weeping or Witch Willow, Belpre Russett, English Redstreak, Gray-house, Red, Gray and Sweet Romanite, American Pippin or Grind Stone, Honey Green- ing, Pennock, Rhode Island Greening, Cope's Sweet, Owl Creek Sweet, &c.

Peach.—Early Cling, Noblesse, Pound, Teton de Venus, De Burgorion.

Pear.—Butter, Bell, Bartlett, Hatinnau, Kirk's Winter, Scotch Burgundy, Seckle, Early Julian, Holland Fable, &c.

Plumb.—Orleans, Golden Gage, Green Gage, Peach, Canada, Cyrene, &c.

Cherry.—Jersey Heart, Black Heart, Black Birgarraeu, May Duke, &c.

I would be willing to accommodate thee with the above quantity and kinds in my Nursery, one mile west of Samuel Wood's Nursery, at the rate of $10 per hundred, for Apple and Peach trees. If boxed and delivered at the Ohio river, I would have $12,50 per hundred for them. Pear, Cher- ry and Plum trees come at 25 cents per tree in the Nursery. If thou wishest to obtain a large quantity, I think that I can procure forty thou- sand more within sixty miles of this, and deliver them at Wellsville, Steubenville or Wheeling, for $15 per hundred. The variety would be some what different from mine, and would proba- bly embrace seventy or seventy-five kinds.

ZANESVILLE, May 12.—Flour 3; wheat 50 cents.

BALTIMORE, May 1.—Remarks—There have been only two days for business, aside from last Saturday, since our last publication. Mon- day, the 26th ult. was set apart by our citizens as a day of mourning for the great loss our coun- try has sustained in the death of WILLIAM H. HARRISON, and a "day of mourning" it was to the very letter, so far as externals indicated—the prominent one being a procession of nearly 10,000 persons, consisting of the civil, military and naval, all clad in funeral regalia, and ac- companied with characterestic banners and oth- er devices, moving through the principal streets of the city, (the fronts of the buildings on which were festooned with webs of sable,) to the sol- emn tap of the shrouded drum, which was occa- sionally responded to by the knelling bells and the intonations of distant artillery—aside from this day, and two others, we say the weather has been rainy, and entirely too inclement for out door business, consequently operations have been limited.

Flour—The market for Howard street Flour is rather unsettled. At the close of our last week's report, holders were vainly asking 4,56; on the next day and subsequently, moderate sales were made at 4,50; and within the last two or three days, sales have been made at 4,37½ cts per bbl.

Western Transportation—There is a further small decline in Wagon freight westwardly, the Canals and railroads being powerful competitors. Wagons have loaded since our last for Wheeling at 1,25, 1,31¼ and 1,37½ per 100 lbs.; and the rates to Pittburgh are about the same.—Lyfard.

PITTSBURGH, April 30.—Flour—We find flour plenty and falling, sales from wagon $2,87½ and at the river 2.87½a2,90 without inspection, and inspected 2,94, a 3,00, and from store 3,00 a 3,25 per barrel.

Coffee—Stock good and fallen about ½ cent, sales of the week about 1,000 bags at 12½ a 13, and in small lots 13¼ a14 cts.

Sugar—Good supply and sales fair: 20 hhds prime 7½ c, cash, currency; 10 hhds do 7½ c. 4 mos; 10 do 7¾ and 20 hhds medium on time, 7c. per pound.

Iron and nails—Flat Bar Iron, com. sizes, per lb., 4 a 4½; do. smaller sizes, 4¾ a 6¼; Lock Iron 5; Round and Square Iron 4a7½; Hoop Iron 4¾a 8; Sheet Iron 6¼a7¾; Boiler Iron 6¼a7¾; Stove Plates 7; Nail Rods 6; Deck and Spike Rods 5½; Plough Slabs 5½; Plough Wings 5½; 10, 12, 16 and 20d nails 4¾; 8 and 9d 5; 6 to 7d 5; 3, 3¼ 4, and 4½ inch spikes 5½; 5, 5½, and 6 inch spikes 6.—Harris.

PHILADELPHIA, May 4.—Flour—There is a better feeling in the Flour market, and prices more firm, with a slight tendency to improvement. Sales have been made of Western 4,44; and no good brands of Pennsylvania can be bought under 4,50 per bbl; for selected brands a trifle more is demanded.

Flour—Ohio Canal, 4,93 a 500; Troy, 4,81¼ a 4,87½; Western Canal, 4,93 a 5,00.—Bicknell.

MORE OF THE BANK FORGERS.—Matthew Dra- per, Esq., the celebrated operator on the Girard Bank, having left his lodgings, No. 83, at the Merchants' Hotel, for good, and left his baggage behind him, it has been deemed expedient to search his trunk. It contained various articles of clothing, and a valise fastened with various se- cret springs. The valise was opened, and con- tained, among other articles of no consequence, two inkstands, a bottle of blue ink, and a black wig with soap locks. The wig was handed over to High Constable Young for safe keeping. It has doubtless been kept and used by Draper for pur- poses of disguise. He is, we learn, a man of about the medium size; from thirty to thirty-five years of age; sandy complexion; round, full face, florid color; light, auburn hair, no whiskers. The ut- most, exertions have been used, as we are inform- ed, by High Constable Young and others to trace him without success.

The mystery attending some part of this adroit forgery will probably be developed in the course of a few days. An answer is expected by Wm. D. Lewis, Esq. cashier of the Girard Bank, in the course of eight or ten days, to a letter written by him to Mr. Hall, of New Orleans, and this will doubtless throw much light upon the whole mat- ter. Draper's accomplice is not heard of, altho' no pains have been spared to trace him. (Why did not the officers hold him when they had him?) He is described as being about 35 or 40 years of age, dark complexion, black hair, large black whiskers, and commonly dressed. Draper is be- lieved by some to be lurking about the city yet, as a letter said to be in his handwriting has been seen, which is postmarked "Philadelphia, April 28th;" it would seem, therefore, that he was near at hand, and perhaps disguised in some way. He is a bold operator, and has without doubt spent years in an apprenticeship to his nefarious trade. It appears certain that he has not sailed in any vessel bound to Europe, and it is not likely that he will attempt it, as he would most probably be trapped in the attempt.—Ledger.

The following extract of a letter received by the Cashier of the Girard Bank from the Cashier of the Commercial Bank of New Orleans, throws some light upon the plan pursued in connexion with the recent forgeries:

"I wrote to you on the 12th inst. advising you that I had no knowledge of what you referred to in relation to Mr. Draper. I find that imposi- tion has also been attempted on the Bank of America, New York. Two certificates of Depos- it of this Bank issued to a Mr. Robert D. Mac- key, for small sums, were presented to us yester- terday, and this morning for payment, altered in a very ingenious manner to $13,000 each, one of which had been negotiated to the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati; and the other to the Bank of Kentucky, Louisville. An extensive and singu- larly bold system of fraud has been perpetrated, and I trust your bank will not have been the vic- tim of it. Our police is at work, and we offered a considerable reward for the detection of any of the culpable parties, but I fear no good is to be done here now, but am not without hopes that something may have turned up to excite suspicion in the minds of Mr. Thompson or yourselves, and that the further progress of this infamous scheme will have been arrested."

ITEMS.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN.—It is said that loaded teams were crossing Lake Champlain at Plattsburg on Friday last. There are three feet of snow only ten or twelve miles west of the Lake. The far- mers are nearly all out of hay, and their cattle in a starving condition.—Phil. Chron. 30th ult.

Oyer and Terminer.—The trial of Thos. L. Shuster for the murder of his wife, by shooting her with a pistol bullet on the 24th of September last, came on before Judges Conard and Doran, on Wednesday the 28th ult.—Phil. paper.

The Harmony of the Great Powers.—A Paris letter states that a restoration of complete har- mony between France and the continental pow- ers is now unquestionable. The treaty of the 15th of July for the settlement of Egypt and Sy- ria, has been signed by France.

Swift.—The steamer Queen of the West, Cap- tain Joel H. Green, arrived at Vicksburg on the 8th ult. in two days and twenty-two hours from Louisville! This is the quickest trip on record.

A great nephew of the veritable Alexander Sel- kirk, the original of the celebrated Robinson Crusoe, is at present residing at Canonmills, near Edinburg, in rather straitened circumstances.

Fatal Accident.—A woman, named Mrs. Lit- trel, and child, were picked up by a steamboat, near the mouth of Black River, La., after having floated on a snag five hours. It appears a party of seven persons were in a canoe on the river, when it upset, drowning five of them.

We shall have ten days later news from Eng- land by Friday, via Cunard's line to Boston. If that does not bring tidings of the President, there will be a poor look for her.

Great Honor.—To Dr. Rush belongs the noble distinction of originating the Temperance Re- formation in this country. His essay published in 1804 was the first important effort made to arrest the progress of intemperance.

The following is from a Texas paper—but, as the Almanacs say, it will do very well for this meridian:

"The government will want, about the first Monday in October next, some fifty-four mem- bers to supply the two Houses of Congress. Let as few of them be lawyers as possible, for the rea- son that they are addicted to talking, and their long speeches are too expensive."

Washington Gossip—that the British minis- ter, (Mr. Fox) aged sixty, is about to marry the sister of the wife of the Russian minister, (Miss Williams) a little girl of sixteen.

The Happy West.—A western paper states that during a period of about three years and a half, there has been six hundred and five wed- dings in Cooke county, Illinois, besides an "im- mense number" of marriages out of the county.

ACCIDENT.—Mr. William Clarke was drowned at East Hartford, Conn., a few days since, by the sinking of the ferry boat, which was overloaded with teams. He was about fifty years of age—was a butcher by trade, and resided in Hartford.

ELSSLERPHOBIA.—Fanny Elssler has cleared $75,000, by her visit to the South.

EARTHQUAKE.—A severe shock of an earthquake was felt in the city and har- bor of Port au Prince, on the evening of the 13th ult.

BURGLARS.—The city of St. Louis, Mo., is infested with a gang of these gentry. On the night of the 29th ult., three different houses were entered, and considerable property taken.

GREAT WESTERN.—This steamer sailed from New York on Saturday, at one o'clock P. M., with one hundred passen- gers. The London and Liverpool packets which were to have sailed yesterday had their berths all taken, and the Utica, for Havre, was obliged to refuse many that applied.

The editor of the Washington Globe gives notice that unless the subscription list of his paper be increased, its publica- tion will have to be suspended.

Prentice says the Louisville Advertiser has secured a new and distinguished Correspondent at Washington. His first letter has been received—rather short, to be sure, but pithy and admirable. It is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, April 16, 1841.

GENTLEMEN: Upon the receipt hereof, you will cease to print or furnish blanks for the use of the Post-Office Depart- ment. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, FR. GRANGER.

Messrs. J. Elliott & Co. Louisville, Ky.

MORE FORGERIES.—The New Orleans Advertiser of April 24 says: The march of rascality and wickedness is onward.— A fellow by the name of Matthew Dra- per deposited four several amounts in the Commercial Bank of New York Orleans between one hundred and seven, and a hundred and twenty dollars each, on or about the 20th of March, and received certificates of deposite therefor. With this anchor the scoundrel obliterated the figures and the words, and inserted "twenty thousand Mexican dollars," in the bottom of the certificate; and at the bottom of the certificate, in the left hand corner, are the figures $21,000.

This alteration is not a perfect fac sim- ile of the original filling up, though it is near enough to deceive.

The check was sold to the Girard bank in Philadelphia, and is now sent on here for payment, endorsed by W. D. Lewis the Cashier of that institution."

A BANK SWINDLED.—The Philadelphia Bank has been swindled out of $3000. The fraud was perpetrated some time since but was only lately discovered. It bears some resemblance to the forgeries on the other Banks, and may have been by a portion of the same gang. But to the particulars.

Some time ago, a letter was received purporting to be from one of the banks in Mobile, enclosing an order to pay over to a person named therein, whatever sum might be credited to it upon the books of the Philadelphia Bank. Not suspecting the genuineness of the order, the amount of $3000 was paid when called for. On Monday advices from the Mobile Bank dis- closed the fact that the Bank here had been imposed upon.

BURGLARIES IN BOSTON.—The Boston Mail says: The hardware store of Mr. Joseph Lincoln, Jr., 9 Union street, was entered through the back door, on Thurs- day night and robbed of about $100 worth of knives and pistols, $6 in change, and a few articles of trifling value.—On the same night the store of Messrs. Henry, Baily & Co., No. 15 Court street, was entered by the means of false keys, dur- ing the temporary absence of the clerk, who sleeps there, but the thieves becoming alarmed, they decamped without any boo- ty.

WAPUTUCK'S TRIAL.—The Indian Wa- pautuck, was tried at St. Louis, on the 13th ult. for the murder of Potter, a Kick- apoo. The verdict was manslaughter, and the sentence eighteen months impris- onment. The parties belonging to a por- tion of the Kickapoo tribe, which has been converted to christianity, and in some de- gree civilized.

DARING BURGLARY.—A daring attempt to rob the hat store of Messrs. Bailey & Co. of Boston, was made on last Sunday evening. The clerk was sitting in the store with the gas light partially turned on, when he heard the door opened and some one enter. He then immediately took two pistols and secreted himself be- hind the counter. The robber on entering the store turned on the gas and he pro- ceeded to the safe, which he opened, and selected a parcel of notes receivable to the value of $500. Having selected sever- al articles of value, he was about to leave the store, when the clerk presented himself to his view. The robber im- mediately fired at him, missed; when the clerk returned the fire, but also without effect. The robber immediately took flight, leaving all his booty behind him, as well as his hat, which bears the name of 'John Butler, New-Orleans.'

PENNSYLVANIA.—The worthy function- ary who was elected by the people of the State of Pennsylvania to perform the du- ties of Governor of that commonwealth, has made himself quite celebrated of late by his frequent application of the veto power. It must be that there is a "screw loose somewhere," in the keystone State, that the Executive should be called upon to use the veto ten times in one session!

VIRGINIA ELECTION.—Sufficient returns have been received from Virginia Elec- tions to enable us to form a correct opin- ion as to the result. The Congressional delegation will stand as follows: Whigs 10; Van Buren men 10; and 'independent' or no-party man, R. M. T. Hunter; being a Whig gain of one member. The char- acter of the House of Delegates is not so certain, from there being several mem- bers of doubtful politics returned, but the Whigs claim 68, which gives them a ma- jority of two.

THE FORGER.—The New York Times states that one of the men engaged in the recent great forgeries, it is said, has a de- fect or blemish in one of his eyes. A pas- senger up the Mississippi river, says that a man corresponding with the description of the chief actor here, left the boat, April 3d, some miles below Gallipolis, and paid fifty dollars to be taken immediate- ly to the great Eastern mail route.

The steamer Gipsy, freighted with lead, on her passage from Galena to St, Louis, is reported to have sunk at the lower rapids.—St. Louis Rep.

QUARANTINE.—The board of consulting physicians in Boston have expressed an opinion that the total abolition of the pres- ent system of quarantine regulations is demanded by the public good.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On the 6th inst. by Jeremiah Springer, Esq., Mr. SAULSBERRY GRAYLESS to Miss ANN CHRISTIE, both of Newton township.

On the 29th ult. by the Rev. Wm. Munhall, Mr. JOHN PYLE to Miss MARTHA BRANNON, both Licking county, Ohio.

Business Department.

Br. Addis, a letter addressed to Br. Reeves to this office might meet him if sent soon. We believe he is preparing to be at the sea board against the last of June, with a view to visit England on a visit to his relations.

Our friend S. from Indiana will be so good as to send us an extract from his journal of the weather, and we will publish for him.

Br. P. Smith, of Broad Ridge circuit, Ky., in- forms Br. Bassett that a two days' meeting is appointed at J. Robinson's on the 22d and 23d inst. to meet his appointment. He also requests Br. McGuire, if he can visit them, this year, to give them information through our paper.

Br. Stilwell, of Driftwood circuit, Indiana, says they are without a preacher, and have been for some time; he invites Brs. Simpson, Wheat- ley, and Hicklin, the Conference Missionary, to visit them. Go brethren and cheer their droop- ing spirits.

Br. Addis, the two dollar note you sent us on the "Mechanics' and Traders' Bank of Cincin- nati" is not current here. We will try and get it off, if not, we will return it.

N. Smith, of Bloomington, Indiana, owes us for our paper from the commencement. The P. M. says he refuses to take it from the office.— Will our agent in that vicinity see to this mat- ter?

D. Chandler, of Morgan, Ohio, is credited on our books with 2,50.

We inform Br. Lanham that we think it best to hand his letter to the President in person, as he will be this way in a few days, and not to publish it.

FIRE IN NEW ORLEANS.—A fire broke out in New Orleans, on the 23d of April, in the carriage repository of Messrs. Beach & Co. which was soon consumed. The adjacent building, occupied by Messrs Hagedorn & Cramer, importers of dry goods, was next on fire and with its entire contents destroyed; the loss is very heavy, though partly covered by insurance. Hage- dorn & Cramer were insured $70,000, and Beach & Co. $39,000.

ENLARGEMENT

OF THE

Saturday Evening Post.

THE PHILADELPHIA MAMMOTH.

A NEW volume of this well established and highly popular family newspaper, GREATLY IMPROVED and improved with entirely new type, com- menced May 1st, 1841. The paper is printed in beautiful type, and has received the praise of many editors of taste, as "the handsomest family sheet in the Union." Our efforts have been di- rected to the combining of beauty and simplici- ty with utility and taste. The Post is printed on stout white paper, rendering it neat and dura- ble for filing. It is issued at the old establish- ed rate of two dollars per annum CASH, or three dollars if not paid in advance, and may truly be said, now that it is enlarged, to be the

at the price it is sold. It has all the merits, and none of the defects of the large papers of the day, for while the earliest literary matter may be found in its columns, a judicious compilation of domes- tic and foreing news, with the usual variety of wit and sentiment, will render it a better fami- ly paper. The proprietors make no flourish of trumpets about the size and cheapness of the paper, or the firm basis upon which the "OLD POST" stands. It is not necessary. It has borne the battle and the breeze for the last TWENTY- ONE YEARS, and has held its position in the midst of tottering and crumbling rivals, and has faced and buried all kinds of opponents.

THE MODE OF CONDUCTING IT.

The proprietors having for a long time depre- cated the floods of foreign literature, indiscrimi- nately re-published in this country, have deter- mined, without altogether neglecting this field, to select nothing but the choicest tales and sketch- es, from the English periodicals; and they have made arrangements by which they can furnish these to their subscribers in advance of every co- temporary. The editors will also keep an eye to the best American tales afloat, giving always the preference to the writers of their own coun- try. We shall still continue the plan of giving original stories from popular American writers. The well known Author of "Cruizing in the Last War," opened the volume with the first of a new series of thrilling nautical tales. In addi- tion to the old, a number of new Contributors will enrich its columns with choice and entertaining original articles. In order that the SATUR- DAY EVENING POST may maintain its high position, as the

FIRST FAMILY NEWSPAPER

in the United States, arrangements have been made for a regular supply of choice and entertain- ing historical sketches, poetry, &c. We have been publishing for months past an unbroken series of choice original stories which have been procured at great cost, and have been widely copied and read. These we shall continue.

THE NEWS DEPARTMENT.

While it shall be the care of the proprietors to preserve for the paper, a high literary reputa- tion, the great desideratum for a family newspa- per, a carefully selected news department, shall not be made second in interest or importance. While every thing of note that is passing either in this country or in Europe shall be carefully collected or collated for our readers, a due regard shall be paid to the character of the matter. So that the paper may be with safety and proprie- ty introduced and read in the family circle.

THE LADIES' DEPARTMENT

will still be preserved, shall be choice and select, and shall receive strict attention. It shall be the effort of the editors to embrace in this depart- ment such selections of the floating literature of the day, as may be in an especial manner suited to the instruction and amusement of the female sex, and to combine the fashionable with the truly useful and good.

Such things as may suit that important and large class of our subscribers, will not be overlooked. In order to gratify, as much as possible, the laudable desire of our readers, a portion of our attention will be devo- ted to the collection and diffusion of such news as may seem IMPORTANT TO AGRICULTU- RALISTS, and the population resident without the confines of our great cities. The state of the markets and the fluctuations in the prices, will be regularly and what is of more moment, correctly given.

THE FARMERS,

We determined at the outset, that while the paper continued under our control, it should be

and that as news and literary journalists, we had nothing to do with the matter; this determina- tion has been strictly and rigidly adhered to, and while we shall continue to give our readers such public documents as may be deemed of interest to all, and such a history of the progress of polit- ical events, as are strictly in keeping with our duty, and the character of our paper, we shall studiously and thoroughly avoid any contamina- tion of partizan politics.

THE TERMS.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST will be furnished at the exceedingly low price of TWO DOLLARS per annum, invariably in advance. We will send a copy to any person who may wish to see a specimen, by giving notice, post paid.

INDUCEMENT TO CLUBS.

As friends and neighbors often wish to club together to facilitate remittances, we will send

3 copies for $5 in advance, post paid,
7 do. for $10 do. do.

NO NEW SUBSCRIBERS RECEIVED WITHOUT THE MONEY.

We have no desire to extend our list but with cash subscribers, and the paper is sufficiently es- tablished to enable us to exert compliance with this golden rule. The Post is made worth more than the money, and it must be paid by those who wish the paper.

To those who wish to subscribe, we would say, that the safest plan is to enclose the money in a letter and direct to us. Most postmasters will frank their letters if relating to nothing but the business of the office, and all postmasters who will be kind enough to do so, we shall be pleased to acknowledge as agents.

Editors who may wish to exchange, will please copy, and forward a number of their paper mark- ed with ink, to this office, and their favor shall be promptly acknowledged without fraud or delay, as is but too often the case. Address,

GEO. R. GRAHAM & Co.

South West corner of Third and Chesnut streets, Philadelphia.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

Much has been written and said in the M. P. church about educating young men for the ministry. That young men, or old men to preach the gospel successfully, need a good English education, no one, it is presumed, will deny, without attempting to oppose, or any way to meddle with institutions of learning, which may now be established, for the benefit of young men, who, in future, may desire to dedicate themselves to the gospel ministry.

Let us then, consider whether any thing can be done, to improve the ministers, now engaged in the service of the church, in the Ohio Conference district of the M. P. Church, in knowledge, and give them a better qualification, for a proper discharge of the important duties devolving upon them. Our excellent discipline points out a number of books, which candidates for the ministry are expected to read and study both before and after they enter upon the duties of the ministry. The founders of the church must have supposed that some future plan would be devised, by which poor men could find access to these valuable works. I say poor men, because ministers of the gospel are generally poor. It is well known that the greater number of our ministers are not able to purchase the books recommended to their attention. It is believed that there are young men, and middle aged men, and those that are advanced in age, now in the Ohio Conference, who could improve themselves considerably, provided they had the books, the proper works to read and study.

The writer, who has had the honor of being a feeble itinerant minister in the church, for near eight years, has never been able to procure, perhaps, not half of the books referred to. The present inquiry is to ascertain what can be done to assist ministers with suitable theological books in order that they may school themselves in divinity. Many eminent men now in the world—and eminent divines in the Church, are what is called self made or self taught men; and no doubt there are now hundreds of young men in obscurity, if they only had some encouragement, that is, suitable books to read, who would rise to usefulness and distinction and become burning and shining lights. If God designs a man for the ministry, (for I believe in a call thereto) three or four general things he will have to attend to, prayer, reading, meditation or study, and a practical application to the duties of his calling. Perseverence in these particulars, with the blessing of the Almighty, will make the preacher. In the general way, if a man gets wisdom, he has to dig or labor for it.

The preacher is expected to edify and entertain his hearers with truth and substantial knowledge. How can he impart that which he has not? For a minister not to understand his text, so as to bring forth something suitable therefrom, is deplorable. Or for a minister to suppose the Almighty will so inspire his heart, and give him words and matter without his previous study and preparation, is a great mistake, and whosoever tries, will find it so to his sorrow.

If it should meet with the approbation of the Ministers of the Ohio Conference I will suggest something which I hope they will neither think futile or visionary. It appears to the writer that it may be of great utility and also perfectly practical and easy to be carried into operation. It is this, the establishment of an Ohio Conference Theological Library—a library not to be filled up with common place books, but with the most useful, scientific, historical and theological works in the English language, embracing all those pointed out in the discipline, and many more.—How can this ministerial library be obtained? I answer, by every minister who approves of the plan of a library, to pay the sum of $1, per annum to establish the same, which may be located in some central place of the district. Suppose we only have fifty subscribers at the commencement, but the probability is that we will have more. In ten years we will have $500 worth of books. Likely the lay-brethren would generally subscribe to it, in order to have the use of the books especially the class leaders and other officers of the church. The books out of the Library could all be returned by the preachers once a year or oftener.

The proposed library is for the benefit of the ministers, now entered upon the duties of the ministry, stationed or unstationed, who feel that they have opened their mouth for the Lord and cannot go back; or young men who may be candidates for the ministry, and is not designed to be a substitue for a Literary Institute for youth. I propose this plan because I think it perfectly practical. If then, brethren in the ministry of the Ohio district, approve the plan, let them speak out through the columns of the Recorder. If they do not approve of the notion and think no benefit would be derived from it, I shall say no more. But should they approve the plan it will give me great pleasure. Let them come to the rescue: let them say so in their letters, and I do hope some writer who may approve the project, and of better ability than myself, will come out in favor of something like what I have suggested.

Tea.—To add to the tea difficulties, four large London tea ships, with full cargoes, have been recently lost at sea.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Evening Signal.

The President and his Family—Reception of the Diplomatic Corps—Order of business at the White House.

Washington, April 26, 1841.

Several members of President Tyler's family have arrived at the White House—namely, Mr. and Mrs. Jones, of Va. (son-in-law and daughter of the President;) Mr. Robert Tyler and his lady, (formerly Miss Cooper,) and Miss Tyler. These, with the wife of the President, who is still in Virginia in delicate health, and Mr. John Tyler, Jr. his private Secretary, will compose the domestic circle of the Executive mansion—and a most delightful circle it will be. The President himself is distinguished for his kind and cordial manners. All who have business with him, or who call to pay their respects are pleased with their reception. Henceforth, there will be, beside, that charm around the White House which the presence of young, beautiful, and accomplished women alone can give.

The Foreign Ministers speak in the highest terms of the manner in which they were received by the President when they called in a body to present their respects to him on Saturday. No man, however accustomed to Courts, could have gone through the ceremony with a higher degree of grace and dignity. In conversation, Mr. Tyler is always singularly fluent and animated, and sometimes rises even to eloquence—but in his reply to the address of the Russian Minister, in behalf of the Diplomatic Corps, and in the remarks he made to each member, there was a felicity both of thought and expression, and a general appropriateness, which all observed and which produced the most favorable impression on the representatives of foreign nations and all who were present. It was, indeed, a most interesting scene. Several members of the Cabinet have spoken of the part the President bore in it as a model of the deportment of an American Chief Magistrate.

Mr. Tyler is fortunate in having a most methodical and industrious Private Secretary. Nothing can be more orderly than his arrangement of his father's business, and of the papers which demand his personal attention and consideration. The President himself is a man of well disciplined business habits. He rises with the dawn; and thus has a couple or more hours clear for his work before breakfast. His first task is to clean his table—that is, to dispose of all the letters and papers that have been placed there, systematically arranged, by his Secretary the day or evening previous. This prevents a very troublesome kind of business from accumulating. He devotes the time from his rising till ten o'clock, (with a brief interval at eight for breakfast,) to this work. From ten to twelve o'clock he receives the visits of those who wish to see and consult him personally on business. Such persons are admitted singly, so as to allow more freedom to their intercourse. It is expected that at these interviews no one will act improperly as to engage the President longer than is really necessary to explain his object. From twelve to two is set apart for the reception of those who call merely to pay their respects; and the drawing rooms are generally well filled at those hours. At two o'clock the Cabinet meets, and from the breaking up of the Cabinet to dinner time the President holds himself in reserve for consultation with the heads of departments, separately, on official business. The evenings are given up to free and social intercourse with those who happen to drop in. This is a very good and orderly arrangement, and by adhering to it the President is enabled to despatch a great amount of business every day.

Temperance.—The glorious cause of Temperance is moving forward in moral grandeur. At least three millions have rallied under the temperance banner in Ireland. In this country the work is receiving almost everywhere, a new impetus. In the city of Baltimore a Temperance Association was commenced by five or six drunkards which, with its various "branches," numbers about 3,000 members. The society recently sent five of their reformed men to the city of New York with a view of calling inebriates to their standard there. A large meeting was held in the Park, and the five philanthropists on different platforms simultaneously addressed the people, after which pledges to total abstinance were taken by many moderate and immoderate drinkers and venders. We learn from the Friend of Man that a meeting is to be held in the Academy Room of the Court House in this city next Sabbath Evening, at 5 o'clock P. M. for the purpose of aiding in this HEAVEN-FAVORED REFORMATION. Measures will be proposed for extending these efforts the whole length of the ERIE CANAL, from Albany to Buffalo, at the opening of the spring navigation. The Catholic Church in this city as well as in many other places, are coming nobly up to the work. A large number of this class of our citizens have already taken the pledge. May not the Protestants be behind.—Wesleyan Meth.

A Nice Editor.—The London Argus suggests that in the event of the execution of McLeod, the British Government should take summary retribution, by arresting and executing Mr. Stevenson, the American Minister. A person need not have as many eyes as the fabled "Argus" to see the length of that editor's ears.

Rates of Interest.—The following are the rates of Interest in the States and Territories of the Union, together with the punishment for usury. It is a valuable statement, and should be preserved:

Maine, 6 per cent—forfeit of the debt or claim.

New Hampshire, 6 per cent—forfeit of three times the amount unlawfully taken.

Vermont, 6 per cent—recovery in action with costs.

Massuchusetts, 6 per cent—forfeit of three fold the usury.

Rhode Island, 6 per cent—forfeit of the money and interest on the debt.

New York, 6 per cent—forfeit of the whole debt.

New Jersey, 6 per cent—forfeit of the whole debt.

Pennsylvania, 6 per cent—forfeit of the whole debt.

Delaware, 6 per cent—forfeit of the whole debt.

Maryland, 6 per cent—on tobacco contracts 8 per cent. Usurious contracts void.

Virgina, 6 per cent—forfeit double the usury taken.

North Carolina, 6 per cent—contracts for usury void—forfeit double the usury.

South Carolina, 7 per cent—forfeit of interest and premium taken, with costs to debtor.

Georgia, 8 per cent—forfeit of three times the usury and contract void.

Alabama, 8 per cent—forfeit of interest and usury.

Mississippi, 8 per cent—by contract as high as 10—usury recoverable in action of debt.

Louisiana, 5 per cent—bank interest 6—conventional as high as 10—beyond, contract void'

Tennessee, 6 per cent—usurious contracts void,

Kentucky, 6 per cent—usury may be recovered, with costs.

Ohio, 6 per cent—usurious contracts void.

Indiana, 6 per cent—on written agreement may go as high as 10—penalty of usury, a fine of double the excess.

Illinois, 6 per cent—three fold amount of the whole interest.

Missouri, 6 per cent—by agreement as high as 10—if beyond, forfeit of the whole interest due, and of the usury due.

Michigan, 7 per cent—forfeit of the usury taken, and one fourth the debt.

Arkansas, 6 per cent—by agreement, any rate not higher than ten. Amount of usury recoverable, but contracts void.

Florida, 8 per cent—forfeit of interest and excess in case of usury.

Wisconsin, 7 per cent—by agreement not over 12—forfeit treble the excess.

On debts and judgments in favor of the United States, interest is computed at 6 per cent per year.

Origin of the word Schooner.—"Being at Gloucester, Sept. 8, 1790, I was informed, (and committed to writing) that the kind of vessels called schooners, derived their name from this circumstance, viz: Mr. Andrew Robinson, of that place having constructed a vessel which he masted and rigged in the same manner as schooners are at this day; on her going off the stocks and passing into the water, a bystander cried out, 'O! how she schoons!' Robinson instantly replied, 'A schooner let her be.' From that time, vessels thus masted and rigged have gone by the name of schooners; before such vessels of that description were not known in Europe and America.

"This account was confirmed to me by a great number of persons in Gloucester. I made particular inquiry of an aged sea captain, who informed me that he had not, in any of his voyages to Europe or America, seen any of those vessels prior to Robinson's construction."—Cotton Tufts.—Histor. Col.

Curry, the Forger.—This man who obtained $2,500 from the Bank of Ithica by means of forgery, and who has been the subject of much correspondence between Gov. Seward and Gov. Gilmer, of Virginia, passed through town to-day, loaded with Irons, on his way to Ithica. He was in custody of Mr. John A. Dix, of that place, who was deputed by Gov. Seward to obtain him of the acting Governor of Virginia, who surrendered him without restriction of any kind. The prisoner is a "fine, gay, bold-faced villain," apparently accustomed to his calling, with black eyes aud a profusion of whiskers. Some $2,000 have been received in money and effects, which will leave the loss but trifling.—Buff. Com. Adv.

Trevecca, in Breconshire, the place of residence of the celebrated Howel Harris (one of the Founders of the Calvanistic Methodism,) and which was the seat of a college established and supported by the late Countess of Huntington, is again, we understand, to be favored with a similar institution. The mansion house occupied by Mr. Harris has become the property of the Calvanistic Methodists; and is now, by their direction, under repair with this view. A sum of not less than £10,000 is proposed to be raised by collection throughout South Wales for its endowment.

A learned clergyman, in Maine, was accosted in the following manner, by an illiterate preacher who despised education—"Sir, you have been to College, I suppose?" "Yes, sir," was the reply. "I am thankful," rejoined the former, "that the Lord has opened my mouth to preach without any learning." "A similar event," replied the latter, "took place in Balaam's time, but such things are of rare occurrence at the present day."—N. Y. Observer.

Office-Seekers.—Many, we fear, are doomed to feel the truth of these celebrated lines of Spenser.

"Full little knowest thou, that hast not tried,
What hell it is in suing long to bide:
To lose good days, that might be better spent;
To waste long nights in pensive discontent;
To speed to-day, to put back to-morrow;
To feed on hope, to pine with fear and sorrow;
To fret thy soul with crosses and with cares;
To eat thy heart with comfortless despairs;
To fawn, to crouch, to wait, to ride, to run;
To spend, to give, to want, to be undone."

We Hope it may Prove So.—A minister in Baltimore while speaking of the recommendation of President Tyler, of a day of religious observance throughout the whole nation, said "Now, do I date and anticipate for our country, returning prosperity! From this day forth, the bitterness of social and national evil is past; for the whole land, in its length and breadth, as well as in its most exalted places, bears public testimony to the powers and duties of religion!"

China and her Commerce.—The vast importance of the Commerce of China is easily understood, by recollecting that her exports of tea alone last year amounted to the sum of $17,925,384. The total amount of tea imported in the United States in 1839, was $2,412,283. The population of China forms one-twelfth part of the inhabitants of the globe, embracing 360,000,000.

Methodists in Great Britain.—A late English paper says that the Wesleyan Methodist have no less than 160 foreign missionary stations, they employ 220 missionaries, and in the school under the supervision of those missionaries there are the amazing number of 40,000 children. The contributions to the missionary funds within the last year were nearly £90,000.

A great sensation has been created in the mercantile circles of Dublin in consequence of the sudden flight of a member of the board of Aldermen, leaving behind him defalcations to the enormous amount of £60,000. No reasons has yet been assigned as the cause of failure.

Virtues of a Cold Bath.—A young woman disappointment in love, named McCluskey, jumped from a wharf in Baltimore, on Sunday, intending to destroy herself. Not liking the water as much as she fancied she would, she cried out for help and was rescued.

"You charge me fifty sequins," said a Venitian nobleman to a sculptor, "for a bust that only cost you ten day's labor." "You forget," replied the artist, "that I had been thirty years learning to make that bust in ten days."

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.—Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

AIR—Washington.

...e saints of God come hear me tell,
...wonders of Emmanuel;
...he does send his truth abroad,
... call lost sinners back to God;
...sends His word with power divine,
...d searches out the inmost mind,
...oses sin most clear to view,
... tells the sinner what to do;
...nely, repent and turn to God,
... thereby shun His dreadful rod.

...was much plagu'd with outward sin,
... more by that, that dwelt within;
...ich often bar'd the Saviour out,
...filled me with distress and doubt,
... now those fears are driven away,
...rilliancy of gospel day:
...hines so clear I must believe,
...t I do in my Saviour live,
...fe of love, a heaven below;
... not a doubt I feel it so.

...f more you'd wish to know of me,
... happy now and hope to be;
...ile I do in the flesh remain,
... I return to God again;
... I do feel His presence sweet,
...ile I like Mary at His feer,
... claim a portion of His love,
...ich lifts my heart to things above,
...w good it is how sweet to me—
...that mankind would all be free.

How grateful then ought I to prove,
the sweet tokens of His love,
...hich charms my heart and makes me whole,
...d stamps His image on my soul.
...debtor great sure I must be,
...Him whose power hath saved me;
...life of love He hath bestowed,
...hich stays my mind on Him my God;
...d what doth much increase my store,
...en I ask Him He gives me more.

Come brethren, dear, whose joys abound,
...d hear the precious gospel sound,
...eer up your hearts in strong belief!
...Him who ever, ever lives:
...though our race is not quite run,
...e feel that heaven is now begun,
...en let us sing a joyful song,

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

CINCINNATI CT., MAY 1, 1841.

...r. Springer: It is with much plea..., that I can communicate to the rea... of your excellent paper, the pleas... ntelligence, that Almighty God in the ...itude of His abounding grace has con...ended to some extent to have pity up...s, by pouring out His spirit on many ...ious souls for whom Christ died. At ...hesda Chapel, one of our posts of la... the devout followers of Christ had ...; mourned the low state of religion, ...deplored the langour and feebleness ...ch pervaded the congregation and ... made it an object of especial pray... the Supreme Being that He would ...ve His work of grace. A meeting was ...inted to commence on the second Sat...y of April, to answer the visit of Br. ...sett, President of the District. He ... punctual to the hour, and while he ...tained with us, preached three ser...s, and engaged in other devotional ex...ses, much to the edification and com... of God's children. Br. Evans preach...n Sabbath evening, respecting the min...ring angels, to our pleasure and satis...ion. It was not until the Monday eve... next, that we saw any omens for a ...k of grace, or a revival as we usually ...n it. After the faithful labors of Br. ...nes from the pulpit, and his appeals to ... young people, aided by the entreaties ... sympathetic expostulations of Br. ...ore, a deep religious impression, was ...le on the congregation, and a solemn ...se of the presence of Jehovah filled the ...se.

...bout this time a young gentleman in ... audience, feeling his lost estate by na..., and under awakening grace, presented ...mself at the altar as a seeker of religion ... a subject of prayer. All had confi...ce in his sincerity, and its effects were ...te electrical, and were felt throughout ... congregation. In two or three minutes ...at persons were kneeling at the altar ...ply penitent, and inquiring what they ...uld do to be saved. This was a sol... and momentous time, especially to those who had now for the first time in their lives, perhaps, attempted to call upon a gracious God. It is a scene which always affects my heart and causes the tear silently to flow from my eye; yet I delight to witness such scenes, and always take a deep interest with those who are seeking religion.

On Monday evening a new impetus was given to our hopes, for the certain prosperity and success of our protracted meeting. The faith, the hope and expectation of God's children were, much augmented. The meetings were continued every evening, and sometimes in the forenoon, until Thursday evening. A few souls before this time had found peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ and were enabled to rejoice in a sin forgiving God. Preaching was resumed again on Sabbath morning and continued on every night until the next Friday night. Our meeting grew more interesting every day. But it was not until Wednesday evening, the 21st April, that we witnessed the most brilliant display of the power and glory of God, that we have seen west of the Alleghenies. If indeed ever at any other place in our lives. On this evening, after preaching, about thirty persons presented themselves at the altar, as seekers of religion, earnestly groaning for redemption in the blood of Jesus, and blessed be God, many of them found the pearl of great price, to the unspeakable joy of their disconsolate hearts. Their convictions for sin were pungent & keen, their cries and groans for deliverance were strong and pathetic, and many of them appeared to understand the spirit and meaning of Christ's words, where he says strive to enter in at the straight gate for many shall seek to enter in that shall not be able, because they do not strive or agonize.

The subjects of this work of grace, as to their standing in civil society, are of the first respectability, and a large portion of them young men, some married and others single. There was no pulling nor griping to get them in the attitude of penitents. The means used were, persuasive truth, love and the power of God, with their own sense of propriety; they voluntarily sought the Lord. No doubt, the Wednesday evening referred to, that is the exercise—the scene, and circumstances will be remembered many years hence, perhaps by many in eternity. Who can doubt the effect and perpetuity of religion when wrought in the heart by the power of the holy spirit? The earnestness of many of the anxious, was apparent, for after remaining in the Chapel until 11 o'clock at night, absorbed in penitential sorrow and prayer, when returned to their houses they would not retire to their beds, but continued wrestling and agonizing, Jacob-like, until near day dawn, when the daylight of heavenly grace shone upon their hearts.

Brother Abraham Hopper, steward, at Bethesda, has abundant cause of thankfulness for what the Lord has done for his family during the present revival, he has witnessed the conversion of three sons, one daughter, one son-in-law—two daughters-in-law, and a young man in his employ. The number that have enlisted in the cause of the Divine Redeemer, during the present revival, by uniting with the Methodist Pretestant Church is thirty-one. Some obtained peace of soul that were members of other churches—May heavens choisest blessings rest upon them all. I think it has been remarked by an experienced minister of the gospel, that every genuine revival of religion will raise up its quoto of minister to preach the gospel, we are not without hope that the revival now in successful progress, may be the Lord's way of preparing some young men for usefulness in the world and church, as conversion and piety must precede, any other call or qualification. May all parents, who have unconverted children, who may happen to cast their eyes over these lines, take renewed encouragement to pray for the salvation of their offspring. Yours, affectionately,

R. T. BOYD.

DILLSBOROUGH, IA. MAY 5, 1841.

Br. Springer: Through the medium of the Recorder, I wish to communicate to the friends of our Zion, our prospects on Tanners' creek circuit. Our second quarterly meeting for this circuit was held at Macedonia school house, commencing on the 27th of March. Though the weather was very unpropitious and surrounding circumstances unfavorable, yet a cloud of mercy hovered over us such as I have rarely witnessed. On Saturday evening the work commenced, while a herald of the cross was exhibiting the love of Christ, and the ineffable glory of that rest prepared for the people of God, sobs were heard in different parts of the congregation, and four came forward with penitential tears, gave us their hands as members of the church. At 11 o'clock on Sabbath, Br. T. Hicklin preached to a large attentive audience, and at four P. M. Br. Murry preached, and held a general class, in which our old-side friends, New Lights and Baptists, all cordially united. The hallowed flame began to burn upon the altar of our hearts, getting brighter and brighter, as the holy oil of God's grace was instilled into our souls, until a sacred atmosphere seemed to fill the house, which sinners could not withstand. An invitation for mourners being given, our seats were immediately crowded with persons inquiring the way to Zion; and e'er the meeting closed some half dozen mourners arose shouting the praises of a sin pardoning God. Our meeting continued on until Tuesday evening, then closed. Thirteen were added to the church.

On the 19th of April we commenced a protracted meeting at Dillsborough. We were kindly favored with the labors of Brs. B. Allen, Jones, Hicklin and Douthart. The great head of the church was with us of a truth. Some were happily converted to God, and thirteen added to the church, among whom was a class leader, exhorter and wife, and several private members, from the Methodist Episcopal Church, who came forward with certificates of their good standing and embraced the principles of reform and equal rights, making 26 members received in less than four weeks.

The car of reformation and equal rights is moving onward, and if true to our principles and faithful to God, brethren, our cause must and will succeed; and while the blood stained banner of our Immanuel shall be unfurled in every land and on every shore, civil and religious liberty will follow with all their happy influences, until truth shall supplant every error, tyranny and oppression shall cease; and mankind shall enjoy those inalienable rights guarantied to him by the God of nature.

Yours, in the bonds of a peaceful Gospel,

J. WHITE,
Tanners' Creek circuit.

BUFORD, O., MAY 5, 1841.

Br. Springer: I commenced my labors on Eagle Creek circuit the third Sabbath, in September. The first round I found myself situated between the horns of a dilema, but having become acquainted with human nature, I stuck down my stake and by the help of God I am going to it. When I became acquainted with matters and things, I could not but say to the brethren and sisters well done good and faithful, for coming through as it were the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds. I trust the motto of many on the circuit is onward. We have made some search to find the golden wedge which has long been in the camp, but we cannot find it. I hope it is lost never to be found.

The circuit is very large and my labors hard.—Tho' such is the fact I have lost but few appointments. I think I may say with safety, by the operation of the good spirit, much good has been done on Eagle Creek circuit. Upwards of 60 have joined the church this year, some of whom were fatherless and motherless in the Methodist Episcopal Church, some from the Baptists, and some prominent scions from the world.

Our first and second quarterly meetings are over and were attended with good; our third is to be held in Buford, Highland Co., O., on the last Saturday and Sabbath of May. R. T. Boyd, W. Hughey and R. Rose, and others, are invited to our assistance. Yours, &c., S. H. EVANS.

TIPPECANOE CO., IA., MAY 3, 1841.

Br. Springer: We closed our third quarterly meeting on yesterday evening. We have had a time of refreshment from the presence of the Lord. Br. Hanna is again in the field; good health has, through the blessing of God, been restored. He is now prepared to go through the District, and with the blessing of heaven he expects to meet all his appointments as published. We had his assistance; also, the assistance of Brs. Rains, Beal, Eleconhonts and J. Robinson. We believe there was great good done.

Our next quarterly meeting will be held at Logansport, on the last Saturday and Sabbath in August. We earnestly solicit the assistance of the brethren from a distance. This is an important point; the society is small but composed of choice materials. There is great need of a great work in this great city in the great valley of the west. I am your fellow laborer,

A. HOZEY.

ADIEU OF THE BROTHER BOUND WEST.

Farewell! farewell! the time has come
That I must seek the stranger's home:
In foreign lands, this home must be,
'Mid scenes of pleasure and gaiety,
Gay to the blithe the lightsome crowd;
That wander o'er Life's thorny road,
Regardless of the coming hour
When "time to them shall be no more."
No charms for me! no friendly hand
I grasp!—a stranger in a foreign land;
Where all is strange where e'er I roam,
Where nought seems like my happy home;
Yet which in absence seems doubly dear,
The remembrance of which exacts a tear:—
When adversity's fate around me lowers,
Then I think of my home, my own native bowers.

SILK.

Mt. Pleasant, O., March 16, 1841.

TO MR.———: Dear sir.—Mr. Gill has just handed me yours of the 10th, and I feel unspeakable pleasure in answering you. I am always willing and ready to give that information necessary to the advancement and final prosperity of the silk business in this country. After being engaged in the silk business for the last 40 years, in London, Economy, Pa., and Mt. Pleasant, in all its various branches, standings and bearings, I flatter myself my remarks may be taken as facts, founded on a long and chequering experience. After the pertinent and judicious remarks made by G. W. Gill upon silk raising, and published in the Western Farmer I should betray weakness were I to add any thing relative to that department. Still, as a pioneer in the silk business, I have many opponents to combat with, and much prejudice to remove, that stand as barriers to its more extended operations. Many good but mistaken gentlemen have said to me, "What is the use of raising silk in this country? we can never get it wove as in France and England." I would invite those gentlemen to come to Mt. Pleasant and see six looms in operation on plain silks, flowered silks, silk velvet, &c., &c. From this place I would entreat them to take a trip to George Rapp's establishment, Economy, Pa., where my son superintends, and behold what an eminence they have arrived at. Neither France nor England can surpass their machinary or silk fabrics. About four years back I put in action for them 2 looms, silk velvet and hat plush; now they have 6, and 18 months back there was not a loom in Mt. Pleasant, and now 6. Surely this must convince the most perverse and obstinate mind, of the practicability of weaving up our own raising. What has been done here and at Economy, can be done almost anywhere in the Union. We have lately purchased a considerable quantity of reeled silk from G. G. Stockly, Esq., Cleveland, Ohio; his production speaks volumes of praise upon his exertions. We have purchased considerable quantities from various parts but his exceeds all. For 30 years in England, I have had pass through my hands from 200 to 250 lbs. of silk weekly, (I appeal for the truth of this to Wm. Orange, Esq. Cincinnati) from a Bengal single, to a Piedmont; and I do not hesitate in giving the preference to the Cleveland produce. Upon the whole, from what we have raised ourselves and what we bought of others, I am constrained to give the decided preference to the American silk; and when the worms are fed upon the Italian or Multicaulis mulberries, the silk excels all I have seen from France, China, Italy or Piedmont, in scent and brilliancy. I am aware the loss of scent or fragrance in England, may be accounted for by the length of voyage and the silk oftentimes exposed to the saline air; but the brilliancy I believe is peculiar to America alone. This ought to be a great encouragement to those who have commenced, to presevere, and an inducement to others to begin, knowing ultimately it will be a source of wealth to this country; and if our State Legislatures will give the silk raisers their smiles and encouragement, and Congress will afford its parental protection, we have nought to fear from any foreign competitor, or competitors. Let them try their worst or do their best, they never can compete with us. I am happy to find you are about commencing this season; I wish you, sir, success and prosperity, and have no doubt of it; for success is sure, if conducted in a proper manner.

We purchase cocoons to any amount, provided the crysalis is killed by suffocation, either by camphor, carbonated gas from charcoal, or sulphur; the latter I prefer, as sulphur is congenial to silk, and it is done much quicker and cheaper,—great injury has been done to good cocoons by baking them and steaming; the former draws out the staple from the silk—the latter causes it to flake off when reeling. This ought to be universally known. Cocoons perforated by the miller, doubled and indented, are useless to us,—reeled silk we also buy; but the article we want for satins, velvet, &c., &c., must not exceed from 8 to 20 fibres. All our own silk we reel, we never suffer more than 6 to 8, for one thread: for this kind of silk we give the Phila. price—from $5 50 to $6 00 per lb, 16 oz.—Cocoons, as before named, $4 00 per bushel; if flossed, the measure struck off if not, piled up in the form of a cone, We have not yet concluded as respects having an agent in Cincinnati, but we think of increasing the number of looms we shall establish something of the kind you name. But this need not be any hindrance, as we are constantly receiving from all parts, cocoons packed in flower barrels, directed to John Bayne, Esq., Portland, near Warren, Jefferson Co., O., for G. W. Gill. Portland is on the river bank, 7 miles from Mt. Pleasant. Mr. Gill's wagons go to that place every day, and bring home what's there. When you first start, probably you may not be able to reel so fine as I have described. Should the silk be fuller, we will purchase it, say $4 50 to $5 50, as the silk may turn out,—we have no eggs to spare, as we intend this season to raise 2 million of worms—the single crop worm, will only produce 1 crop, but the two crop worms, 2 crops, probably 3; but the latter crop is not of much account.—I strongly recommend Dennis's Silk Manual to your notice; it is the most concise and judicious treatise I have seen: the price is 25 cts. We expect some on for sale shortly. The space for worms is entirely discretional, as some worms are much larger than others; but there is nothing lost by giving plenty of room: keep them clean, well ventilated, and never touch them with the hand if possible. I recommend the Berlington feeding frame above all others. Thus, sir, I have endeavored to answer your inquiries; any further information you need, dont be backward to write. I have upon the average 8 letters to answer every week, from Nashville to Maryland, Every state almost, seems alive to the silk business. Any remarks you may see calculated to encourage and stimulate or the whole if you please, is at your disposal to publish in the Western Farmer; my respects to those gentlemen, the Editors. Yours, JOHN FOX.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIANS.—It is known to many that this order of religious people do not take any part in the duties and priviliges of the civil government of this country, nor in England by either voting or holding office. We have made frequent inquiries as to the reasons, but had not the means of information at command until a friend put into our hands the following declarations of principles, on that subject. We give the article as a matter of information to our readers without passing any opinion as to the correctness of its doctrines. The members of this church, so far as we are acquainted with them, are an orderly and peaceable class of citizens, and the reasons of their political opinions should be heard. —ED. REC.

From the Reformed Presbyterian.

Declaration of the Principles of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod in Ireland, on the subject of Civil Government.

Adopted as an Overture, at its adjourned meeting, October 12th, 1837.

I. God, the Supreme Governor, the foundation of all authority and power, has declared His will, in the constitution of human nature, and clearly revealed it in the Scriptures, that mankind should voluntarily associate together, in civil society, for their mutual help and protection, in subserviency to godliness and honesty. Civil Society, which is thus an institution of God, is under law to Him, as are all the individuals of whom it is composed.—bound to observe the law of nature, or moral law, to form definite civil laws in accordance with it, and to commit the administration of these to qualified rulers, for the preservation of order, liberty, and religion. Civil Government is the moral ordinance of God, to promote His glory and man's welfare,—to be regulated by the moral law, and commanding obedience. for conscience's sake, only when erected and administered accordingly.

II. The law of nature, which defines the rights and duties of men, in their individual and collective capacities, is fully ascertained in the revealed moral law; and its re-publication in the Scriptures is accompanied with seals of its Divine authority, imposing an indispensable obligation upon the individuals and communities to whom it is made known, to acknowledge and obey it; while the Christian system does not affect this obligation, otherwise than more clearly to reveal, and more powerfully to enforce it. As the Scriptures reveal the will of God, in regard to civil government, which is an ordinance of the law of nature, it is the duty of all communities, enjoying Divine revelation, to frame their constitutions, and enact their laws, according to the certain moral dictates of this infallible standard; and to promote to legislative, judical and executive power, none but those who possess a due measure of the qualifications which it prescribes.

III. The Scriptures, moreover, declare, that Jesus Christ, as Mediator, is exalted to the highest dignity, and invested with universal authority, not only ruling in and over all the members of His mystical body, as their living Head and Lawgiver, but governing all creatures, without exception, and all their actions, for his own glory, and the salvation of His elect, as Head over all things to the Church; that He is King of kings and of nations, as well as King of saints; that men, in every possible relation and condition, are under obligation to subserve His gracious purposes, according to His law; and that all civil institutions are put under Him, who is Head of all principality and power. Civil rulers in a christian land, whether supreme or subordinate, whether in the legislative, judicial, or executive department, (or, which is the same thing, the nation, as such exercising its authority through them,)—should acknowledge the Divine origin and character of the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, the perpetual obligation of the moral law, and the universal Headship of Jesus Christ. They should recognize the word of God as the supreme standard of Government, submit to the sceptre of Emmanuel, and legislate and administer in subserviency to the interests of His kingdom, in order to secure the unity, liberty, peace, and comfort of the nation.

IV. The Civil Ruler is to regard the religion of Jesus Christ as the most powerful of those means by which good morals in general, genuine loyalty in particular, and individual and social welfare may be promoted: and he is also, to view the church of God, as having a legitimate and strong claim upon his official care and influence;—being under obligation to extend to it legal protection and support, preserving its liberties and powers, ordinances and laws, and providing, by scriptural means, for its purity and extension. Nor is he under less obligation to withhold legal protection, and all favor whatever from the mysteries of Paganism, the rites of Mohammed, the idolatry of Antichrist and every other system of false worship. As a minister of God for good, and as a nursing-father to the church, he is invested with authority, and it is his duty to ratify with civil sanctions, subordinate standards of Church-fellowship, that are agreeable to the Word of God, the distinct and independent jurisdiction of Church-officers, and their faithful administration, and in his own province to excite, encourage, and co-operate with them in theirs, for the attainment of ends common to both. He is, personally, to profess and exemplify Christianity, and officially to give his power and strength to the Prince of the kings of the earth.

V. It is, also, his province and duty to exercise his authority and influence in reforming the Church, when more or less corrupt, after the example of the godly princes of Judah, by removing all external impediments, and encouraging all lawful efforts toward reformation; by giving decided countenance to those who are zealous for the honor of God, and the church's purity; by interesting himself in the encouragement and support of a pious and faithful ministry; and by holding ineligible to places of power and trust, infidel, heretical, and immoral persons; and placing under civil restraints, and disabilities all who are, at once, the enemies of the religion, fundamental laws, and the libties of the commonwealth.

VI. Important as is the province of the Christian magistrate, or of the nation as such, in relation to the doctrines, ordinances, and laws of Jesus Christ,—no less important are the obligations which bind the members of the church to profess, support, and adorn the Gospel; and while nations, by their representatives, are voluntarily, wisely and liberally to apply the principle of a civil establishment of the true religion, and results highly advantageous may be anticipated from the operation of the principle of private Christian benevolence, on the part of a well-instructed and religious people.

VII. Notwithstanding what has been stated concerning the exercise of civil authority, in regard to ecclesiastical persons, and matters of religion, the civil ruler has no spiritual or ecclesiastical supremacy, relative to doctrine or worship, discipline or government; has no authority to administer any gospel ordinance or direct, or control its administration, and no power, whatever, over the officers, or private members of the Church, except in a civil respect, as they are his subjects. And as Christians are not to attempt effecting a moral change in the state of the nations with the sword, and are not to endeavor to promote reformation by any but the moral means competent to them; so civil rulers may not propagate the truth by carnal weapons, nor enforce religious uniformity by civil pains and penalties: nor are penal laws to be enacted and executed against any class of professors of religion, except as a necessary and just provision for the defence of true religion, and genuine liberty, for the protection of the rights of the Church of Christ, and the interests of a Christian or reformed state, from those whose creed and whose conduct are essentially hostile to both.

VIII. Scripturally qualified rulers do not bear the sword in vain, being not only for the praise of them that do well, but also for the punishment of evil doers.—They are authorized guardians of the first, as well as of the second table of the moral law, to sustain its authority and faithfully apply its precepts, in distinguishing what is morally right from what is morally wrong, chiefly in overt acts, which have immediate reference either to the Almighty Ruler, or to civil society. But they are not to regard the judicial code, contained in the Old Testament, as formerly binding them or their subjects; because some of its laws were exclusively adapted to the local circumstances and peculiar relations of the nation of Israel, and other sanctioned ceremonial institutions: and, consequently, those laws expired with such circumstances, relations, and institutions. Those judicial laws, however, which guarded the moral law, so far as they are essentially moral, proceed upon general equity, are susceptable of application to all nations, in all ages, being thus always necessary, proper, and advantageous, are obligatory and are to be wisely and faithfully administered.

IX. The obligation and warrant to restrain and punish gross breaches of the moral law, and the ends to be served thereby, are common to both tables, and are even more intimately connected with the first table, as it is the foundation of the second, and as morality and peace will not flourish where piety is not maintained. It is, therefore, the duty of the civil ruler to see that the violation of the moral law, in the open contempt of the being of God, in gross and public idolatry, in open profanation of the Sabbath, as by injustice, licentiousness, and violence, be duly restrained, as scandalizing to religion, and the Church of God, as hurtful to the peace and good order of society, and as provoking the displeasure and rebukes of the Almighty against the nation.

X. The law of nature binds the civil ruler to guard the honor of the Divine Being, and to check all open disregard of religious as well as moral obligation; and as a Christian magistrate, ruling over a nation that has embraced revealed religion, and embodied in its Constitution the laws of God, in both tables, as in duty bound, and solemnly dedicated itself to God, and engaged to maintain the doctrines and ordinances of Christianity,—he is further obliged, by the revealed will of God, his own religious profession, his solemn covenent and oath of office, to employ his power and influence, for the suppression of ungodliness and vice, and the advancement of truth, piety, and virtue.

XI. As the principles laid down are opposed to Erastian supremacy, they are also repugnant to sectarian license and Romish intolerance. Persecuting or intolerant principles ought to be utterly condemned; and for ourselves, our reforming fathers, and subordinate standards, are distinctly, solemnly, and indignantly disclaimed. True it is, that intolerance and sanguinary principles have been indiscriminately imputed to those who powerfully contended, and valiantly laid down their lives, for those very liberties which are abused to revile their memories. But all exercise of civil authority about religion are not to be condemned; just provision for the defence of the Protestant religion and liberty, especially in critical circumstances, and dangerous emergencies, must not be stigmatized as intolerance and persecution: nor are the standards to be left,—and no sincere adherent to them would leave them.—under a vague, injurious allegation, which every enemy may turn against them as it pleases him.

XII. Civil rulers, or nations as such, are to refrain from, and totally prevent persecution, which may consist in punishing persons whose guilt has not been proved, or in punishing the guilty with undue severity; but persecution chiefly consists in injuring men in their person, privileges, or character, for their adherence to the doctrines, ordinances, and commandments of God. The exclusion of men of evil principles from places of power and trust, is ordinarily all the length to which civil power should go; simple forbearance should be extended to such persons, who are otherwise inoffensive members of society, as also the protection of those rights common to men, while they do not, in the propagation of their principles, offend openly against the laws of God and of society, and thus threaten the subversion of the one or the other. The civil restraint of those who, in propagating their erroneous sentiments, openly transgress the law of God and the laws of society founded upon it, is not intolerance; the just authoritive restraint of an obstinate and contemptuous blasphemer, is not contrary to any right which conscience really possesses, or has derived from God; and it is an error to maintain that the repression of gross outward public acts of idolatry is persecution.

XIII. The rights of a good conscience are not to be confounded with the claims of an evil one; nor are the pleas of constituted authority, under pretence of liberty of conscience, and private judgment is to be admitted to the injury of any Divinely instituted and constituted the authority. To resist the lawful authority, under pretence of liberty of conscience, is to set the authority of God in opposition to itself. For all the rights of man are derived from God, are, of course, subject to his law, and are to be defined and regulated by it; and God does not and cannot give, nor is it competent to any power to impart and sanction a right which is in opposition to the Divine law. It is no more a man's right to worship an idol, or to blaspheme the name of God, than to kill or to steal, although he may judge it proper to do all these things.

XIV. Sentiments declared in opposition to the righteous terms on which a society is founded, it is well known, exclude from its privileges; and this principle admits of obvious application to the exercise of civil authority in restraining overt transgressions of the law of God. An open immorality in direct violation of the law of God, as embodied in the civil constitution, the magistrate may restrain or punish as a crime, not only for the sake of society, but on the ground of that subjection which civil society, as such owes to God. The honor of God and the good of society require that principles and practices should be restrained, which are injurious to society and subversive of it; and such are those principles which are plainly in opposition to the moral law, and subversive of the moral government of God. The interests of man, and the Divine glory, are essentially connected with one another; and the latter has, in all cases, a necessary precedency. Civil society owe it both to God and to itself, to define the rights of individuals, and of the community, in agreeableness to the Divine law, and to defend the rights of both from gross invasion, under whatever imposing pretence it may be made.

XV. Authoritative restraint of the open violation of the first, second, or any other commandment of God, is not persecution; for as no man has a right to violate the Divine law, no right is invaded; and there can be no valid objection to the Judge, who is first the Divine Lawgiver himself, and, secondly, the nation recognizing His law, embodying it in the civil constitution, and empowering the representatives to carry it into effect.

XVI. In parts of the world enjoying revelation, when a people, in framing their civil constitutions, and appointing their civil magistrates, overlook, reject, or relinquish the Scriptures, as the supreme standard, enact laws inimical to the kingdom of Christ, and favour the interests of Antichrist, the constitutions and authorities becoming thus immoral and antichristian, cannot be innocently recognized. In this case the Christian, having entered his protest, and continuing to testify against authority so constituted and administered, still regarding the ordinance of God, as it is delivered in the Scriptures, will conscientiously perform things moral and just; and promote the peace and good order of society. To imposts even of an oppressive nature, if not exacted expressly for an immoral purpose, nor required as a pledge of subjection to authority, Christians may submit for wrath's sake. But they cannot swear allegiance to, nor recognize as the moral ordinance of God for good, authority that is immoral and antichristian.

XVII. Christians living in peace, and in their private capacity, furthering the ends of civil government and good order, while they do not incorporate with the national society, and are submitting to certain disabilities and privations on this account, are nevertheless, entitled to protection in their lives, property, and liberty, having contributed their proportion of the common taxations. They may live within the limits of the soil, and enjoy the protection of strangers within the gates, without being incorporated with the national society, or involved in the guilt that may attach to its constitution or administration.

XVIII. The scripture doctrine of magistracy belongs to the Christian's daily duty, and is necessary to furnish the mind with proper principles and ends, in the discharge of it. It is intimately connected with the Divine glory, the administration of Messiah, the good of Zion and the happiness of man. Some parts of it, too, have to faithful martyrs been grounds of suffering, and have been sealed with their blood. In conclusion, it is not for any particular form, according to which civil government may be modelled, that we contend, but for the moral and Scriptural principles upon which it should be based.

Dreadful Calamity.—With painful emotions we record the bereavement of our friends, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Adams, of Wellington, in this county. On the 8th ultimo their two sons, the one of six and the other of three years, while at play in the barn, discovered a gun, which had been left there loaded. The elder of the two took and commenced snapping it in sport. While the younger child was within a foot of the muzzle, the gun was discharged. The charge entered the left cheek, throwing off the upper part of the head, blowing out the entire brain, and leaving the little boy, but a moment before the sprightly object of parental tenderness and affection, now a horribly mangled corpse.—Elyria (O.) Atlas.

The Londoners did not enjoy the luxury of a newspaper every day until the year 1709, in the reign of Queen Anne. One was then published, the title of which was the Daily Courant, which was issued every other day of the week but Sunday. At the time there were 17 others published thrice a week, and one twice. Among them were the British Appollo, the General Postscript, the London Gazette, the Postman, the City Intelligence, the Evening Post, &c.—London Times.

Fire.—There was another fire at New Orleans on the night of the 24th, in the Third Municipality, below the Pontchartrain Railroad, in the steam plasier, and planeing mill of Mr. Deponilly, corner of Mariguy and Urquhart streets. The building, its apparatus, and two frame dwellings were destroyed.

From the New Orleans Picayune of April 27th.

Accomplished Swindling—A large business on a small capital.—One of the most extraordinary cases of swindling—as ingenuous and daring as extraordinary—which has been for some time developing itself, is now creating great excitement in this community. The exploits of Stith, Hines and Kine are completely eclipsed, and the climax of rascality has been attained in the present instance—the particulars of which we give as follows:

Two men calling themselves Chambers and Mackey, were some months ago residing in this city. They had originally a capital of about $1,000, out of which they have managed to raise something more than $100,000 by means of swindling! One is said to be a native of New York and the other a Scotchman. Chambers appears to have been "head devil," and his cunning, cool impudence and knowldge of finances combined, stand unprecedented in the annals of crime. He was once arrested in Baltimore on behalf of the Charleston banks for frauds committed on them, and sent to the Penitentiary, where he served out his time.

While here Mackey kept an account with the City and Commercial Banks, depositing and drawing small sums frequently, and one occasion he overdrew at the City bank for $4000. After this he kept out of the way for several days, but he was finally arrested, when he said it was an unintentional mistake, refunded the money and had the matter hushed. From Mobile he corresponded with Mr. Hall, Cashier of the Commercial Bank, on the subjects of finance, exchanges, &c. From this bank he obtained two certificates of deposite—one for $60, the other for $1000 in specie. The $60 he raised to $1000, which was presented by a man in company with Mackey. The paying teller refused to pay it, saying it was not in the handwriting of the receiving teller, who, on being called, at first said it was not in his writing. Mackey laughing, said to him—"What, deny your own handwriting!—Don't remember having given me that certificate the day of its date?—Refer to your book." This was done, and the date, number and amount of the certificate were found to agree. The money was paid and nothing more then thought about it. The genuine certificate for $1000 was retained by the villain, and is supposed to have been altered to a much larger amount and sold.

Mackey afterwards got several other certificates from the same bank on specie deposites, which have all been altered, and the Cashier is already advised of seven which were negotiated by the bank. One for $13,000 was sold at Louisville; one for $13,000 at Cincinnati; one at Philadelphia for $21,000; and one at New York for $23,000, besides others not recollected.

The mail from New York on Saturday last brought to the address of a commercial house in this city, a certificate of deposite purporting to be No. 422, for $53,000 specie in the Commercial Bank which has been altered, probably, from $123, and sold to a broker in New York. This is the last which has been discovered, but it is probable many more will yet come to hand.

Pursuit has been made after the swindlers from Louisville, Cincinnati, Mobile, and this city. A young Scotchman who can identify them, was despatched from this city a week since for Canada, where is it thought they intend to go.

More Villainy.—The New Orleans Bee of the 26th ult says: During the last two days rumor has been rife respecting certain over drafts in the Louisiana State Bank. We have heard the sums variously stated from $80,000 to $100,000, but we have been unabled to obtain information of the exact amount. In connection with these overdrafts is the disappearance of one of the principal book-keepers of the institution; other individuals are implicated in this transaction. We trust that the Bank, for its interest as well as those of the stockholders, will not delay a prompt exposition of all the circumstances connected with the affair.

In alluding to the same subject the Bee of the next day adds: We are deeply pained to learn that two new examples of defalcation have been discovered in one of our banking institutions. The defaulters occupied the offices of book-keeper and receiving teller. The sums abstracted are said to reach $75,000. We understand they have left the city.

More of it.—The Charleston Courier of Monday last says, "A check of three hundred dollars on the Union Bank of this city, dated 16th January last, was received from Macon on Thursday last by an Exchange dealer, which proved to be a forgery. The check purports to be drawn by our Mayor, Jacob F. Mintzing, Esq., in favor of Charles Green or bearer. The rogue who sold the paper in Macon doubtless obtained a handsome premium for Charleston funds. Whether this forgery was perpetrated by one of the gang engaged in the recent stupendous frauds on the banks throughout the country, is as yet unknown, but it is fortunate that this small affair was promptly detected, as it will put these institutions, as well as individuals, on their guard, and prevent farther depredations of a similar character."

Unprecedent Villlainy.—Just before the cannon used at the Navy Yard, on Wednesday, were charged, they were examined by command of Commodore Stewart, and were found to contain grape shot. But for the Commodore's precaution, the result must have been dreadful.

Case of Alexander McLeod.—It having been announced that McLeod's case would come before the Supreme Court yesterday morning, the Court room was filled almost to suffocatien, with a dense crowd among whom were several ladies. McLeod was brought into Court at ten o'clock. He is a man apparently between forty and fifty years old, rather above the common stature, strongly built, with an ordinary cast of countenance, and has red or sandy colored whiskers and hair.

When the case was called on, his counsel, Mr. Spencer, informed the Court that it was intended to move for the prisoner's discharge from custody, on several grounds, one of the most prominent of which was, that if the prisoner had committed any offence at all, it was a public or national offence against the United States Government, the British Government having authorized the attack on the Caroline, as would be proved in the course of this inquiry.

The Court here interrupted Mr. Spencer, and said that should there be any dispute in relation to the proofs on the return of the hebeas corpus, or if it was likely that any investigation beyond the record should become necessity, it would perhaps be better to now make some disposition of the question, in order to give the parties time to make any further proof they may desire.

Mr. Hall, Attorney General, on the part of the people, said: The case had been presented on certain allegations to the prisoner, and he as counsel for the people demurred to these allegations, as not being sufficient to sustain the motion for his discharge.

Court.—Have you seen the allegations?

Mr. Hall.—Yes; they have been furnished to me, and on the part of the people we propose to demur to them.

Court.—The great importance of the question makes us incline to postpone it until Judge Bronson arrives here, and he will probably not come until next week.

Mr. Spencer.—It would be more convenient for me to have it set down for next Friday week.

Mr. Hall.—It will be perfectly convenient for the prosecuting officer to attend on Friday, and I have no objection to that day, if it will be convenient to the prisoner.

Court.—We shall therefore set it down for Friday of next week.

It was subsequently intimated to the Court that Friday was appointed as a day of general fasting.

The Court then set down the case for next Saturday week.

We have been informed on good authority, that McLeod has made an affidavit denying that he was at all concerned in the attack on the Caroline.

Judges Nelson and Cowen presided.—N. Y. Journ. of Com.

Speculations are rife touching "the President" steam-ship. Practical men do not seem to be of opinion that she is lost. Various rumors are afloat—one story is told to day, and another to-morrow, and both are of equal value. An investigation is now going on, at the British Consul's of the reports of the mariners, who, having lately arrived, say they saw a dismasted vessel, which they took to be a man-of-war, &c., &c. An account will probably be given in the large evening papers; we go to press too early. Whatever it may be, it can be worth very little and avail less. The next Boston steam packet, will, as we belive, set the whole matter at rest; and, as we prophecy, bring news of the safety of the ship.

Should she be lost, however, it will strike people in England as an ominous coincidence that her destruction might have occurred on the same day and hour with the death of the American President. N. Y. Sig., 11th inst.

The Steamer President.—In regard to this vessel all is, as yet, enshrouded in darkness, and we should be very careful in giving credence to any of the numerous reports reports in circulation concerning her. Hope clings to the last, and, for our own part, we will not despair of her safety until the next arrival from England informs us of her non-appearance at her destined port. She may have gone down amid the roar of the tempest and the heaving the billows, or she may have been destroyed by fire, and none left to tell the story of her fate; yet, we are not prepared to believe but what she, and the hundred souls she contained, are in safety.—Phil. Chron.

Mysterious Disappearance.—A young gentleman of Baltimore, of the name of George F. Downing, had been engaged to a young lady, the nuptial day had arrived, the guest and clergymen assembled at the appointed hour, but the bridegroom was not forthcoming, nor has he since been heard of. On searching his chamber at his boarding house, his wedding clothes were found undisturbed, but in one of his pockets was found a letter, the contents of which were to the effect that before it was opened he should be in eternity. He has hitherto borne a very respectable character.

Hotels Robbed—A villain at large—Beware of Him.—Within the past week the United States Hotel, Marshall House, and Sanderson's, have been extensively robbed. A number of the boarders and lodgers, both transient and permanent, have been heavy sufferers. Suspicion rests upon a certain individual who has been staying at all of the above houses, and left them. The villain, it appears, effected the robberies at late hours of the night by entering the sleeping rooms with false keys or picking the locks, generally singling out the chambers that contained strangers, and breaking open their trunks and rifling their pockets. The police, yesterday, were using every exertion to ferret out the supposed robber.—Philadel. Chron.

Steamer President.—The examination of Capt. Bowman, yesterday, before the British Consul did not elict anything very definite or important. It appears that he (the Captain) saw on the 28th March, in Lon. 30.55 Lat. 41.40 the hull of a large ship about ten miles to windward, of his own vessel; and that as the sea was running high, and the object discovered was dead to windward, he did not attempt to approach it. It appears, also, that Capt. Merry, one of the port-wardens, and Capt. Parkinson, master of a British vessel, both expressed the opinion that an attempt on the part of Capt. B. to reach the wreck would have been useless.—N. Y. Sig.

Our Relief Bill.—Some of the New York editors express the opinion that our Revenue and Relief Bill will have a very bad effect upon Pennsylvania credit and currency. Very likely. The measure will not bear examination. One of them remarks:—

"We glanced hastily at the bill, and the impression we received was that, on condition of paying the State debts, the banks are authorized to depreciate the circulation as much as the State stock is depreciated. Thus State bonds are now worth 81 per cent. in Philadelphia currency, or about 78 per cent. specie; if allowed to pay these bonds at par for their small notes, it seems to our vision an authorization of a discount in the currency of 23 per cent. below specie. This, if so, is certainly "a new way to pay old debts."—Bicknell.

The Malek Adhel.—This mysterious vessel is now in custody of the U.S. Marshal for Maryland, two informations having been filed against her by the District Attorney of the United States—one for piratical aggressions on the high seas, and the other on the ground of foreign ownership. Peter Harmony & Co., of this city, are said to be the true owners, and have engaged J. Meredith, Esq., as their counsel. The trial is to take place before the District Court at Baltimore, during the June term.—N. Y. Signal.

N. Y. Arrival of the Brandywine.—The U. S. Frigate Brandywine, Capt. Bolton, arrived at this port on Monday, thirty days from the coast of Gibraltar. It is said that this frigate returned to the United States in consequence of the threatening aspect of war with Great Britain, and in accordance with the advice of the American Minister at London —ib.

A man named Pike lately forged a check for $75 in the name of Samuel Painter, upon the Bank of Chester County, Pa.—After getting the check cashed by a merchant, Pike fled to Philadelphia, from which place he wrote to his wife, promising to meet her in a wood adjacent to his house. His wife, being unable to read, got a neighbor to peruse the letter, which gave information that led to his detection. He has since confessed to several forgeries passed upon other banks.

A New Trial Granted.—The Circuit Court at Washington, on Tuesday, gave a decision in the case of Stockton, Stokes and others, vs. Amos Kendall, it will be recollected that the jury, at a former term, had rendered a verdict for the plantiffs of damages to the amount of more than $12,000. A new trial was moved for, and the Court, after hearing the arguments, granted the motion.

Nose Making.—The rhinoplastic operation, or causing a new nose to grow in the place of one destroyed, was recently performed with entire success by Dr. Coleman, of Trenton, N. J. A triangular piece was cut from the forehead, and leaving it fast by a small breadth of skin at the top of the nose and twisting it round, brought it down upon the place which the nose formerly occupied, and fashioned into a very respectable nasal organ, which is daily growing more like the original.

The Ship Vancouver Burnt.—The Apalachicola Journal of the 24th ult. says: This fine ship, Capt. Riley, was burnt to the water's edge last night, while lying at the East Pass. She was freighted by Goldstein & Co., and was ready for sea, bound for Havre. Her cargo amounted to 1400 bales of Cotton. The vessel, with nearly all the cotton, was insured in the New York Mutual Safety Office.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SH
BRITANNIA.

TWELVE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The Steamship Britannia, Capt. Clela arrived at Boston on Thursday morning a o'clock, bringing important intelligence from rope. The affairs with the Chinese Governme the ministerial papers say, are adjusted. British squadron had reduced two of their fo and were carrying on hostilities with great tivity when the Chinese authorities propose cessation. The tea market had been very m depressed, and the London merchants had monstrated to Lord Palmerston against the t ty of Admiral Elliott.—Cotton remained ab the same. Flour dull. The money market variable. Stocks had rather improved.

Nothing had been heard of the steamship P ident, and the hope of her safety is nearly aba oned. The rate of insurance upon her is 80 cent.

CHINESE QUESTION SETTLED.

The following are the terms agreed upon the settlement of the Chinese question:

1. The cession of the Island and harbor Hongkong to the British Crown. All just charg and duties to the empire upon the comme carried on there, to be paid as if the trade we conducted at Whampoa.

2. An indemnity to the British Governme of six millions of dollars, one million payable once, and the remainder in equal annual inst ments, ending in 1846.

3. Direct official intercourse between the co tries upon an equal footing.

4. The trade of the port of Canton to be ope ed within ten days after the Chinese new ye and to be carried on at Whampoa till furth arrangements are practicable at the new sett ment.

Extracts from a private letter, dated London, April 19, 1841.

There is nothing very striking by this ship, European matters. You will see the Chi question looks like being early settled, and Jo Bull is evidently to have his own way. Trade reviving a little and money is getting plenty. The blackguardism in the papers here, about M Leod, has pretty much ceased. The Times to-day, however, rakes together a few of its ov readings to gulp down its vexation. I suppo all of you have been much annoyed at the ar cles which appeared on this question six wee ago: but the ferment was exclusively editori and confined to the Tories, whose hatred of publicanism drives them beyond decency, on occasions.

NOT QUITE FAIR.—A religious paper called the stern Recorder, has taken leave to 'record' in ages three columns of our editorial matter, the elements of agricultural science, without ng credit to us or any body else for it, leav- us to enjoy the cold consolation of knowing the editor considered the article worth ring. The omission may, however, possibly e been unintentional.

We apologize to the editor of the World for crediting him with the article alluded to, by rming him that we never suspected it to be torial matter. We would advise him, in fu- e, to get some of his more experienced neigh- s to show him how to fix his editorials so they be known, and he will then, no doubt, be ed his frequent complaints on this subject.— e does not want his sheep "stolen" he must k them.

BAPTISM.—A friend writes us from Indiana to uire if it would be in accordance with disci- e to admit a person from another church into ministry of our church, and place him on a uit, who boldly proclaimed his disbelief in other mode of baptism but that of immersion. e reply:

The discipline of the M. P. Church permits ry person to choose his own mode of baptism, . Of course it becomes the duty of superin- dents of circuits, in accordance with this pro- ion of the discipline, to administer it in any n, and to any subject that members may de- . And for the authorities to receive minis- s into the church and place them in charge of uits who will not agree to administer baptism "infants," or in any mode to adults, is a high ree of anarchy, though we are not informed t such is the case. But a person might received among the unstationed ministers, he might be placed under a superintendent a circuit, who could not conscientiously minister baptism by any other mode than im- rsion, and that to adults, provided he would t disturb the tranquility of the church with peculiar notions.

A friend writes to us that he objects to our rms which accepts of $2 in advance for one ar of our paper, but requires $3 after the year s closed. He thinks one dollar is too "much terest," &c. Well we are glad he has found t the way to avoid this exorbitant interest sending us the cash in advance. Upon the racity of an editor we would much rather have in advance than run the risk of $3 after the ar had transpired. If our brother was acquain- d with the nature of our business he certainly uld never think of raising such objections as is. Our dues lie scattered in small sums over elve or thirteen States, so that when it becomes cessary to employ an agent to collect them we ght to have it in our power to compel negligent dishonest men to pay some part of this expense, hich we could not, did our terms not provide it. Besides our paper at $3 is the cheapest per, to the reading community, of any in this ction, because there are few advertisements in , but nearly all reading matter, and much of at in small type.

We return the compliment, by inviting ur brother Weishampel, should he ever visit is country, to call at our rural retreat, and we ill take pleasure in extending to him the hos- talities of our humble domicil.

☞We give the following report of a case, from the Lebanon, Ohio, Star, of the 14th inst. which was recently decided before the Supreme Court of Warren;—Judges Hitchcock and Lane on the bench:

This case arose "out of the liberation of four colored persons in the possession of Bennet Rains, in the month of September, 1839, near Springborough. Some sixteen or eighteen individuals were indicted in this case, under the 'black act,' (so called) for aiding these blacks to escape from Bennet Rains, their alledged master, to whom, according to the averments in the indictment, the said black persons owed service, by the laws of Virginia. The indictment also contained two counts charging that the defendants unlawfully assembled themselves together with intent to commit several unlawful acts set forth in the indictment, and confined to assaults and batteries upon some members of Rains' family and tearing down a tent. On the trial, Rains' family failed to prove, that even according to the laws of Virginia said colored persons ever owed said Rains service, thus sweeping away all pretence of the charge under the black act. The State, however, claimed to hold the defendants responsible for a riot as charged as above specified —and on the trial it was proved that several of the defendants, in rescuing said colored persons from Rains, who it appears in evidence was going to Missouri, went into his tent, pulled up two or three tent pins, and forcibly took from the arms of one of Rains' children, a colored child which had been secreted from its mother, who was present and wished to leave Rains could she get her child. These were the facts substantially as they appeared in evidence.

"The prosecutor contended that whether these colored persons were or were not slaves by the laws of Virginia, no person had a right to interfere with them in Rains possession, without first obtaining a habeas corpus or other legal process and that any disturbance of Rains in their possession by three or more persons in a violent manner, would constitute a riot. On the other hand the counsel for the defendants claimed that as these colored persons were in the possession of Rains, who claimed them as his slaves and who was carrying them to a slave State, any person had a right to rescue them, using no more force than was necessary to effect that object—and that even if said colored persons had been slaves by the laws of Virginia, the very act of bringing them into this State, though only passing through it, made them free.

"The Court of Common Pleas, charged the jury that as there were no proof that these colored persons were slaves of Rains in Virginia, it was not necessary to decide on the question, whether, if they had been slaves, the bringing of them into this State would make them free.—But they also charged the jury, that as these colored persons were found in the family of Rains, no person had a right to interfere forcibly to rescue them from Rains' possession; if three or more of the defendants did so, they would be guilty of a riot—and that any act of force such as pulling up tent pins, or tearing away the colored child from the arms of Bennet Rains' daughter, for the purpose of rescuing said colored persons, were such violent and illegal acts as might properly constitute a riot. Under this charge some fourteen of the defendants were convicted of a riot and sentenced accordingly.

"Several exceptions were taken to the opinion of the court below, one of which was founded on the charge of the court that it made no difference whether said colored persons were or were not slaves in Virginia, as even if they were, and Rains was carrying them to Missouri, no person had a right to interfere forcibly to rescue them from his possession. A writ of error was obtained returnable to the late session of the Supreme Court. The judgment of the Court below was reversed, on a legal question arising on the indictment, and the court adverted to that part of the charge of the court below, last above stated, as excepted to. In relation to this point, the court expressed their unhesitating opinion that the bringing of slaves into this State even with the view of passing thro' it to settle in another slave State, of itself, made such colored persons free; and any claim of right, and attempt to carry them into a slave State, in order to retain them as slaves, was an offence against, or violation of, the laws of Ohio, (the law against kidnapping) which any citizen had a right to prevent even by such force as was necessary to rescue them from such illegal custody of any person in whose possession they might be found.

"The much vexed question, therefore, whether the owners of slaves in Virginia, or other slave States, can carry them through Ohio, in removing to another slave State has been settled in the negative, so far as the opinion of two of the Supreme Judges can settle any point."

EVANSBURGH, O., APRIL 27, 1841.

Br. Springer: I have not forgotten you yet, and therefore I think it is time for me to redeem my pledge. I promised you last year that I would obtain all the good subscribers that I could for your most excellent paper, and be responsible for the amount of the terms. I now send you the names of two who have joined the church at a recent protracted meeting. I am glad to have an opportunity to send the names of young converts for I know of no better way for them to become acquainted with the condition of the church, than to read your paper.

I have often thought that if all of your subscribers would use their influence to get subscribers that it would enable you to redeem your pledge, as you have stated that you could enlarge your paper without much expense, and if I mistake not, that you would as soon as a sufficient amount of patronage could be obtained to justify you in so doing. For my part I will endeavor to lend my feeble aid in the promotion of ecclesiastical knowledge, as there has been considerable objection against periodicals on the account of them being so small for the price.

A LAY MEMBER.

With regard to the enlargement of our paper; we had an eye to that when we established it, and procured a double Medium press and chases; so that all the expense that would be incurred to prepare our press for enlarging to that size, would be a new set of rules, which would be but trifling: then there would be an additional cost for paper, and composition. If all interested in the matter were actuated by the same spirit of our brother, above, we would soon be enabled to enlarge, at which event we should be much gratified; for, although, we do not wish to conceal the fact that we are fond of money, especially so much of it as would enable us to meet, promptly, all our immediate liabilities, yet, we would be still fonder of producing a crediablte paper. But if another paper, of similar character, is to be got up in this State, it is certain we shall not be able to enlarge if we are able to continue as we are.

As it respects the complaints that some papers are too small for the price, if the complainants understood the matter, they would be satisfied that many of these small papers have a less profit than most of the mammoth sheets. A statement of facts may set this subject in its proper light. We have four hands employed in our office, which would give 24 days work each week, only four of which is spent at the press, the balance in distributing, setting and correcting type.—We have taken four exchange papers from New York city, all we presume issued at the same office, and a principal part of the same matter is used in them all. They are issued on different days of the week; so soon as one is worked off, the matter is immediately transferred to the other, and thus the heavy expense of type setting is principally avoided. These large mammoth sheets from the eastern cities, are all issued from the offices of daily papers. The dailies are what support the offices, and the matter used in them is laid over for the weekly. But with us we use our matter but once.

LABORERS' ADVOCATE.—This work is "devoted to the investigation of first principles," by John White, of Columbus, O. We have received the first number, but have not had time for examination.

ADVOCATE OF LIBERTY, AND BELMONT HORTICULTURIST.—This is a double medium sheet folded into 16 pages, and will be issued monthly, at St. Clairsville, Ohio, by Jesse Maxon, at 1 dollar per annum in advance. The first number is before us and contains interesting matter.

The Alton Telegraph of the 8th inst. says a fire broke out in St. Louis on the previous Monday, which destroyed property to the amount of 75,000 dollars.

We regret that an interesting letter from I. C. Hunt, dated the 12th ult. has been permitted to lay on our table under the communications that have been accumulating upon it, which gives cheering religious intelligence from his circuit. It states that he and his agreeable colleague, commenced a protracted meeting at Middlebury, Logan county O., on the 2d ult. which lasted ten days. It ultimated in the conversion of a number, and the addition of 38 to the church, which gives the society in that place some 90 members. He relates the striking conversion of two Liberalists or Universalists at the above meeting. He also adds they have four newly organized classes to present to the next Quarterly Conference for admission to the circuit, and there has been an addition of 132 members to his charge since conference.

Not having noticed the omission of this letter, until our outer form was worked off, which contains the religious intelligence, we give the substance on the inside of our paper.

Towards the close of the day, a drove of 75 head of very good quantity was sold, out of the limits of the city, at 7,50 a 7,75, also taken by the city butchers.—Lyford.

MITCHELL.—Officer Bowyer who has had such a long chase after the ex-M. C., writes the following account of the arrest of that distinguished individual:

"MONTREAL, MAY 5, 1841.

"I have at length succeeded in capturing his Honor, after a pretty long chase, (about twenty-six hundred miles,) and I think this time I have waked up the right passenger. He had been concealed at Point-au-Tremble, about ten miles from here. On attempting to arrest him, he leaped from the garret window and ran to the St. Lawrence river. One of the officers called to him to stop or he would fire. He then threw into the current a package containing, as he says, 2,700 dollars, and told the officer to fire, as he was ready to die.

"A canoe was then shoved off to him by a companion before he could be prevented, but he got a nice flogging for his trouble. Mitchell got into the canoe and crossed to an island in the river, but was soon arrested there.

"I have taken every possible measure to recover the money, but can't say how it will turn out. I am now waiting the Governor's order for his removal.

"I think it will turn out that this Mitchell got Ward's doubloons, as he exactly answers the description which the boy gave.

"I wish you would let Mr. L. know that there was a man here who is supposed to have been concerned in the forgery. I know where he is now, but he will soon sail for England. He has a lady and boy with him. I am informed at the house where I put up, that he changed some Cincinnati money. He surely has been concerned in some roguery, or he would not come here to go England at this time of the year.

"Captain Comeau, of the Police, also suspected him, and called on him: but he suddenly started off after the Captain left. He is an Englishman. I received a letter this day from a gentleman who is watching his movements for me."

The foregoing suggestion, that Mitchell is the man who swindled John Ward & Co. out of the doubloons is new but perhaps not ill-founded.

It strikes us shat the publication of the two last paragraphs of Bowyer's letter was very injudicious—as it may prevent the arrest of the individual referred to, by notifying the world, himself and his friends included, that proceedings are likely to be instituted for that purpose; but as we find it published in the Journal of Commerce of this morning, we shall do no harm by republishing it.

Quere. What has become of Mitchell's "two contingent friends?"—N. Y. Signal.

THE CROPS.—As we anticipated, we learn that the raw and gusty weather, we reported last week, has done serious injury to the Sea Island crops, and re-planting has become very generally necessary. On John's Island, and near this way, where with a clay intermixture the soil is more tenacious, the injury has been less, and exposed points alone require planting over; but on the Islands farther south, about Beauford and between there and Savannah, where the soil is very light, the soil of entire fields took wing, the young cotton was swept from the ground, and there must be re-planting altogether.

From the show in the market, the cold spring does not seem to have put back our gardens and garden farms. Green peas and other early delicacies have been sold in quantity for a long time and are not now any rarity. The first crop of figs too has escaped—at least in sheltered spots. We observed some on the tree, the other day, about two-thirds grown, and beginning to put on the purple.—Charleston (S. C.) Mer., 7th inst.

ITEMS.

ALFRED H. DAVIS.—The case of this man was called up again before the Recorder on Tuesday afternoon, and postponed, owing to the Commonwealth not being prepared to go on.—Phil. Chron. 6th inst.

DR. ELDRIDGE.—This case was not progressed with yesterday. It was adjourned till Monday next.—ib.

THE LAUNCH OF THE MISSISSIPPI.—Precisely at twenty-two minutes to two o'clock, yesterday afternoon, the steam frigate Mississippi, glided into the Delaware, in the presence of thousands who had assembled to witness the scene.—ib.

STATISTICAL.—We have in the United States 88 colleges, 12 law schools, 96 medical seminaries, 20 divinity schools and more than 1000 classical academies.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, commences its annual session in the Seventh Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, on the 20th inst., at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

In the case of Shuster, indicted for killing his wife in Philadelphia, the jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree. The pretence of insanity was clearly disproved. It is said that counsel will immediately move for a new trial.

The story of several grape shot having been put in one of the cannon that was discharged on the day of the launch, in Philadelphia, has been contradicted. We are glad of it, for the honor of human nature.

FIRST ARRIVAL FROM SEA AT QUEBEC.—On the 29th of April, the ship Vere arrived at Quebec from Poule, and the next day the barque Great Britain from London. The captains of those vessels report they met large quantities of ice on the banks, and never saw the gulf so full of ice.

THE MURDER OF A CLERGYMAN.—It appears that the stone which killed the Rev. Mr. Griswold, in Cincinnati, was thrown at another person. It struck the clergymen accidentally and caused his death in a few moments.

ANTONIO OF THE AMISTAD.—A letter from Montreal, in the Emancipator, announces the safe arrival of Antonio, the quondam slave of Captain Ferrer, at that city, where he has found a protector and a home.

THE WEATHER.—The papers in all parts of the country come to us filled with complaints concerning the weather.

By a late decision of the Superior Court for Oglethorpe county, (Geo.) the testimony of several witnesses was declared to be inadmissible on the ground that they were Universalists, and supposed not to believe in a future rewards and punishments.—N. Y. Signal.

A lot of wheat from Pittsburgh recently arrived at Baltimore—transported on the Pennsylvania and Tide Water Canals.

DR. ELDRIDGE.—The trial of this individual was resumed in the Court of General Sessions yesterday morning. The counsel for the prosecution offered to prove that the father of the defendant formerly kept an oyster cellar in Second Street. The counsel for the defendant objected to this, and the Court overruled it.

A GREAT FRESHET.—We learn that immense damage has been sustained in Northern Mississippi by the heavy rains which have fallen there. All the low lands on the Yallobusha were entirely submerged, and at Columbus the river was about two miles wide. There had been no estimate of the extent of the losses sustained, but they were said to be very great on the plantations on that river and on all the other large water courses.

OFFICIAL.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE P. M. GENERAL.

Philo C. Fuller, of Michigan, to be Second Assistant Postmaster General.

John S. Skinner, of Maryland, to the Third Assistant Postmaster General.

David Agnew, to be Postmaster, at Wheeling, Virginia.

Two Houses were blown down at Povidence, R. I., on Monday last. No lives were lost.

EXAMINATION OF ALFRED H. DAVIS.—Yesterday afternoon a farther examination of Alfred H. Davis took place before the Recorder. Three witnesses were examined, after which the case was further postponed until Thursday.

MITCHELL THE FORGER.—This man has fled from Montreal. Two police officers from New York reached that city on the 2d instant. They searched every house where he was likely to be found.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—An elderly and very gentlemanly man from Kentucky, was knocked down and robbed, in one of the by-streets, in the upper part of New Orleans on Sunday, 25th ult., about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, by a couple of ruffians, who immediately took his wallet, containing some $150 in Kentucky money and gold, from his pantaloons pocket.

DROWNED— A sailor on board the steamship Natchez, lying at New Orleans, fell from the staging of the vessel and was drowned, on the 26th April. His name was Frederick Smith.

STEAM SHIP ASHORE.—A towboat arrived at New Orleans on Friday the 30th ult., from the S. W. Pass, reports the steamship Natchez ashore there. She was going out to sea at the time without a pilot. There is said to be no probability of her getting off without a strong breeze from the eastward.

A bill has passed the Pennsylvania Legislature authorizing any bank, under prescribed regulations, to reduce its capital stock.

PENNSYLVANIA.—The Relief Bill, which was passed by the Pennsylvania Legislature and vetoed by Gov. Porter, has been re-passed by the Legislature, two-thirds of each house voting in its favor, and is consequently now a law of the land.

LARGE REWARD.—An aggregate of over $20.000, is now offered for the detection of the assassins and incendiaries who perpetrated the recent diabolical murders and arson in St. Louis; $5000 are offered by the city and the remainder by various friends of the deceased young men.

NAVAL.—We understand that the Rev. Charles Henry Alden, of this city, has received the appointment of Chaplain in the Navy. Mr. Alden is a man highly esteemed by the community, and possesses a rich vigorous, and highly cultivated mind.—Phil. Chron.

FIRE AT ANTIETAM.—The Frederick, Md. Examiner says: A destructive fire occurred a few days ago at the Antietam Iron Works in Washington county, owned by John McPherson Brien. The nail factory and other property to a large amount were destroyed.

ARRESTED.—A man named Hammond was found murdered on the 14th ult. about one mile from Gordon's Ferry, on Flint River, Georgia. A New Yorker, named Bartlet W. Murdock, has been arrested as the murderer.

OHIO.—The debt of this State, according to the returns made, is thirteen millions of dollars.

ROBBERY.—A Mr. William Dean, a stranger in the city, was robbed while standing at the counter of the Philadelphia Bank, on Saturday, of $140 in money and $275 in promisory notes.

THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.—This Institution still flounders along without getting out of its difficulties, or rendering the prospect for the future in the slightest degree improved. The notes at the close of the week were at a depreciation of about 14 per cent.—Bick.

WESTERN FREIGHTS.—The rates of freights from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, are reduced on the following articles:—Flour to $1 25 per bbl: Cotton 56 1-4; Bacon, Butter, Lard, Pork, and Tobacco 61 1-2 per 100 pounds.—Bicknell.

MONEY MATTERS AT DETROIT.—The Detroit Advertiser says that "from present appearances we infer that there will be but comparatively little purchased east by merchants of Michigan, the present season. Our currency is in such a condition that they cannot raise available funds, at any price."

In alluding to the late destructive fire in Antigua, the New Haven Herald says, on the authority of recent letters, that a great portion of the business part of the town was destroyed—the damages estimated at between four and five thousand dollars, and adds, that the blacks were very troublesome, and pillaged a large amount of property.

BEEF.—A drove of cattle from York county, Pa., reached this city on Thursday last, and sold readily at $8 per hundred.—Phil. Chron.

DR. DYOTT.—This individual was arrested by the Sheriff, on civil processes, yesterday, and taken to the County prison, where he now remains. Unless the doctor now pays off all his liabilities, he is likely to remain in prison the whole of his life, for a person convicted of fraudulent insolvency is debarred taking the benefit of the insolvent laws.—Phil. Chron.

ANOTHER STEAMBOAT SUNK.—The steamboat Exchange was sunk in the Wabash river, a few days since, and the steamboat Gipsey on the lower rapids of the Mississippi.

MAIL ROBBER CAUGHT.—Barrington, who was connected with Holton in robbing the mail on board the packet boat last fall, was arrested by Fielding near Presque Isle, U. C., and brought to Rochester on Thursday. He was committed for trial.

ARRESTED.—The Montreal Transcript notices the arrest, by the Montreal Police, of seven individuals, being part of the celebrated gang of housebreakers that arrived last autumn from England, and has been carrying on most extensive depredations in the United States during the winter.

THE RECENT FORGERIES.—The late forgeries on the different Banks and brokers throughout the country were effected in the following manner: Four several amounts of money, between a hundred and twenty dollars each, were deposited in the Commercial Bank of New Orleans about the 20th of March, and four certificates of deposite received therefor, and then the figures and words were altered, and then put afloat.

A SCARCITY.—A Toronto paper of the 5th, in speaking of the weather, says that in some parts of the province, hay has sold as high as $24 per ton, and at the late fair at Galt, there were no buyers for cattle from the scarcity of provender.

STEAMER LOST.—The steamer Marmion, says the Arkansas Gazette, is sunk at Pecan Point on Red river, loaded with cotton—said to be a total loss.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

AN INQUIRY, &c.

A Statement of the Doctrine of an unoriginated, infinite and eternal Prescience, as it is currently and implicitly received by a very large proportion of the Christian World.

The doctrine of prescience, in all probability, has formed an integral part of every system of Pagan theology, and has been a prominent feature in almost every theological system in the world, except in that fair, and lovely, and rational system of salvation by Jesus Christ, which has been given to mankind by Divine authority. In every theological system, which has been formed on the principles of moral necessity, whether Pagan or professedly Christian, the doctrines of prescience and fate have been associated as cognate ideas, which have uniformly and of necessity produced each other.—Of the numerous corruptions and errors which have found their way into the christian churches, under the cover and protection of those mandatory versions of christian theology usually dignified by the appellation of creeds; the heathen doctrine of fate, and the popular cognomon of predestination, has been among the most notorious and most inimicable to the vital interests of the religion of Jesus Christ. It is a doctrine, which, if it were carried through a series of legitimate and fearless deductions, on to its worst and final conclusions, would involve the most impious and revolting libel that ever was published on the christian faith. Where the heathen doctrine of fate has been thus incorporated with a christian system under the more modern appellative of predestination, it has become thereby no less the cognate of prescience, than in its more ancient association; and in their Christian, as well as their Pagan connexion, they mutually and of necessity imply each other. Whether the doctrine of prescience was originally the parent of the doctrine of predestination, or predestination the parent of prescience, it is at the present time extremely difficult to say; and especially so, as they both belong to that prolific species of error, which has the power of reciprocal generation. A certain anticipation always implies a necessary issue, and an absolute and effectual purpose a certian anticipation; inasmuch as it is not possible for a certain prescience to be separated from a necessitating cause. In the days of Augustine the doctrine of prescience and the consequent doctrine of an unconditional predestination were introduced into the christian world; or if they were not propagated by him in the first instance, it was under his authority that they received the stamp and credit of orthodoxy, were adopted as articles of christian faith, were incorporated into the christian creed, and were introduced into theological writings, and were interwoven with christian systems.

Since the days of Augustus the doctrine of an eternal prescience has been generally and very naturally identified with that of unconditional predestination. But subsequently to the darkness of the middle ages of the christian church, and especially since the art of printing has been invented, and more particularly since the right and the competency of private judgment in the interpretation of the Scriptures, has been understood and acknowledged, many religious bodies have disclaimed their belief in the doctrine of predestination, as being incompatible with human responsibility, and the moral government of God. But at the same timeit must be acknowledged, that most of those religious communities which have renounced the doctrine of unconditional predestination, have continued, notwithstanding, to hold the doctrine of an eternal prescience; and this they have done, as I humbly conceive, not as a matter of rational or scriptural conviction, but purely from a pious and implicit credulity.—Whether the conduct of such persons in retaining the one, while they renounce the other, can be justified either by scripture or reason, will be made a subject of serious inquiry in the following pages; it being a subject that has the highest claims on a serious and patient investigation.

As the subject of prescience is one that is abstruse in its nature, and exceedingly important in its bearings and its consequences, we shall appropriate a single chapter at the commencement to a plain and deliberate statement of that doctrine, as received by its advocates, and as it is of necessity implied in the systems with which it has been generally associated.

The popular notion, and, indeed, the only systematized notion of the doctrine of prescience, is one that would imply an unoriginated, eternal and infallible anticipation of all things that ever have existed, that are at this moment in existence, or which ever will be in existence hereafter; a prescience that equally applies to all the past, and the present, and the future of an unoriginated and unlimited duration; and which embraces in its infinite scope every volition and every act of the Deity, and every production of His infinite fecundity, and every effort of His infinite perfections; and which alike encircles, in the unbounded range of its perception, every action and every volition, every vice and every virtue, every pain and every pleasure, every passion and every sensation and perception, of every individual creature which ever was in existence, and which is now in existence, and which ever will be in existence; whether that creature be human or angelic, rational or irrational, animate or inanimate, and whatever order, and to whatsoever species it may respectively belong.

The question at issue is not whether the Deity may not possibly anticipate many future events, even ages before they have any actual existence, because the possibility and even the fact of such cases are actually demonstrated, by the previous delivery and the subsequent fulfilment of scripture predictions; but the question is whether the prescience from whence those predictions emanated was eternal or recent, unoriginated or acquired, coeval or subsequent to the divine existence; and whether that prescience existed per se, or by consequence; and whether, as evidence it contains data a priori, or is only involved by deduction a posteriori.

The consequences which depend upon the foregoing alternatives are exceedingly numerous, and unspeakably important. If the prescience of God be eternal, then must His knowledge of every event be of the same date, and this knowledge of every gnat that shall ever dance in a summer's sun must be as early and eternal as the Divine existence. I will readily concede that it is not possible for an infinite intelligence to be unconscious of any thing which is in actual existence, or be unable to recognize at every point of duration, all which at that moment would be abstractly possible; but the notion of an eternal prescience would oblige me to believe that every species of knowledge in the Deity, whether it relate to abstract possibility or actual existence, to physical events or to moral conduct, to a state of probation or a state of retribution, to creatures now in existence, or to creatures not at present in existence, must be of the same date and duration, being absolutely eternal; and that the actual knowledge of the Deity is as incapable of augmentation as infinitude itself. I must also believe, that the total sum of the actual knowledge of the Deity, was of precisely the same amount before the heavens and the earth were created as it is at the present moment; and that it contained the same number of actual cognizances before the first created being received his existence, as it will ever contain, tho' myriads of worlds should be successively called into being, and though their existence should continue forever.

In receiving the doctrine of an unoriginated prescience, I am not to impute the cognizances of the Deity to any species of causation whatever, inasmuch as they must be absolutely unoriginated, and consequently without cause. I must believe that the knowledge of the Divine nature does not originate or depend upon that nature itself, and the knowledge of created things and of human events can have no necessary dependence or connexion with the things or events themselves, except in the certainty with which they succeed to that knowledge. I must believe that the knowledge is unoriginated and eternal, while the events themselves are subsequent and successive, in receiving the doctrine of an infinite and inaugmentable prescience, I must believe that although the acts of the Deity, and the existence and actions of created beings are subject to constant and perpetual accession, it is not possible for the knowledge of those things in the Deity to receive any accession in quantity world without end. I must believe that the actual knowledge of the Deity is not capable of being enriched by the addition of one single perception, either from His own future conduct or that of His creatures, either in the present world or in any future stage of an interminable duration of being. In receiving the doctrine of a certain prescience, I am to believe that the certainty of the Divine anticipations must always extend to every future act of His own through the endless duration of His interminable being, and equally so to all the volitions and actions of created beings, both mortal and immortal. I must not only believe in a certain prescience in relation to all physical events, and to all animal and vegetable, and mineral and elementary occurrences, but I must firmly believe in the certain prescience of all moral actions and mental contingencies, embracing all their evolutions and consequences world without end. And in particular, I must believe in the certain anticipation of the period and issue of human life in relation to all the descendants of Adam, and the whole of their future and eternal condition. In short, I must believe, that however contingent the actions of human beings and the issue of life may appear to be, or may be so in reality to us, they are all as certain as the throne of God in the anticipations of the Divine mind. The certain prescience of all certain events is what every person must believe who receives the doctrine of an infinite intelligence in the Deity; but the doctrine of an eternal prescience would imply that the Divine intelligence possesses the power of making contingencies to become certainties in perception; and the power of making those things to stand up altogether at one single moment as the objects of an actual and certain perception, which would require a boundless duration of being for their actual and real existence. I can readily receive the doctrine of prescience as a consequence, because I can easily perceive that if God has formed certain determinations, and has secured the issue by an effectual causation, the issue must become thereby an object of a certain prescience; but if I receive the doctrine of prescience per se, I must regard his prescience as being a cause, and not as being an effect or a consequence. I can receive the doctrine of prescience as being evidence a posteriori, because I can perceive that a certain anticipation must be supported by an effectual causation; but if I am to receive the doctrine of prescience as evidence a priori, I must believe that it will require no antecedent evidence in the support of its truth, and I must regard the doctrine of eternal prescience as being a self-evident truth, and one that will justify every legitimate inference which can be possibly deduced from the premises as from a demonstrable nature.

The foregoing statement is a mere outline and adumbration of the popular doctrine of an eternal presciene in the Deity; a doctrine which is most implicitly and devoutly believed by a large majority of the christian world. But whether such a doctrine has any solid foundation, either in human reason or in the oracles of Divine revelation, will be the subject of my next inquiry. IHON.

BEAUTY.

Beauty is what all admire. However the tastes of persons may differ in other respects all bow to the majesty of beauty. And what a vast scope does she have!—Her reign is more extensive than that of Napoleon or Alexander. They subdued the limbs, this enchains the heart. But Socrates says whenever I see a beautiful woman, I also expect to see her possess a beautiful soul. Beauty of person may be very desirable, but far, oh! far more desirable, is a beautiful mind. A mind well stored with useful knowledge, uncorrupted by vanity, unpracticed in deceit, a stranger to vice in all its forms,—charms like these, are, (in my opinion) worth seeking.

HORRORS OF WAR.

* * In the hospitals of Wilna, there were about seventeen thousand dead and dying, frozen and freezing.—The bodies of the former, broken up, served to stop the cavities in broken windows, floors and walls; but in one of the passages of the great Convent, above fifteen hundred bodies were piled up traversely, like pigs of lead or iron. When those who were finally removed on sledges to be buried, the most extraordinary figures were presented by the variety of their attitudes; for none seemed to have been frozen in a composed state: each was fixed in the last action of life—in the last direction given to the limbs, even the eyes retained the last expression either of anger, pain or entreaty. In the roads men were gathered round the burning ruins of cottages which a mad spirit of destruction had fired, picking and eating the burnt bodies of their fellow men; thousands of horses were moaning in agony, with their flesh mangled and hacked, to satisfy the cravings of a hunger that knew no pity. Such were some of the calamities which followed the retreat of the French army from Moscow.

TAXATION IN ENGLAND.—We can inform Brother Jonathan what are the inevitable consequences of being too fond of glory. Taxes upon every article which enters the mouth or covers the back, or is placed under the foot—taxes on every thing which is pleasant to see, hear, feel, smell or taste—taxes upon warmth, light and locomotion—taxes on every thing on earth, and in the waters under the earth—on every thing that comes from abroad, or is grown at home—taxes on the raw material, and on every fresh value that is added to it by the industry of man—taxes on the sauce which pampers man's appetite, and on the drug which restores him to health—on the ermine which decorates the judge, and the rope which hangs the criminal—on the poor man's salt and the rich man's spice; on the brass nails of the coffin, and the ribons of the bride; to bed or board, couchant or levant, we must pay. The school boy whips his taxed top—the beardless youth manages a taxed horse with a taxed bridle, on a taxed road—and the dying Englishman, pouring his medicine, which has paid seven per cent. into a silver spoon, which has paid fifteen per cent., flings himself back on a chintz bed, which has paid twenty-two per cent., and expires in the arms of a taxed apothecary, who has paid a license of £100 sterling for the privilege of practising his calling! His whole property is then taxed from two to ten per cent. and besides the probate, large fees are demanded for burying him in the channel, his virtues are handed down to posterity on taxed marble, and he is at length gathered to his fathers—to be taxed no more—English paper.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.—The New York Sun says that when the steamer Missouri was launched at the Navy Yard, Brooklyn, her draft of water was ascertained with the nicest degree of accuracy and duly recorded. Two days afterwards and before any article at all had been placed on board, it was noticed that she had sunk in the water two inches, or nearly that. On weighing the water, it was found to weigh one pound and two-thirds less than the water weighed from the same spot two days previously. This is only to be accounted for by the fact that the day after the steamer was launched, the Croton Water Works gave way sending into the Hudson River an immense body of fresh water, which of course found its way to this place, and two days afterwards was found to have caused this great difference in the weight of water, at a place where the tide ebbs and flows so near the sea. Although the relative weights and properties of fresh and salt water may be fully understood by all of our readers, yet there be many who would scarcely credit that an irruption of fresh water would make such a vast difference at such a distance as in the above case.

COLORED METHODIST CHURCH.—A large number of workmen are employed in taking down the wall of this church in Sixth street, and in clearing away the rubbish from the fallen buildings. It is supposed that one if not two bodies are still under the ruins. Fanny Thomas, the aged colored woman found in the ruins and carried to the hospital, still remains in a very precarious state. She has not spoken a word nor taken the slightest nourishment since she has been in the hospital. Very little hopes are entertained of her recovery.—Phil. paper.

IMPROVEMENTS.—There have been several new and magnificent steamboats placed on the Hudson river this season.—Some of them have four enormous smoke pipes each peering up from their decks, which give them a most formidable appearance when seen at a distance under weigh. Competition between them is carried to great extent again this year. The fare between New York and Albany, a distance of 150 miles, has been reduced to $1,00, at which price the boats are now running daily.

The completed State Works of Pennsylvania cost originally $20,158,791 64. Thus far they have yielded an aggregate revenue of $6,181,624 81, and have cost for repair, motive power, superintendence, &c., exclusive of interest, no less than $6,994,206 80, or half a million of dollars, more than their entire income!! They are horribly mismanaged.—N. Y. Signal.

ENLARGEMENT

OF THE

Saturday Evening Post.

THE PHILADELPHIA MAMMOTH.

A NEW volume of this well established and highly popular family newspaper, GREATLY IMPROVED and improved with entirely new type, commenced May 1st, 1841. The paper is printed in beautiful type, and has received the praise of many editors of taste, as "the handsomest family sheet in the Union." Our efforts have been directed to the combining of beauty and simplicity with utility and taste. The Post is printed on stout white paper, rendering it neat and durable for filing. It is issued at the old established rate of two dollars per annum CASH, or three dollars if not paid in advance, and may truly be said, now that it is enlarged, to be the

at the price it is sold. It has all the merits, and none of the defects of the large papers of the day, for while the earliest literary matter may be found in its columns, a judicious compilation of domestic and foreign news, with the usual variety of wit and sentiment, will render it a better family paper. The proprietors make no flourish of trumpets about the size and cheapness of the paper, or the firm basis upon which the "OLD POST" stands. It is not necessary. It has borne the battle and the breeze for the last TWENTY-ONE YEARS, and has held its position in the midst of tottering and crumbling rivals, and has faced and buried all kinds of opponents.

THE MODE OF CONDUCTING IT.

The proprietors having for a long time deprecated the floods of foreign literature, indiscriminately re-published in this country, have determined, without altogether neglecting this field, to select nothing but the choicest tales and sketches, from the English periodicals; and they have made arrangements by which they can furnish these to their subscribers in advance of every cotemporary. The editors will also keep an eye to the best American tales afloat, giving always the preference to the writers of their own country. We shall still continue the plan of giving original stories from popular American writers. The well known Author of "Cruizing in the Last War," opened the volume with the first of a new series of thrilling nautical tales. In addition to the old, a number of new Contributors will enrich its columns with choice and entertaining original articles. In order that the SATURDAY EVENING POST may maintain its high position, as the

FIRST FAMILY NEWSPAPER

in the United States, arrangements have been made for a regular supply of choice and entertaining

ORIGINAL TALES,

historical sketches, poetry, &c. We have been publishing for months past an unbroken series of choice original stories which have been procured at great cost, and have been widely copied and read. These we shall continue.

THE NEWS DEPARTMENT.

While it shall be the care of the proprietors to preserve for the paper, a high literary reputation, the great desideratum for a family newspaper, a carefully selected news department, shall not be made second in interest or importance. While every thing of note that is passing either in this country or in Europe shall be carefully collected or collated for our readers, a due regard shall be paid to the character of the matter. So that the paper may be with safety and propriety introduced and read in the family circle.

THE LADIES' DEPARTMENT

will still be preserved, shall be choice and select, and shall receive strict attention. It shall be the effort of the editors to embrace in this department such selections of the floating literature of the day, as may be in an especial manner suited to the instruction and amusement of the female sex, and to combine the fashionable with the truly useful and good.

Such things as may suit that important and large class of our subscribers,

THE FARMERS,

will not be overlooked. In order to gratify, as much as possible, the laudable desire of our readers, a portion of our attention will be devoted to the collection and diffusion of such news as may seem IMPORTANT TO AGRICULTURALISTS, and the population resident without the confines of our great cities. The state of the markets and the fluctuations in the prices, will be regularly and what is of more moment, correctly given.

We determined at the outset, that while the paper continued under our control, it should be

and that as news and literary journalists, we had nothing to do with the matter; this determination has been strictly and rigidly adhered to, and while we shall continue to give our readers such public documents as may be deemed of interest to all, and such a history of the progress of political events, as are strictly in keeping with our duty, and the character of our paper, we shall studiously and thoroughly avoid any contamination of partizan politics.

THE TERMS.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST will be furnished at the exceedingly low price of TWO DOLLARS per annum, invariably in advance. We will send a copy to any person who may wish to see a specimen, by giving notice, post paid.

INDUCEMENT TO CLUBS.

As friends and neighbors often wish to club together to facilitate remittances, we will send

3 copies for $5 in advance, post paid,
7 do. for $10 do. do.

NO NEW SUBSCRIBERS RECEIVED WITHOUT THE MONEY.

We have no desire to extend our list but with cash subscribers, and the paper is sufficiently established to enable us to exert compliance with this golden rule. The Post is made worth more than the money, and it must be paid by those who wish the paper.

To those who wish to subscribe, we would say, that the safest plan is to enclose the money in a letter and direct to us. Most postmasters will frank their letters if relating to nothing but the business of the office, and all postmasters who will be kind enough to do so, we shall be pleased to acknowledge as agents.

Editors who may wish to exchange, will please copy, and forward a number of their paper marked with ink, to this office, and their favor shall be promptly acknowledged without fraud or delay, as is but too often the case. Address,

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of

☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.—Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

CHEERFULNESS—CONTENTMENT.

"It is the great art of life to manage well
The restless mind. * * * *
Thou cheerfulness, by Heaven designed
To sway the movements of the mind,
Whatever fretful passion springs,
Whatever wayward fortune brings
To disarrange the power within
And strain the musical machine;
Thou goddess, thy attempting hand
Doth each discordant string command,
Refines the soft and swell the strong,
And, joining Nature's general song,
Through many a varying tone implores
The harmony of human souls."

There is one feeling more generally prevalent in human breast thananother,it is the feeling discontent—of restlessness—of dissatisfaction ourselves—with those around us, and with it, our condition and circumstances in life. careful observer knows and can testify to siduity with which this feeling—this invari- unhappifying feeling is cherished and culti- . The feeling is induced by ill-will, hatred, and malice, and must as certainly be pro- ve of misery, suffering and wretchedness, as effects are the results of causes—Reason, ophy, religion—the Bible, and our best in- , all forbid the cultivation of feelings of dis- nt and envy, yet how universally are those gs cherished. A palpable—an undeniable nce of the ignorance and infatuation of our erate race! Discontent once banished, and mmeasurably would the stock of human hap- s be increased. How immensely would the gation of enjoyment be swelled! Then would alley of our pilgrimage' bring forth richly and aiantly, flowers and fruits, transcendently tiful to the eye, and pleasant to the taste, ring delightful and happy,our journey to the a of rest, and to our Jerusalem home! Then nger would be seen,

'Malicious envy
ding upon a ravenous wolf, chewing tween his cankered teeth, a venemous toad.'

would our condition be aptly presented r mind as the 'blooming Rose of Sharon— as that rose—faded—dead.' 'Then as the riant, towering Cedar of Lebanon. Now as tunted, dwarfish cedar of the frozen regions.'

eerfulness and contentment are duties con- nt with every species of virtue and practice ligion, and are most explicitly and imperi- enjoined upon us by the sacred Scriptures. entment is an implicit praise and thanksgiv- o Providence,under all its dispensations. 'It kind of acquiesence in the state wherein we laced, and a secret approbation of the di- will in His conduct toward man.'

he Bible, our guide to peace, to happiness and ren, enjoins upon us, on almost every page duty of cheerfulness;of contentment. Having and raiment, let us be therewith content, is anguage of Holy Writ. Pharisaical hypoc- is sad and disfigures its face, that it may ap- unto men to fast; but saith the Holy one, is the fast which I have ordained, that ye un- the bands of wickedness that ye let the op- sed go free and that ye break every yoke. The rvance of this fast will produce cheerfulness contentment, gladness and joy—the obser- e of that sadness and sorrow.

ontentment guards against the follies and es into which the votaries of discontent are asily led. Having learned, in whatever sit- on we are placed to be therewith content, will not be liable to fall into improper practi- or nefarious schemes to increase our stock of dly goods. Contentment is the certain reme- nd preventive of sadness, gloom, and melan- y, and induces cheerfulness and other virtues christian duties, rendering our temporary , here not only tolerable, but pleasant, happy, agreeable, and prepares us for a proper, and enjoyment of the riches and blessings of our venly inheritance—of the felicities of the rit Land. S.

CIVIL LIBERTY.

Civil Liberty,says Archdeacon Paley,is the not ng restrained by any law but what conduces greater degree to the public welfare. To do t I will, is natural liberty—to do what I will sistently with the interest of the community which I belong is civil liberty. I might wish to in every instance just as I pleased, but I re- t that the rest of mankind might wish to do same, in which state of universal indepen- nce I should meet with so many checks and ob- icles to my own will, from the conflicting in- est of those around me, that, not only my ppiness, but even my liberty would be less, n in a community subject to the dominion of ral laws. Thus, we at once perceive that the sted liberty of a state of nature can exist only solitude.

With despots, and the enemies of freedom in neral, it is customary to represent the sover nty of the people as a license to anarchy and sorder. But the tracing up of civil power to is, its legitimate source, will not diminish our digations to obey, it only explains its reasons d settles it on clear and derterminate princi- es. It turns blind submission into rational edience,—tempers the passion for liberty, with e love of order, and places mankind in a happy edium between the extremes of anarchy on the e side, and oppression on the other.

The sovereignty of the people presuppose the tural equality of mankind; and as no one man s any natural or inherent right, to rule more an another,it necessarily follows that a claim to minion, wherever it is lodged, must be ulti- ately referred back to the explicit or implied nsent of the people. Whatever source of civil thority is assigned different from this will be und to resolve itself into mere force. But as the tural equality of one generation is the same ith that of another, the people have always the same right to new model their government and set aside their rulers,for civil rulers cannot be considered as having any claims that are co-extended with those of the people,nor as forming a party seperate from the state. They are appointed by the community to execute its will—not to oppose it; to manage the public,—not to pursue any private or particular interest by usurpation or embezzlement.

Are all the existing authorities of the state to lie then (it may be inquired) at the mercy of the populace, liable to be dissipated by the first breath of public discontent? By no means; they are to be respected and obeyed as interpreters of the public will. Till they are set aside by the unequivocal voice of the people, they are a law to every member of the community. To resist them is rebellion, and for any particular set of men to attempt their subversion, by force, is Mobocracy, which, like the fell Simoon of the desert carries death and desolation to every scene it visits. and is a most heinous crime against the embodied, and collective majesty of the state. But, though the existing authorities of the state are a law to every member of the community separately considered, yet, they cannot bind the community, itself, or prevent it whenever it shall think proper—from forming an entire new arrangement. A right, this, which no compact can alienate or diminish, and which has been exerted as often as a free government has been formed.

Mr. Hall, who has thrown a flood of light upon this department of inquiry, places among the prognostics of the destined triumph of Christianity, the extension of civil liberty, by which the present times are distinguished. The enjoyment of civil liberty is essential to the development of the noblest energies of the human mind. Deprived of this, nothing truly great can flourish in the moral world. There exists an indissoluble connection between the will and religious freedom of a nation, and every friend of religion must rejoice in the advancement of that liberal and enlightened policy under which alone it can expect to prosper. It is only under a few representative government that this can be expected. Never did religion prosper in the chilling pestiferous deadly atmosphere of despotism. It can only flourish in the sunshine of political freedom. Religion grows and blooms among the highest and most palmy branches of the tree of liberty, and ripens in luxuriance among its topmost boughs. It is by a favorable arrangement of political circumstances, that religion is most likely to be advanced. Not that we would advocate a religious establishment, for we long since coincided with the views of the late Dr. Coke, when he styled a national church "a bane to truth and holiness;" but we would wish to advocate the establishment of the genuine, and legitimate freedom, which is equally removed from the extremes of anarchy on the one side, and tyranny on the other. It is this that seems to be the genial climate of religion, and doubtless God will prepare His own way in this as in every other respect. Revolutionary commotions among the nations of the earth must still be expected; they who kill with the sword will perish by the sword—until the arrival of that happy period when liberty, civil and religious, shall be universally established. Until every valley shall be exalted, every mountain and hill brought low, the crooked rendered straight, the rough places plain, and all flesh shall see the glory of the Lord, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

For the Western Recorder.

Written by a youth on leaving and at the close of his school among his relatives.

The close of school and parting from friends, is a theme which fills my mind with very unpleasant feelings. Yes, the though that our school draws to a close, that we are about to part with friends, perhaps never more to meet in this probationary state, produces feelings of sorrow and anxiety. Oh, unhappy thought! Oh, sad reality! Would this were not the case! Yet it is even so! Yes we must soon part with a very worthy and attentive teacher, perhaps never more to meet.—Yet I humbly hope and trust it may not be. The fact that we must part is certain. But whether we meet again or not is uncertain. ONE only knows. We can but hope for the best. We must also soon part with school-mates, perhaps never to have the privilege of again attending school together. When such thoughts as these enter the mind we can but feel sorrowful. With joy we mediate the past yet recoil the anticipation of the future. It is very hard parting with friends, especially from those with whom we attend school. The teacher looks forward to the close of his school with sorrow. The scholar likewise is far from happy, from the thought that his school draws to a close. It is also hard, very hard, to to leave our friends and relatives for distant lands. Our hearts yearn with tender emotions at the parting scene. But although it be hard parting with friends during life's short journey, it is far more trying, to be separated from them by Death. The ties of nature are so strong, it seems as if we could not leave our friends. Yes that Unbounded Love which proceeds from the fountain of all good extending to the whole human family is so great, it seems that the Grim monster Death can hardly make a separation.—Yet such is the solemn fact! The sentence is past, all must die. And we are ready to exclaim in language liks this: How shocking, is thy summons. ("Oh Death.") Even Christ who triumphed over Death, Hell and the Grave, prayed that the cup might pass from him. We also see him at the death of Lazarus, weeping, and groaning, in spirit. But we mourn not without hope. We expect to meet our friends, in a future state of existence, where neither "Life nor Death, Principalities nor Powers, things present, or things to come, will be able to separate us from the love of God."

Br. Disciple: Your No. 5 has come to hand. Your 4th No. I have never seen, as the paper containing it has never reached me. This is my apology for not replying to it.

In your last I find two points which I understand as your strong ones: 1st, the case of Simon the sorcerer. 2d, the case of Cornelius. I have numbered them as they occur in the New Testament. I will now notice the case of Simon.—You say "a man may be believe and be baptised and after all he may miss the pardon of sin, as in the case of Simon; Acts 8th." Christ says he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved.—You say "he may miss it." So he may if Christ's word fails, not without. Where is the proof that it failed in Simon's case? We will now examine it as recorded in the 8th of Acts. It is said in the 12th verse that when they believed the preaching of Philip, &c., they were baptised both men and women, and in verse 13th we read, "then Simon himself believed also, and when he was baptised he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done." It appears that Simon believed as did the others, and was baptised as were the others. The next matter recorded is that Peter and John were sent from Jerusalem that they might lay their hands on those in Samaria who had believed and were baptised, that they might receive the Holy Ghost. In verse 17th we read, "then laid they their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost." Laid their hands on who? Why those who had believed and were baptised, and Simon was one of them. Now, Br. Disciple, separate Simon from the them if you can. But Simon afterwards offered Peter money, saying give me also this power, &c. Peter reproved him sharply, and with what did he charge him?, with wickedness—and in what did his wickedness consist? Why in one thought—see verse 22, and this is proof to Disciple that Simon's past sins were not pardoned, and consequently Christ's promise in this case has failed. Br. Disciple have you never had one wicked thought since you were pardoned? If so, your rule says you have "after all missed pardon." So if the Lord's plan failed in Simon's case, yours has failed in your case.—But if you will furnish me some testimony from the good book that Simon did not receive all that the rest did in Samaria I will yield.

We will now attend to the case of Cornelius as recorded in Acts 10th. You say his sins were pardoned before he was baptised. Well, let us hear the facts as recorded. In the beginning of his history we learn that an angel was sent to him, who informed him that his prayers and his alms had come up as a memorial before God, who also directed him to send to Jappa for Simon whose sirname is Peter, who should tell him what he ought to do, verse 6.—Words whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved,—Acts 11: 14. Peter, before he went to the Gentiles was careful to have some of his Jewish brethren to accompany him, see Acts 10: 23. We now have Peter standing before the Gentiles to tell them what they ought to do in order to salvation, and what word had Peter for them? Here him, verse 36,—The word which God sent unto the children of Israel preaching peace by Jesus Christ, (He is Lord of all.) Hold, Peter, says my Br. Disciple, you must not preach the same word to the Gentiles that you did to the Jews at the beginning. But Peter wont stop for you, by dear brother, for he received no other word to preach than that which began at Jerusalem. While Peter yet spake the Holy Ghost fell on them which heard the word. At this those Jews who came with Peter were astonished, for they heard them speak with tongues and magnify God.

We shall now inquire what the Holy Spirit was poured out upon the Gentiles for. You say it was to seal the work of pardon upon their hearts. How did you find this out? Will you point me to the text that will prove it? By turning to Acts 15: 8, you see what the Holy Spirit was poured out upon the Gentiles for. It was God bearing witness that He put no difference between the Jews and Gentiles. As we have already seen Peter was to tell Cornelius what he ought to do, and in telling him "what he ought to do" he was to "tell him the words by which he should be saved." You have Cornelius saved before Peter commanded him to do any thing. I will leave the reader to judge in the case. You conclude this is the case that should govern us in the proclamation and practice of the gospel. Now, Br. Disciple, have you ever witnessed such a case as the one recorded in the 10th of Acts? Indeed I know you have not. You have never seen the Spirit fall on persons while they were sitting under the sound of the gospel, and heard them speak with tongues. If not, if you believe the doctrine you have contended for, of course you have never baptised any one. I will now venture to say that you cannot find such a case as the above from the time of Cornelius down to the present time, if you can (from the book,) I will give it up. Will you rest the whole argument on the case of Simon and Cornelius? If you will it can soon be settled.

You say again, baptism is to connect us with the discipleship of Christ. Please tell me what relation a man holds to Christ who is not connected with His disciples?

I do not think that I shall notice any other matter until we settle(if we can) the case of Simon and Cornelius,and if you can make out from the good book that Cornelius was saved without the obedience of faith, and Simon could not be saved with it, I will have to yield, for I must bow to the word of the Lord.

For some time past I have not had an opportunity to get the Recorder but once a month, being absent—this is the cause of my delay.

Grace and peace be with you.

TIMOTHY.

"False one I love thee still," as the bald man said to his wig.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FORT WAYNE, IA., APRIL 28, 1841.

Br. Springer: Since my last communication 59 have been added to this mission. I have organized three new societies. Our societies grow not only in numbers but in grace.—The Lord is still with us, and will be with us to the end.

The last quarterly meeting, notwithstanding the rain and bad roads, was truly a blessed season. In our love feast the hearts of fathers and children, saints and sinners appeared tendered and melted down before the warming influences of the grace of God. The house was crowded. Most of those present could talk feelingly and experimentally of the redeeming goodness of God in their souls. One scarce had time to finish till another, anxiously waiting, would renew the theme and rejoice that it was his privilege to witness for Jesus the redeemer of souls. The child of twelve united with the hoary headed veteran of the cross of three score and ten, to tell that God is love, and that they had communion with God the Father of their spirits. Several prescious souls professed to find the pearl of great price. At a protracted meeting at Maumee we had a heavenly time, long and joyfully to be remembered by many.

At Eel river we had a solemn and profitable meeting of three days. Our communion was deeply impressive. Thirteen attended to the ordinance of baptism.

Through the province of God my lot has been cast among an agreeable, intelligent and liberal people,—a people who love the liberty of the gospel. My prayer is for the Lord to send prosperity.

Your fellow laborer in Christ,
LEWIS HICKLIN,
Conference Missionary.

RICHWOOD CT., IA., MAY 10, 1841.

Br. Springer: Though prospects were discouraging when I came to this circuit, at this time it appears to be prospering. The Lord is graciously reviving His work generally around it. Lukewarm professors are awakened to a sense of their duty, sinners are compelled, like the publican, to cry for mercy, while christians are constrained to praise God aloud for His goodness. Near 100 members have been received into the church this conference year.

Our third quarterly meeting will commence, June 5th, at Br. Lamb's,three miles west of New Castle, Henry county. We have held several protracted meetings which were attended with the presence and power of God. We shall end one this evening in Portland, a little village on the National Road. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us at this meeting. Three have been added to the church.

Yours, in the bonds of christian love,
SAMUEL FULTON.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

From the Youth's Companion.

A LITTLE BOY'S LETTER ANSWERED.

Mr. Willis,—I met with this in a French paper, published in the Canton of Vaud, in Switzerland, and it has been translated. It is too touching to be lost.

Yours, &c., C. S.

A little child from C——, in Germany, had just lost his father, and found himself left, by this sad event, without the means of continuing his education. He was particularly desirous of entering an institution, founded by the pious Christians, known under the name of Moravians; it was his mother's wish likewise. But without money, without friends, without protectors; poor and unknown, he had but little hope in the world. Fortunately for our young orphan, he had heard of "Him who is rich towards all who call upon Him;"—of that Friend of the unfortunate—that great and powerful Protector, who disposes of gold and silver, as he does of the heart, according to His good pleasure—of Jesus, who says, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The child trusted entirely on the word of this good Saviour; he believed in Him, and desired to petition Him. "But how shall I go to Jesus?" said our little orphan to himself. "I will write Him a letter, in which I will tell Him all." This he did in nearly these words:

"My dear Lord Jesus Christ:

"I have lost my father, and we are very poor; but thou hast said in thy word, that whatever we should ask of God in thy name, He will grant it to us. I believe what thou hast said, Lord Jesus.—Therefore, I pray thee, my God, in the name of Jesus, to furnish my mother with the means of placing me at the Moravian Institution. I should like so much to continue my education, I pray thee, good Jesus, to grant my request. I love thee already, but I will love thee still more,—give me likewise wisdom and all that is good. Adieu, &c."

The child folded the letter, and addressed it "To our Lord Jesus Christ in Heaven." Afterwards seriously, but with a heart full of hope, he carried it to the Post Office. The postmaster, on seeing the address, thought it must be the letter of some lunatic, and threw it aside. But after finishing his work, he took it up again, and attentively examining the writing, observed it was that of a child; he opened it, and was strongly affected by reading his infantile prayer, which he communicated to the Moravians of his acquaintance. The latter read the letter in a society of the brethren. The Baroness of Lippe, who was present, considered these circumstances as an appeal addressed to her by the Saviour. She took the young orphan under her protection, and placed him at the much desired institution. Thus the letter arrived at its destination and was answered.

"SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN TO COME UNTO ME."

Jesus, when He was upon this earth spent His whole time in doing good to those around him. But He did not forget little children. You know it is said they were brought to Him that He might bless them; and when the disciples rebuked those who brought them, He said, "Suffer little children,and forbid them not to come unto me." Why did He want children to come unto Him? He added, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven?"

Now, children, after such encouraging words from the lips of our Saviour, how can any of you think for a moment, of living without a change of heart and loving this Jesus? I believe these children were very young, for it says that when they were "brought" to Him, "He took them in His arms" and blessed them. I don't say that they come to Him. No doubt they were as young as any of the readers of the Cabinet, and if so, children why do you not go to Jesus? He wants you to come unto him. He loves little children, and there is great encouragement for you. How many persons are there in the Bible who loved the Lord when young? You have read of Abel, Joseph, Josiah, Samuel, Daniel, the three young persons who were thrown into the fiery furnace; John the Baptist, who was filled with the Holy Ghost from his earliest infancy; Timothy who knew the Scriptures from a child, and probably many more.

When Jesus the Saviour, says: "Suffer little children to come," it shows us clearly that there is no difficulty in the way but what you make yourself. Jesus is ready; he wants to bless you. Say children, don't you want to get to heaven when you die? Then give your heart to Jesus. "They that seek me early shall find me,"says the Bible. Seek Him now; pray to Him expecting He will answer your prayer. Stop doing those things that are wrong. Think of God's goodness, accept of His mercy, and try to love Him above every thing else. Believe in Jesus, that He died for your sins—that He has promised to save you.—Has He not promised,'he that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." You know this is true. Now believe Him. Take His word, and He will save you. Be so sorry for having sinned, that you will never do so again. This is the way to seek Him. Think about Jesus who came from a glorious heaven to die on the shameful cross, that He might open the way for you to escape from "everlasting contempt," and enjoy blessings which mortal eye hath not seen nor ear heard.—Read your Bible, and may God bless it to your salvation. SIMON.

THE PEASANT AND THE POET.—There is philosophy as well as poetry in the following beautiful lines of Cowper—when he compares the happier intelligence of a poor and aged female with that of Voltaire:

"She for her humble sphere by nature fit,
Of little understanding and no wit,
Just knows, and knows no more,her bible true,
A truth the brilliant Frenchman never knew;
And in that charter reads with sparkling eyes
Her title to a treasure in the skies.

"O happy peasant, O unhappy bard—
His the mere tinsel, her's the rich reward.
He praised perhaps for ages yet to come.
She never heard of half a mile from home;
He lost in errors his vain heart prefers,
She safe in the simplicity of hers."

THE VICKSBURGH DUEL.—Two indictments have been presented by the grand jury of Vicksburg, against Mr. Flagg and Dr. Hagan, the principals engaged in the rencounter of the 4th of March, one for a violation of a statute to prevent duelling, and the other for a fight with deadly weapons in a corporate town. Half a dozen indictments are said to be pending against Hagan for attempts at assassination and for similar outrages, a conviction on any one of which will afford him a cell in the new penitentiary of Mississippi half a year.

The Springfield Gazette says,that four hundred of the Irish laborers on the railroad in the towns of Chester,Midfield and vicinity, have pledged themselves against the use of intoxicating liquors.—The most happy results are already seen. Let the Irish but banish from their homes and festive meetings that curse and scourge, alcoholic liquors, and they will soon be known as one of the worthiest and happiest classes of the community.

GOOD MANAGEMENT.—The Newark Advertiser says that fifteen years ago a farm in western New York, of 400 acres exhausted by bad husbandry, was bought by a Scotch farmer for $4000. This farm has been so improved by good husbandry that the owner was last year offered for it $40,000. He refuses the offer on the ground that it had actually netted him the interest of over $60,000.

WONDERS OF GEOLOGY.—One of the most remarkable phenomenas displayed to us by the researches of the geologist, is the evidence of the existence, in primeval times, of animals and plants, analogies of which are rare or wanting on our lands, and in our seas. Among those tribes which have become all extinct, but which once presented numerous generic modifications of form and structure, the order of crinoid star fishes is the most prominent. Now scarcely a dozen kinds of these beautiful animals live in the seas of our globe, and individuals of these kinds are rarely met with; formerly, they were among the most numerous of the Ocean's inhabitants—so numerous that the remains of their skeletons constitute great tracts of dry land, as it now appears. For miles and miles we may walk over stony fragments of the crinoidæ; fragments which were once built up in animated forms, encased in living flesh, and obeying the will of creatures among the loveliest of the inhabitants of the Ocean. Even in their present disjointed and petrified state, they excite the admiration, not only of the naturalist, but of the common gazer; and the name of stony-lily, popularly applied to them, indicates a popular appreciation of their beauty. To the philosopher they have long been subjects of contemplation, as well as of admiration. In him they raise up a vision of an early world—a world the potentates of which were not men, but animals—or seas, on whose tranquil surfaces myriads of convulted nautili sported, and whose millions of lily-stars and nautili are almost gone; a few lovely stragglers of those once abounding tribes remain to evidence the wondrous forms and structure of their comrades.—Other beings, not less wonderful, and scarcely less graceful, have replaced them; while the seas in which they flourished have become lands, whereon man in his columned cathedrals and mazy palaces, emulates the beauty and symetry of their fluted stems and chambered shells. Forbis' Star Fishes.

ENGLAND AND TEXAS.—The London papers contain the treaty of commerce signed in that capitol on the 13th November last,between England and Texas. It is framed on the basis of strict reciprocity, but does not apply to the colonies. The conditions upon which Texas may trade with the colonies are to be regulated hereafter. Vessels wholly owned by citizens of Texas, and whereof the master and three-fourths of the marines,at least, are citizens of the Republic, are declared to be Texian vessels within the meaning of the treaty, although not built in that country. The treaty is to continue in force eight years, and farther, until the expiration of twelve months after one of the high contracting parties shall have notified to the other an intention to terminate its duration.

THE CURIOSI.—There is one sect in the religious world, which, although not mentioned in any book of denominations, or in any theological dictionary; which, although it has neither distinct creed nor separate temples, still it is entitled to specific notification; this sect I shall denominate Curiosi. Their identifying trait is a love of novelty. They may belong to any preacher, who for the time can interest them by something new; and they attach themselves to every congregation that has something going on out of the common way. Thus they are carried along the stream of profession, like ships and twigs that are floating near the edge of a river, they are intercepted by every weed, and whirled in every eddy.—Rev. J. A. James.

A YANKEE MINT.—A Massachusetts friend writes to the editor of the N. Y. Sun, that "there is in Connecticut a cent factory, where the real copper mint drops bearing the stamp of the United States, in exact imitation to the legal coin, are made and sold 105 for a dollar; andif desired, they will be casked up and delivered to any part of the Union, freight and casking free. Red backs taken for the same at par. He saw a keg of the article within the week past, and that they cannot be distinguished from the United States Coin. You are probably aware that the copper for 100 cts. costs but about 35 to 40 cents."

ANECDOTE.—A clergyman reading the funeral service, when he came to the words, "Forasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God to take unto himself a brother," &c., he forgot whether the deceased had been a man or a woman. Turning to one of the mourners, who happened to be a Hibernian he asked him, "Is this a brother or a sister?" "Neither one or the other," replied Pat, "it was only an acquaintance!"

CONSUMPTION OF COFFEE.—Fifty years ago, coffee was hardly known as an article of commerce in South America. Now Brazil alone produces the enormous quantity of 135,000,000 of pounds, or nearly one half of what annually finds its way into foreign markets, from all quarters of the globe.

Dean Swift says—"It is with little souled people as it is with narrow necked bottles, the less they have in the more noise they make in pouring out."

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... MAY 26, 1841.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: I have often desired to see some emarks in your paper respecting church government in the apostolic ages. I have no wish to make any invidious distinctions between any of the existing forms of ecclesiastical government, while I would seriously ask you, (and through you your correspondents,) a few plain questions on that subject. I would ask

1st. If the same objections may not be raised against the itinerating part of the policy of the M. P. Church, as against the same part of the policy of the M. E. Church?

2d. Whether those passages in Acts xiv. 21—23: xv. 22, 23: xx. 28, do not give us a clearer precedent for a settled stationary ministry, than for an itinerating one?

3d. If they do, should we not infer that a congregational form of government was the one preferred by the immediate successors of the apostles?

4th. May we not infer that a stationed ministry occupied the seven churches of Asia, to whom as angels of the churches, John the Revelator wrote?

5th. Is the case paraliel between the moral state of the enlightened part of the world now, and the moral state of the enlightened part of the world in the days of the apostles?

6th. If not, can there be any argument in favor of a travelling ministry drawn from such a parallel?

7th. Does the argument drawn from the necessity of the case, (in reference to support and obtaining congregations, &c.) have weight enough to make a travelling ministry necessary?

8th. Is the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," to be taken in the same sense now as in the days of those to whom it was first given?

9th. Ought not every congregation to have some power over their pastors?

10th. Ought the legislative, judicial and executive powers be lodged in the same hands?

11th. Ought not these powers be so divided as to place no more than one in the same hands?

12th. Can there not be a stationed ministry in the general, with power to send one (or more) of their number as an evangelist to travel and preach, after having obtained the consent of the churches?

There might be many more questions asked, but I forbear for the present. Some of the above may perhaps be irrevelent, and some may express the same or similar ideas twice, but I wished to make them as plain as possible. You will please therefore answer those which may be worth answering, and in so doing you will oblige

TITUS.

Zanesville, Ohio, April, 1841.

We have deferred this article in order to seek an opportunity to make some reflections thereon, but such are our pressing duties that we cannot find time to make but a remark or two. We say:

1. We admit the congregational mode of church government is scriptural, because it recognizes the rights of the laity or the whole church; but it does not follow from this admission that the government of the M. P. Church is unscriptural, for it recognizes the same rights. Scripture, as we understand it, like the charter of our civil liberties, gives us but the elements, or first principles of government, and leaves the detail, (just as we should suppose a wise being would dispose of the matter,) to be carried out, to meet the varied circumstances of general society. To suppose that the head of the church would give a detailed form of government, and require it be carried into operation under all circumstances, without variation, would be a very different principle of action from the one adopted by him who "became all things to all men." Look at the condition to this sparcely populated country; if there were none but the congregational mode of government adopted in the church, thousands, in the west, would be left without the benefits of the gospel, because of their poverty and scattered condition. But the itinerate mode of operation is peculiarly suited to this condition of the community, by supplying every neighborhood which is willing to receive the ministers of Christ. And we see nothing in the scriptures to prevent the Congregationalist, or any other church from adopting the itinerant plan of spreading the gospel, provided the church, including the laity, were agreed. God himself, seems to recognize the right of the people to govern by whatever mode they think proper; when a nation once saw cause to bestow, on one man, kingly power, He did not control, but simply advised them. See 1 Psalm. 8. chap.

2. As it respects the interrogatory, "whither the same objections may not be raised against the itinerating part of the polity of the M. P. church as against the same part of the polity of the M. E. Church,"—we reply in yankee style, by proposing another question; suppose two nations were governed each by a King; that one of these Sovereigns had usurped the throne, and governed with despotic sway,—and that the other was elevated by the voice of the people, and could be returned into their hands whenever they willed it, could we republicans see no difference in these supposed cases? Just as much difference, then, is there between the polities of the two Methodist Churches, or the power which wields their itinerant operations. In the M. E. Church the clergy claim to be the "divinely authorized expounders" of God's law and deny to the laity any part in the government of the churches, whereas in the M. P. Church, the rights of the laity are admitted, and they participate in the government of the church.

3. "Titus" has not confided to us his proper name,—a requisition which we make of all who write communications for our paper. If he should see cause to continue his favors it is expected he will comply with this prudential rule.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.—The Legislature of New York have passed the appropriation Bill by an overwhelming majority. The bill appropriates $2,150,000 for the Erie Canal Enlargement. $300,000 for the Black River Canal, and $540,000 for the Genesee Valley Canal—total. $3,000,000. The vote for the passage of the bill stood 97, and against it 33.

SUSPICIOUS.—The body of a man was recently discovered floating in the Mississippi, opposite N. Orleans. Upon examination of the body, several wounds were observed, as if inflicted with a sharp instrument.

Much solicitude is felt in Washington and the neighboring cities, for the fate of the Rev. Mr. Cookman, a learned and eloquent Clergyman of the Methodist church who was a passenger in the President. For two or three sessions he has been Chaplain to the Senate, and was highly respected and beloved by a large circle of friends, as well as by the Members of Congress. He has left behind him a wife, and a large family of young children, whose situation will be truly deplorable, should he be lost. Mr. Cookman's object in visiting England, was to see an aged parent. On the Sabbath before he left us, he preached a most impressive sermon in the Representative's Hall, and took an affecting farewell of those for whom he had so long been accustomed to minister at the Capitol. The House was crowded in every part, and never did I see an assembly more deeply touched than by his chaste and pathetic eloquence. The prayers of thousand followed him on his voyage; and his numerous devoted friends and admirers here cling to the slightest circumstance that affords them any hope for his safety.—Wash. Cor. N. Y. Sig.

We find the following in the Commercial of last evening. How it is "the most conclusive that the Editors of that paper have seen," or how it is in any degree conclusive, we do not discover:

THE PRESIDENT.—The most conclusive evidence or intimation that we have yet seen, as to the fate of the steamship President, is contained in the following extract from the log-book of the packet Utica, which we find in the Newark Daily Advertiser:

"Ship Utica, from Havre toward N. York,} "March 15 or 16, (date obscure.) }

"10 30 A. M., fresh breezes from N. W., passed the wreck of a vessel's mast, spars and yards, (or mast and yards, for the word spars appears to have been partly erased,) with sails attached thereto, the mast-heads and yards being painted black. Supposed them to have belonged to an English vessel dismasted in the gale of the 12th, being in the same latitude and longitude in which the Utica lost many sails. C. D. CONN, Mate.

"Lat 46 30 N., long. 41 35 W."

The gentleman who furnished the extract says—"The latitude and longitude give the position of the Utica on the 12th. Capt. Pell remarked at the time he passed the wreck that it did not appear to belong to an ordinary merchantman, having considerable chain work about the spars. The wreck was passed so near that they were obliged to luff to prevent the copper of the Utica being scratched. I may add that Capt. Pell, before leaving port, entertained serious apprehensions that the wreck was a portion of the steamship President."

In continuation of the same subject, we copy the following from the Baltimore Patriot; simply remarking that, in our judgment, neither the extract from the log-book nor the Southampton letter should be regarded as throwing any light on the question of the President's fate.

STEAM SHIP PRESIDENT.—"We have information which leads us to hope that the steamship President is safe, having gone into Madeira. A letter has been received by Mr. Howell, of Cumberland, Md., whose father was on board the President, from a relation of his who resides at Southampton, England, stating the fact of the arrival of the steamship at Medeira, and detailing how the news reached him.

"Mrs. Power, the wife of Mr. Tyrone Power, the actor, who was a passenger, had agents stationed at points where information of the steamship would likely be received, and from one of those agents she received by express, a letter on the 19th ult., in which it was stated that a vessel had just arrived there from Madeira, which reported that as she was leaving the latter port the President was going in, and spoke her.

"This letter was received by Mrs. Power on the 19th ult., and being read by the relation of Mr. Howell, who was present at the moment it was received, he immediately sat down and wrote the letter, referred to in the above. He despatched it by the post, and it reached the steamship Britannia in time to be brought on by that vessel, which left England on the 20th ult."

There is a reason to hope that the next English steamer may bring further accounts; but we probably shall know nothing definite before such arrival.

THE STEAMER PRESIDENT.—The conjectures in regard to the fate of this boat are many, but as yet we feel confident that she is safe. Little stress should be laid upon the assertions of such as know nothing of ships and their management when at sea. Capt. Roberts is too old a sailor, and too familiar with duty, to allow any vessel under his command to be placed in situations where she would be injured by ice, which, as croakers say, has caused her destruction. Any one that has been on the ocean wave in high latitudes, is aware that the vicinity of an ice berg is made apparent, when a bright "look-out" is kept on board the vessel, for they can be seen in the darkest night, when miles distant, and the change of temperature is sure to warn the watch of their proximity. The crew of the President were under strict man-of-war discipline, and of course, would not be found sleeping at their stations. That she and those who sailed in her are safe, we confidently believe, although some accident may have occured, for we know that many a vessel which has been dismasted and otherwise injured by a heavy gale of wind, has drifted for weeks ere relief was offered.

This continual harping, by some of the press, on the subject of her fate—this conjuring up of stories, which have no foundation in fact—this blending of fiction and imagination, serve, it is true to make a paragraph, but they are a discredit to those who use such base means to enlarge the already extravagant morbid taste of the public, and which cause the friends and relations of those who were embarked to alternate between fear and hope. We should, all of us, wait patiently until the arrival of the Caledonia, and then we shall be better prepared to judge.—Phil. Chron.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Herald.

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 8, 1841.

Terrific explosion of Fort Moultrie—forty lives lost. Forgery.

DEAR SIR:

I have but now returned from the town of Moultriville, Sullivan Island, where I was witness to one of the most terrific disasters that has ever occurred in this State. Fort Moultrie—of glorious memory—now lies a heap of ruins. The magazine was undergoing some necessary repairs, and by some means, now unaccountable, fire and powder came in contact, and the entire structure, with seven buildings in the vicinity, were torn to atoms by the explosion of some three hundred barrels of powder. At the time of the explosion, there were several workmen and some soldiers in or near the magazine, and about forty persons in the Fort. The number of lives has not yet been ascertained. The accident occurred about eleven o'clock this morning.

A check on the Charleston Bank purporting to have been drawn by Heyden, Dregg & Co., of this city, for $3,100, by a young man known here, was paid. To day the forgery was detected, but the money was in hand, and the rogue off.

GREAT FORTUNES OF THE WOOD CUTTER'S WIFE.—"Some years ago," says a foreign journal, "the captain of a corsair carried off the wife of a poor wood cutter, residing in the neighborhood of Messina. After detaining her for several months on board his vessel, he landed her on an Island in the South seas, wholly regardless of what might befal her. It happened that the woman was presented to the savage monarch of the island, who became enamored of her. He made her his wife, placed her on the throne, and at his death left her the sovereignty of his dominions. By a European vessel, which recently touched at the island, the poor wood cutter has received intelligence of his wife. She sent him presents of such vast value that he will probably be one of the wealthiest private individuals in Sicily, until it shall please her majesty, his august spouse, to summon him to her court."

CAUSE OF DEATH.—Dr. Shattuck, of Boston, has published some statements showing the average mortality, at different periods of life, among the population in that city. The least mortality recorded in any one year, was in 1827, being 939, 1 in 63, or 1.57 per cent. The greatest mortality was in 1821, 1321—1 in 35, or 2.85 per cent. From 1821, to 1830, the average annual deaths were 1147—being 1 in 49 or 2.05 per cent. From 1831 to 1839 the number was 1552, being 1 in 46, or 2.14 per cent., showing a small increase in the force of mortality.

The proportion of deaths among infants is very great. It is a melancholy fact, says Dr. Shattuck, and one which should arrest the attention of all, that 43 pr cent. or nearly one half of the deaths which have taken place in Boston, during the last 9 years, are of persons under 5 years of age; and the proportional mortality of this age has been increasing.

THE MOON.—A Dublin correspondent of an English paper gives the following observations of Dr. Robinson, of Armagh on the appearance of the moon, as seen through Lord Oxmentown's immense telescope:

"The sharpness of the rocks and peaks in the moon is quite surprising: and this fact alone would show that air and water are absent." He also states "that no volcanic action is now at work in the moon, nor has been since the invention of telescopes. One of its mountains is nearly 17,000 feet above the plain from which it rises. Generally, however, they are about 5,000 feet."

THE FORGERY.—The Nashville Banner in speaking of the forged notes, which were discounted at the Bank of Tennessee says: The number of notes, we understand to be fourteen hundred, amounting in all to $6.900. They principally purport to have been drawn and endorsed by citizens (fictious) of Wilson and Rutherford counties, and were accompanied by recommendations, also forged, from gentlemen, directors, residing in those counties, pronouncing them good. We understand this morning that a portion of them was traced to a citizen of Rutherford co., who has been arrested.—Phil. Chron.

A CHINESE MAP OF THE WORLD.—A tolerable idea of the advanced state of Chinese geography, may be gathered from a glance at a map of the world produced by them. It is two feet wide by three and a half high, and is almost covered with China! In the left hand corner, at the top, is a sea three inches square, in which are delineated, as islands, and of a very small size, Europe, England, France, Holland, Portugal, and Africa! Holland is as large as all the rests, and Africa is not as big as the top of one's little finger. The northern frontier is Russia, very large. How it must astonish the Celestials to find that they are obliged to bow to the power of one of these small islands.
